The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

DRAINAGE OF INDIAN ALLOTMENTS—VETO MESSAGES.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill (H. R. 517) amending an act to provide for drainage of Indian allotments of the Five Civilized Tribes, approved March 27, 1914 (38 Stats., 310, Public, No. 77), with his objections thereto, the House proceeded in pursuance of the Constitution to reconsider the same; and

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the veto message be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. In connection with the veto message, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the letter of the Secretary of the Interior recommending the passage of the bill, in order to show that the committee acted upon the report of the Secretary of the Interior.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior reports favorably upon the measure, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 5, 1920.

MY DEAR MR. SNYDER: I am in receipt of your request of February 7, 1920, for a report on H. R. 517, introduced in the House of Representatives on May 19, 1919, by Mr. MCKEOWN of Oklahoma, entitled "A bill amending an act to provide for drainage of Indian allotments of the Five Civilized Tribes, approved March 27, 1914 (38 Stat., 310, Public No. 77.)"

A comparison of H. R. 517 with the act of Congress approved March 27, 1914 (38 Stat. L., 310), which it proposes to amend, shows that the only difference between the two bills is to be found in line 25, page 2, of H. R. 517, which provides that in any event such assessment on any Indian allotment shall not exceed "$25 per acre" instead of "$15 per acre," as provided in the act of March 27, 1914, the existing law.

I assume that the increase in the assessment of $10 per acre over the existing law is justified on account of the increased cost of labor and material.

Inasmuch as the laws of Oklahoma provide for the creation of drainage districts for the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands, which will prove a benefit to lands included within the drainage districts, and inasmuch as the Indian allottee is protected from any such assessment "unless the Indian allottee affected, or his legal guardian, shall consent thereto," the imposition of the assessment is not made arbitrary.

If the Indian allottee affected, or his legal guardian, shall consent thereto, it is proposed to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to pay the Indian allottee's taxes for drainage purposes from the funds or moneys arising from any source under his control, or under the control of the United States to the credit of the Indian.

I offer no objection to the bill if Congress sees fit to increase the assessment from $15 to $25 per acre.

Cordially, yours,

ALEXANDER VOGELSANG,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. H. P. SNYDER,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MUNICIPAL COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business 421, being House bill 10074. It is a bill which has passed the House of Representatives, proposing to amend the municipal court act of the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to that, Mr. President. I wish to examine the bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will not object to the consideration of the bill. The bill has received the unanimous approval of the Judiciary Committee. After hearing all of the judges of both courts, we agreed on amendments which are satisfactory. I should like to have the bill considered and passed.

Mr. OVERMAN. The bill has been amended, as I understand?

Mr. KELLOGG. The bill has been amended, and I will state what the amendments are.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I trust the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand amendments have been made to the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The amendments have all been agreed upon by the interested parties.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10074) to enlarge the jurisdiction of the municipal court of the District of Columbia, and to regulate appeals from the judgments of said court, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was, in section 1, on page 1, line 7, to strike out the words "and cost," the first words in the line, and in line 9, after the word "in," to strike out the word "action" and insert "actions," so as to read:

That the municipal court of the District of Columbia shall have exclusive jurisdiction in the following cases of all claims and demands in which the value of the personal property claimed or the debt or damages claimed, exclusive of interest, does not exceed $2,000, namely, in the classes of cases over which the court had jurisdiction immediately prior to the passage of this act, and in actions for the recovery of damages for assault, assault and battery, slander.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk, which has been agreed to by the Subcommittee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, it is proposed to strike out lines 4, 5, 6, and 7, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

have exclusive jurisdiction in the following civil cases in which the claimed value of personal property or the debt or damages claimed, exclusive of interest and costs, does not exceed $1,000, namely, in the classes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. On behalf of the committee I offer another amendment striking out section 12 and inserting a new section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On pages 6, 7, and 8, it is proposed to strike out all of section 12, as follows:

SEC. 12. That no appeal shall hereafter lie from the Municipal Court to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Any party aggrieved by any final judgment in an action to recover possession of real property, or by any final order or judgment of said Municipal Court where the amount or value involved, exclusive of interest and costs, exceeds the sum of $100, or by any interlocutory order whereby the possession of property is changed or affected, such as orders dissolving writs of attachment and the like, provided the amount or value involved exceeds the sum aforesaid, may appeal therefrom to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. If the amount or value involved does not exceed, exclusive of interests and costs, the sum of $100 the Court of Appeals may allow a special appeal, whenever it is made to appear to said court, upon petition, that it will be in the interest of justice to allow an appeal. The time for and manner of taking, perfecting, and prosecuting appeals, and substituting parties, shall be the same as now obtaining, or as hereafter modified, for appeals from the Supreme Court of said District to said Court of Appeals. No appeal by the defendant in an action for the recovery of possession of real property shall operate as a stay of execution or supersedeas, unless within six days, exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays, after the judgment, the appellant shall file in the clerk's office of the municipal court a bond with surety or sureties, to be approved by the said court or a judge thereof, conditioned to abide by and pay the judgment rendered by the municipal court, if it shall be affirmed, together with the costs of the appeal, and to pay all intervening damages to the leased property and compensation for the use and occupation thereof from the date of the judgment appealed from to the date of its affirmance. The penal sum of said bond shall be fixed by the municipal court or a judge thereof.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 12. That hereafter no appeal shall lie from the Municipal Court to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. If in any case in the municipal court an exception is taken by any party to any ruling or instruction of the court on matter of law the exception shall be reduced to writing and stated in a bill of exceptions with so much of the evidence as may be material to the question or questions raised, and such bill of exceptions shall be settled and signed by the judge within such time as may be prescribed by the rules of said court. Any party aggrieved by any final judgment of said court may seek a review thereof by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia by petition under oath setting forth concisely but clearly and distinctly the nature of the proceeding in said court, the trial and judgment therein and the particular ruling or instruction upon matter of law to which exception has been taken, said petition to be presented to any justice of the court of appeals within 10 days after the entry of such judgment and with such notice to the opposite party as may be required by rules of said court of appeals. If the justice shall be of opinion that such judgment ought to be reviewed a writ of error shall be issued from the court of appeals to the municipal court which shall send to the court of appeals, within such time as may be prescribed by that court, a transcript of the record in the case sought to be reviewed; and the court of appeals shall review said record and affirm, reverse, or modify the judgment in accordance with law. Execution of such judgment shall be stayed if the party seeking the review shall within 20 days after the entry of the judgment file in the clerk's office of the municipal court an undertaking with surety and penal amount approved by a judge of the court, to abide by and pay the judgment and the costs of the review if such judgment shall not be reversed; and, when the defendant in an action to recover possession of real estate seeks such review, the undertaking shall also provide for the payment of all intervening damages to the property sought to be recovered and compensation for its use and occupation from the date of the judgment to the date of the satisfaction thereof if the judgment is not reversed; and in all such undertakings the principal and surety shall submit to the jurisdiction of the municipal court and consent to the entry of judgment against them in that court in respect of their undertaking.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota whether the amendment just agreed to was printed as it was ultimately agreed upon?

Mr. KELLOGG. It was.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next committee amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In section 1, page 2, line 9, after the word "act," it is proposed to strike out "and the actions included by this act" and to insert "and also the actions pending in the supreme court over which the municipal court would have jurisdiction if brought under the provisions of this act and which may be," so as to read:

Said municipal court shall also have jurisdiction of civil causes now pending in the supreme court which are of the classes and amounts over which the municipal court had jurisdiction immediately prior to the passage of this act, and also the actions pending in the supreme court over which the municipal court would have jurisdiction if brought under the provisions of this act and which may be transferred to it for trial and disposition by order of said supreme court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 3, line 20, before the words "supreme court," to insert the word "said," and in the same line, before the word "shall," to strike out "of said District," so as to read:

At least 10 days before the term of service of jurors shall begin, the clerk of the said supreme court shall certify to the said municipal court, for service as jurors for the then ensuing term, the names of not to exceed 36 persons, drawn as directed by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 5, before the word "certificate," to strike out "such" and insert "a"; in the same line, after the word "certificate," to insert "to that effect"; and in line 7, after the word "Columbia," to strike out "the justices of," so as to make the clause read:

Whenever the judges of the municipal court shall certify in writing that the business of said court requires the services of additional jurors and shall file a certificate to that effect in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, said supreme court shall direct the clerk of the said supreme court to certify to said municipal court for service as jurors for the then ensuing terms the names of such number of other persons as may be necessary for such service, which names shall be drawn as directed by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 4, line 13, before the word "demand," to insert the word "shall," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That if neither party shall demand a trial by jury, or if the value in controversy shall not exceed $20, the case may be tried and determined by any judge of the court, and his finding upon the facts, which may be either general or special, shall have the same effect as a verdict of a jury, with the same right of either party to take an exception to any ruling of the court, and have the same embodied in a bill of exceptions, as in case of a jury trial.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 5, line 23, after the word "shall," to strike out "be in force" and to insert "apply to attachment proceedings," so as to make the clause read:

The provisions of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia relating to attachments shall apply to attachment proceedings in said municipal court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, page 6, line 5, after the word "require," to strike out the remainder of the section, as follows:

Said municipal court shall have power to appoint one additional assistant clerk, to be known as jury clerk, at an annual salary of $1,200, payable in monthly installments; and the said clerk shall note the attendance of each juror, administer oaths when required, and perform such other duties as the trial judge shall direct.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. That the marshal of the United States in and for the District of Columbia shall designate two of his deputies to take charge of the jurors in the municipal court, under the direction of the trial judge, and they shall perform such other services as the judge may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 15, page 8, line 13, after the words "Supreme Court," to insert "of the District of Columbia," so as to read:

SEC. 15. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to deprive the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia or the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia from reviewing and finally determining such cases as may be pending on appeal or certiorari at the time that this act goes into effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 1, to strike out the numerals "1917" and insert "1919," so as to read:

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to supersede or modify any of the provisions of Public resolution No. 31, Sixty-fifth Congress, entitled "Joint resolution to prevent rent profiteering in the District of Columbia," approved May 31, 1918, nor of any provisions of Public law No. 63, approved October 22, 1919, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel,'" approved August 10, 1917.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

TUNGSTEN ORES.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Order of Business No. 441, being House bill 4437. This bill passed the House of Representatives some time ago; it has been carefully considered by the Committee on Finance of the Senate and has been on the calendar for a long time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4437) to provide revenue for the Government and to promote the production of tungsten ores and manufactures thereof in the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, but I shall have something to say upon it before it is finally voted on.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it can not be acted on to-night, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. HENDERSON. How long does the Senator from Colorado desire to speak on the bill? Perhaps in a few minutes we could reach a vote.

Mr. THOMAS. I will try to get through by the 5th of March.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, was objection made to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understood there was objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understood.

Mr. HENDERSON. Who objected?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Nevada that I objected to the bill because I knew it could not be passed to-night.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL POWER ACT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Calendar No. 627, being the bill (S. 4554) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a Federal power commission; to provide for the improvement of navigation; the development of water power; the use of the public lands in relation thereto; and to repeal section 18 of the river and harbor appropriation act, approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1920.

This bill, which relates to the national parks, has been heretofore brought up once or twice. It is a bill that was prepared pursuant to an agreement which the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and I had with the Secretary of the Interior in order that the water power bill might be signed. I have a number of amendments which I propose to offer to the bill, which I think will remove most of the objections to it. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has been opposed to it heretofore, but I understand he will not oppose its consideration at this time, although the Senator may desire to say a few words about it.

Mr. BORAH. I do not desire to object to its consideration, but I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Washington if this is the bill against which many protests have been received from various quarters?

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is the bill in connection with which no doubt the Senator from Missouri has been bombarded with letters and telegrams and petitions and that sort of thing.

Mr. SPENCER. I object to the consideration of the bill; I desire to look into it further.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

WENDELL PHILLIPS LODGE.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9794) for the relief of Wendell Phillips Lodge, No. 365, Knights of Pythias.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $381.65 which was paid by the Wendell Phillips Lodge for the body of an ambulance which under the law the Federal Government could not accept.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there appears to be no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. CALDER. The Senate committee filed no report with the bill, although there was a report filed by the House committee which considered and acted upon the bill. The facts are that the Knights of Pythias Lodge tendered to the War Department an ambulance, which, at first, the department accepted. The ambulance cost something in the neighborhood of $1,800. Subsequently, the War Department refused to accept the ambulance, and so notified the lodge. They then canceled their order with the manufacturer; but it appears that the manufacturer had already shipped to the War Department the chassis for the ambulance, which cost something like $381.

Subsequently, this lodge gave another automobile to the Red Cross. I see from the report that the Chief of the Motor Transport Service recommends that the $381 be repaid to this lodge.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9794) for the relief of Wendell Phillips Lodge, No. 365, Knights of Pythias. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $381.65 which was paid by the Wendell Phillips Lodge for the body of an ambulance which under the law the Federal Government could not accept.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STANDARD WEIGHTS AND MEASURES FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BALL. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of House bill 8067, to establish standard weights and measures for the District of Columbia; to define the duties of the superintendent of weights, measures, and markets of the District of Columbia; and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to ask the Senator if this is a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. BALL. It is.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. From what committee does it come?

Mr. BALL. The Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Was there a quorum there when the bill was reported?

Mr. BALL. It has been reported so long that I really could not say at present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is a pretty long bill to take up at this time of night.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I will state that this bill was referred to a subcommittee, and was given very careful consideration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator says it was given very careful consideration?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It was.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, has the bill been read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a bill 24 pages long.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It seems to me that a bill of that length, and a matter of such importance, should hardly be taken up at this time of night.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I can state the main features of the bill. It is a bill to fix definitely the manner of the sale of produce, coal, and ice in the District of Columbia. It fixes the size of a loaf of bread. At present no definite size is prescribed for a loaf of bread. This bill makes it either a pound or a half-pound. It compels those articles that can be sold by weight to be sold by weight. It provides for the sale of small amounts of coal. It makes provision for no new appointees, and no increase of salary. The present laws were passed at different times, and it is very difficult to have any definite knowledge of the laws governing the sale of these materials in the District of Columbia. This is really a compilation of the laws, and fixes definitely the size of the containers, and prescribes how the articles referred to shall be sold.

That is really about the extent of the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, does the bill change in any important respect the practice in the sale of goods?

Mr. BALL. No; it does not, except that it fixes definitely the size of the loaf of bread.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Was there anything controversial about it? Were there hearings?

Mr. BALL. No; I think not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Was there any opposition or advocacy on the part of any classes?

Mr. BALL. I think not. The Senator from Washington is familiar with the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. My recollection is that the bill was referred to a subcommittee, and I know I asked that action upon it be delayed until I got information from the people out in my State with reference to the measurements of boxes, and so forth, and looked into it very carefully, and we had no objection to it, and thought it was very necessary.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Was the introduction of this bill the result of any demand on the part of the people of the District? Was that the origin of it? Why was this change proposed? What was the genesis of it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. My recollection is that the bill was framed largely as the result of the investigation of the special committee into food conditions, and so forth, here in the District. I think the Senator from Delaware can answer the question more certainly than I can.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, the real cause of the starting of the investigation was the increase in the price of the loaf of bread and the reduction in its size. Senators will remember that it was brought out in that investigation that there was no fixed size.

That probably was the origin of the bill. Then we found that bread was not the only thing sold practically by guesswork, without any fixed weight or any fixed manner of selling.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Does this bill provide any extra machinery for the enforcement of the law?

Mr. BALL. None whatever. It changes the title, probably, of the sealer of weights and measures. I do not know whether that was his title before or not.

Mr. THOMAS. This bill is confined to the District of Columbia, is it not?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Is the bill confined entirely to the District of Columbia?

Mr. BALL. Entirely to the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee on the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8067) to establish standard weights and measures for the District of Columbia; to define the duties of the superintendent of weights, measures, and markets of the District of Columbia; and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 3, line 7, after the word "approve," to strike out the comma and insert the word "and," and, in the same line, after the word "seal," to strike out the word "and," so as to read:

SEC. 3. That the superintendent and, under his direction, his assistants and inspectors shall have exclusive power to perform all the duties provided in this act. They shall at least every six months, and oftener when the superintendent thinks proper, inspect, test, try, and ascertain whether or not they are correct, all weights, scales, beams, measures of every kind, instruments or mechanical devices for weighing or measuring, and all tools, appliances, or accessories connected with any or all such instruments or mechanical devices for weighing or measuring used or employed in the District of Columbia by any owner, agent, lessee, or employee in determining the weight, size, quantity, extent, area, or measurement of quantities, things, produce, or articles of any kind offered for transportation, sale, barter, exchange, hire, or award, or the weight of persons for a charge or compensation, and shall approve and seal, stamp, or mark in the manner prescribed by the commisisoners such devices or appliances as conform to the standards kept in the office of the superintendent, and shall seize and destroy or mark, stamp, or tag with the word "condemned" such as do not conform to the standards, and shall also mark the date of such condemnation upon the same, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 22, before the word "delivery," to insert the word "a," so as to read:

No person shall deliver or attempt to deliver any coal, charcoal, or coke without accompanying same by a delivery ticket and a duplicate thereof, the original of which shall be in ink or other indelible substance, on each of which shall be expressed distinctly in pounds, avoirdupois, the gross weight of the load, the tare of the delivery vehicle or receptacle, and the net weight of coal, charcoal, or coke contained in the vehicle or receptacle used in making delivery, with the name and address of the purchaser and the name and address of the person, firm, or corporation from whom or which purchased.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, before the word "vegetables," to strike out the word "and," so as to read:

(a) That standard barrel for fruits, vegetables, and other dry commodities, other than cranberries, shall be of the following dimensions when measured without distention of its parts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, to strike out lines 5 to 11, both inclusive, in the following words:

That a barrel of flour shall contain 200 pounds avoirdupois, net weight, and fraction parts thereof shall contain proportionate net weight.

A standard sack or bag of potatoes shall contain 90 pounds of potatoes at the time of sale, and potatoes shall not be sold by the sack or bag in other than standard sacks or bags.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 18, page 18, line 17, after the word "four," to strike out "thousand three hundred and seventy-five tens of," and insert "hundred and thirty-seven"; on line 19, after the word "and," to strike out "twenty-one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five tens of" and insert "two hundred and eighteen"; on line 22, after the word "ounce," to strike out "one and eight thousand and forty-seven thousandths" and insert "one and eight-tenths"; and on line 24, after the word "foregoing," to strike out "capacity" and insert "capacities," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 18. That the standard liquid gallon shall contain 231 cubic inches; the half gallon, 115.5 cubic inches; the quart, 57.75 cubic inches; the pint, 28.875 cubic inches; the half pint, 14.437 cubic inches; the gill, 7.218 cubic inches; the fluid ounce, 1.8 cubic inches; and to liquid measure of other than the foregoing capacities, except multiples of the gallon, shall be deemed legal liquid measure in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 27, page 22, line 4, after the word "by," to strike out the word "the" and insert "this," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 27. That the powers and duties granted to and imposed on the superintendent by this act are also hereby granted to and imposed on his assistants and inspectors when acting under his instructions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 15, to strike out:

SEC. 33. That the act entitled "An act for the appointment of a sealer and assistant sealer of weights and measures in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1895, as amended, is hereby repealed.

And to insert:

SEC. 33. That this act shall become operative 90 days after its passage. The act entitled "An act for the appointment of a sealer and assistant sealer of weights and measures in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1895, as amended, and the act entitled "An act defining the standard shape and size of dry measures in use in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved May 30, 1896, are hereby repealed, such repeal to be effective when this act becomes operative.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LABORATORY GLASSWARE, OPTICAL GLASS, ETC.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of H. R. 7785, to provide revenue for the Government, to establish and maintain in the United States the manufacture of laboratory glassware, laboratory porcelain ware, optical glass, and scientific and surgical instruments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

OSCAR SMITH.

Mr. STERLING. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of H. R. 644, for the relief of Oscar Smith. This is a very meritorious case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read.

The reading clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Oscar Smith the sum of $108.04 for service performed by him in carrying the mail between the post office and railroad station at Pactola, S. Dak., messenger route No. 259020, from March 16, 1915, to September 29, 1915: Provided, That no claim for said sum or any other sum be made to the Post Office Department by said Oscar Smith.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Was this man paid?

Mr. STERLING. He was not paid at all. This claim is presented for the reason that he was not paid. He was a mail messenger on a regularly designated messenger route from the station to the post office, a distance of half a mile, and served for a period of over six months, and this pay is at the rate of $200 a year, and amounts to one hundred and eight dollars and some cents.

Mr. SMOOT. The Postmaster General says the claim should not be allowed.

Mr. STERLING. The Committee on Claims has made a very full report in regard to this case. It is a case where the postmaster was unable to find anyone to act as messenger except his own father. He served as a messenger. It seems that it is a rule or it may be a provision of the statutes—I do not know—that no member of the immediate family of the postmaster can act in that capacity; but in this case no one else could be found. Bids were advertised for, and no bids were received for the work, and this man had to carry the mail, and it is for that reason that the claim is here.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the case, I do not see why the Postmaster General should report that it should not be paid.

Mr. STERLING. Well, he has said that it should not be paid.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the post office is half a mile from the station. The postmaster tried by advertisement and every means in his power to get some one to carry the mail from the station to the post office. He could get nobody, and so finally he persuaded his father to do the work. The old man did the work. The compensation can not be more than $200 a year, but there is a rule of the Post Office Department that the postmaster can not employ a member of his own family to do this work; and therefore, although the work was done, the Post Office Department has refused payment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION ACT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to make another attempt to make good my promise to the Secretary of the Interior. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] a moment ago told me that this was not the bill he had in mind. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4554, intending to offer two amendments if that consent is given. It is the bill that takes from the jurisdiction of the Water Power Commission the granting of permits in national parks and leaves it with Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4554) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a Federal Power Commission; to provide for the improvement of navigation; the development of water power; the use of the public lands in relation thereto; and to repeal section 18 of the river and harbor appropriation act, approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1920, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter no permit, license, lease, or authorization for dams, conduits, reservoirs, power houses, transmission lines, or other works for storage or carriage of water, or for the development, transmission, or utilization of power, within the limits of any national park or national monument shall be granted or made without specific authority of Congress, and so much of the act of Congress approved June 10, 1920, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Power Commission; to provide for the improvement of navigation; the development of water power; the use of the public lands in relation thereto; and to repeal section 18 of the river and harbor appropriation act, approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1920, as authorizes licensing such uses of national parks and national monuments by the Federal Power Commission is hereby repealed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. After the word "limits," on page 1, line 7, I move to amend by inserting the words "as now constituted."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then, on page 2, line 6, after the word "uses of," I move to insert the word "existing."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I did not feel that I was in a position to object to the consideration of this bill, as the Senator from Washington has been for a long time trying to get it before the Senate for consideration, and he was under an obligation, by reason of a promise which he made to the President and the Secretary of the Interior, to bring it up for consideration if possible. I did not desire to interfere with his bringing it before the Senate, neither have I time at this hour to discuss the bill; but I desire to record my objection to it, and I want an opportunity to vote against it. That is all I shall ever get out of it anyhow, I presume, so we might just as well consider it this afternoon.

I have understood that the bill is very generally favored by the Senate, but it seems to me to be an unwise measure, even from the standpoint of those who are advocating it, taking into consideration the reasons for it which they assign. But I can not undertake at this late hour, Mr. President, to discuss it. However, I ask for an opportunity to vote upon it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I only want to say that I happen to know something about the situation. The water power bill, which many Members of Congress were interested in securing the passage of, was in very grave danger of a presidential veto in the closing hours of the last Congress, and finally the Secretary of the Interior expressed as his main objection the fact that the power in that bill extended over the national parks, and he did not want any bill to develop power in the national parks and destroy their beauty. Finally, the Secretary agreed that he would recommend to the President to sign the bill and let it go through, if the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who was acting chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, would bring before the Congress a bill to amend the water power act so as to leave out the national parks. I think in good faith we ought to pass the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not think that good faith requires us to pass it. I think that good faith does require that an opportunity shall be given for the Senate to vote upon it. Therefore I have not opposed a vote.

As I understand the bill, it all resolves itself into a simple proposition whether the parks would be better protected by the Congress of the United States or by the commission which was created by the power act.

I had some experience here in trying to protect the parks through the Congress of the United States, when we had up the famous Hetch-Hetchy proposition, and I observed that the Congress did all it could do, in that instance, to destroy that park. I think those who are advocating this bill will find in a very short time that they are not securing the protection which they think they are securing. I am just as much in favor of protecting the parks, I think, as those who are advocating this bill, but I wholly disagree with them as to how they can be best protected. Therefore I am opposed to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARTHUR J. BURDICK.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate may take up House bill 1856.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1856) for the relief of Arthur J. Burdick.

Mr. SMOOT. Is there any report on this bill?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; I have a report of the House committee. The House has passed the bill. In the report, if the Senator will permit me, it is stated that—

On November 8, 1909, Arthur J. Burdick was permitted by the local land officers at Los Angeles, Calif., to make desert-land entry (being No. 67331) for the west half of section 31, township 1 north, range 6 east, San Bernardino meridian, containing 320 acres; the entryman made an expenditure of $1,981.68, which was necessary for reclamation. On August 8, 1910, it was discovered by the local land officers that a mistake had been made by them in allowing entry to this tract of land. A hearing as to Mr. Burdick's rights was had in the department of the General Land Office and Mr. Burdick was required to relinquish his rights to the land; there is no dispute as to his expenditures, as shown by the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, which is hereto attached, together with departmental reports, and made a part of this report.

The man was led on this land and expended his money, and is asking to be reimbursed for what he spent. I do not know him personally, but he is a poor man.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know why the Committee on Claims should have reported this bill. I have had a claim before that committee for a poor woman who made an entry upon a piece of land near Salt Lake City, who built a house on it, and began to farm on it. She paid her fees to the land office, and her filing was accepted. Fort Douglas was near to the land, and the officials decided that they wanted it. It was discovered later that the receiver of the land office at Salt Lake City had made a mistake in accepting the entry. The Fort Douglas people put her bodily off, with her husband and children, and tore down everything they had built. I can not get any report from the Committee on Claims on that bill. This case does not compare with that one, but they have reported this bill. It may be that the Senator from California is a member of the Claims Committee.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator from California is not a member of that committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the committee should treat all cases alike.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not know about the claim of which the Senator from Utah speaks. I am sorry I do not.

Mr. SMOOT. I have called it to the Senator's attention.

Mr. SPENCER. I shall look it up at once. Perhaps the committee can meet and act upon it. As the Senator puts it, it is a very strong case. But the claim we are now considering is the case of a man who made an entry on public land and who put some improvements on it. He was perfectly free from any negligence or lack of care on his own part. It was found that the Government itself had given him the wrong location, and that he had put his improvements upon land which the Government could not give to him; and therefore when they found that out they required him to move, of course, and the amount he had expended on his improvements and his moving, which is admitted by the department, is the amount for which this bill is drawn. There is a clear liability.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not saying that this is not a liability, but in the case of the woman I referred to there was no mistake by the Government as to the land. The land office at Salt Lake City had received her money and her filing, and she went on it and remained there for years and years, and then when the officials at Fort Douglas wanted to expand that fort to take in that piece of land, they simply ordered her off, and when they would not go off the United States marshals took her and put her and her children and her husband in a wagon and dumped them in a street down in Salt Lake City. I tried to get some report from the committee on that bill, but not a report has come from the committee.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the Senator tell us when that happened in Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. It happened 30 years ago, and I have been trying for 18 years to get it settled.

Mr. SPENCER. May I say to the Senator from Utah that this is the first I ever heard of that claim or that bill? Certainly the Senator does not intend to say that he himself has ever called the attention of the Committee on Claims to that bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Time and time again.

Mr. SPENCER. I mean in the last two years.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; in the last two years, Mr. President.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am a member of that committee, and I have never heard of that claim before. When did the Senator file the claim?

Mr. SMOOT. Ten years ago, and in every Congress since.

Mr. HENDERSON. It has never been called to my attention, nor has it been called up at any meeting of the committee I have attended.

Mr. SMOOT. How long has the Senator been a member of that committee?

Mr. HENDERSON. For two years.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, within two years it was referred to a subcommittee, of which the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] was chairman, for consideration, and he reported back favorably to the full committee, with a recommendation as to the amount, but it was not reported out of the committee. So the clerk tells me, and so the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] told me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What about this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAL-TAR DYES.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I submit a communication, dated February 23, 1921, from Hon. Bainbridge Colby, Secretary of State, submitting copy of a report of the War Trade Board Section, entitled "Coal-tar dyes for which import licenses were granted during the fiscal year 1920," which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Printing, with the view of its being printed as a public document.

I will say in reference to this report that there is only one copy of it in existence. This compilation was made by some statisticians of the War Trade Board and sent to the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State prepared a copy and sent it to me. It contains very valuable information regarding the licenses issued for the importation of German dyes this year, and will be very much sought after by the manufacturing trade.

I move that it be printed as a public document, and ask that the motion be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

RECESS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow, at which time I shall ask to have the river and harbor appropriation bill taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, February 25, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 24, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. C. Morgan Compher, pastor First Methodist Protestant Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we reverently bow before Thee to render our grateful thanks for Thy love and kindness and gracious care shown to us all our lives. We thank Thee for the glory of another day, for the opportunity of service which it brings. And now Thy servants come before Thee and pray for Thy blessing and Thy holy presence, without which all our efforts are in vain. And as they face the grave problems which confront our Nation, oh, God, do Thou grant to each man vigor of mind and body, and bestow abundantly of Thy wisdom, that the conclusions they may reach may redound to Thy glory and the good of our land. And, oh, God, do Thou keep us all true to the faith of our fathers, to those high ideals and lofty aspirations which are ever pleasing in Thy sight.

Continue, we pray Thee, to bless us in basket and in store, that we may be able to minister to the needs of all who call upon us.

Forgive our sins, and if in the busy hours of this day we should forget Thy will, hold us in loving remembrance and bring to pass, even, oh, Lord, that which is written: "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord, and the people whom He hath chosen for his own inheritance."

And Thine shall be the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HOUR OF MEETING FOR THE WEEK.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that for the balance of the week the meeting hour shall be 11 o'clock a. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that for the balance of the week the hour of meeting shall be 11 o'clock a. m. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EVENING RECESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess this evening from 6 until 8 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the House shall stand in recess this evening from 6 until 8 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving an objection, what is the purpose of the recess?

Mr. MONDELL. To give the gentlemen an opportunity to get their dinners.

Mr. GARD. Two hours will afford a very generous opportunity to enable one to get his dinner. I appreciate that. The intention of my question was as to what legislation the gentleman thought would be up.

Mr. MONDELL. We have several conference reports, and I imagine they will run into the evening.

Mr. GARD. In the opinion of the gentleman, it is desirable to have an evening session?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Can the gentleman give us an idea whether we will have evening sessions the rest of the time? I am not objecting at all.

Mr. MONDELL. I think it will be necessary to hold evening sessions from now on.

Mr. WINGO. I think that the gentleman's policy of taking a recess to allow dinner is a good one, and really will save time.

Mr. MONDELL. I am making it at the request of several gentlemen on both sides, who thought it better to have a recess than to hold sessions continuously.

Mr. WINGO. And for special reasons that would be the gentleman's policy for the rest of the week, would it not?

Mr. MONDELL. It would.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Is it your policy to have a recess every evening when you have a night session?

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to me that would be a better policy, unless gentlemen may express a different opinion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DRAINAGE OF INDIAN LANDS—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report from the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a privileged report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 517) entitled "An act amending an act to provide for drainage of Indian allotments of the Five Civilized Tribes," approved March 27, 1914. (38 Stats., 310, Public, No. 77.)

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk read the title of the bill. How is there any privilege to that?

Mr. SNYDER. There is a report attached there which the Clerk did not read.

Mr. WALSH. I think we ought to know.

Mr. SNYDER. There is a report there that should be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the report is a subject for debate. It is a vetoed bill.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from New York did not say anything about a vetoed bill.

Mr. SNYDER. I supposed the report would be read.

Mr. WALSH. The Clerk read only the title.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to have the report read?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Then I ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Your Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 517) entitled "An act amending an act to provide for drainage of Indian allotments of the Five Civilized Tribes," approved March 27, 1914 (38 Stats., 310; Public, No. 77), together with the objections of the President thereto, having reconsidered said bill and the objections of the President thereto, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that said bill do pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I would not at this busy period in the session have imposed this matter upon the House or asked the Committee on Indian Affairs to report it but for the fact that this measure is of vast importance to the people of my State, and the further fact that the measure does not do what the President thought it did in the statement he makes in his veto. In the veto message he stated that it seemed to him that this bill took away from the Indians some safeguards which did not appear necessary to be taken.

Now, this bill changes existing law in only two particulars. It strikes out the words "or the United States," on page 2, line 10, and on page 2, line 25, it strikes out this language:

Provided further, That in any event such assessments on any Indian allotment shall not exceed $15 per acre, and no such assessment shall be made unless the Indian allottee affected or his legal guardian shall consent thereto and.

Here is the situation: The streams of Oklahoma as a rule flow from the west to the east. Oklahoma is made up of two Territories, the old Territory of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory. This bill affects only the Five Civilized Tribes. Here is what happens: You can organize a drainage district on the old Territory of Oklahoma, and bring the drainage ditch down to the line of the Indian Territory, and there, because some individual Indian objects, you can not organize the district, and the result is that the water is dumped upon the land of the Indians and the white men who live across the line in the old Territory.

For that reason, and to cure that, this amendment was offered. The only change it makes is that it will not permit one individual Indian by objecting to defeat the creation of an entire drainage district.

I want to call attention to the fact that under the existing law there is no assessment against the Indian lands. The only provision is that in the event a drainage district is created and the Indian has any money here in Washington in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary, if he approves the assessment—and he must examine and must approve or disapprove it, if he sees fit——

Mr. CARTER. And it is no lien on the land——

Mr. McKEOWN. And it is no lien upon the land at all; if he has no money—and a great number of them are in that condition—if they have no money here in the Treasury in the care of the Secretary of the Interior, it does not hurt them at all. But if the restricted Indians object, it does tie up all the drainage in the eastern part of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Did the Secretary of the Interior approve the bill?

Mr. McKEOWN. The Secretary of the Interior in his report to the Senate approved the bill as it passed the House and as it went to the Senate, and no objection was called to my attention to the form it passed finally.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the House pass the bill, the views of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? Those in favor of so passing the bill will, when their names are called, answer "yea," those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 323, nays 18, answered "present" 1, not voting 86, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5030. An act authorizing the city of New Orleans, La., to extend Dauphin Street, in said city, across the United States military reservation known as the Jackson Barracks.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 15812) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives, and had appointed Mr. GRONNA, Mr. KENYON, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. GORE, and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 161) to exempt the New York State Barge Canal from the provisions of section 201 of H. R. 10453.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15682) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922; had agreed to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 14, 17, 20, 25, 26, 27, 32, 40, 42, 43, 60, 61, 62, 64, 82, 94, 95, 101, 102, 109, 129, and 130; had receded from its amendments numbered 53, 65, 83, 104, and 106.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments by the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15962) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, had agreed to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 40, 52, 53, and 62, and had receded from its amendment numbered 33.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment House joint resolution 465, for the appointment of one member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9521) to prevent hoarding and deterioration of and deception with respect to cold-storage foods, to regulate shipments of cold-storage foods in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GRONNA, Mr. MCNARY, and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 10515. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 9281. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 11554. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 7775. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill. When the House adjourned last night the vote was being taken on amendment No. 12, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 12: Page 7, line 21, after the figures "$6,000,000," insert: "Provided, That the Postmaster General may, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, authorize the delivery of special-delivery matter without obtaining a receipt therefor: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as excusing the delivery of special-delivery matter by messenger in the first instance."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will not this amendment have the effect of destroying the privilege that a person now has of demanding a receipt for a registered letter?

Mr. MADDEN. It will have no effect at all on registered letters.

Mr. McCLINTIC. It will not affect the receipts which may be demanded for registered letters?

Mr. MADDEN. No; not at all.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 13: Page 8, line 20, insert: "Provided further, That the Postmaster General may contract with any individual, firm, or corporation for an airplane mail service between such points as he may deem advisable and designate, in case such service is furnished at an actual cost not greater than the cost of the same service by rail, and shall pay therefor out of the appropriation for inland transportation by railroad routes."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MADDEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 13 and agree to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by the said amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That the Postmaster General may contract with any individual, firm, or corporation for the transportation of mail by airplane between such points as he may deem advisable and designate in case such transportation service is furnished at a cost not greater than the actual cost of the same service by rail, and shall pay therefor out of the appropriation for inland transportation by railroad routes."

Mr. MADDEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I intend to support this amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, which authorizes the Postmaster General to contract for the carrying of mail by airplane, with proper restrictions. I want to address my remarks to the next amendment, which is a graft on the Public Treasury in the way of an appropriation of $1,500,000 for carrying mail, when they know it is pure waste. I have examined the hearings before the Appropriations Committee in the attempt they have made to get this appropriation, and there is not one word of testimony in those hearings that would warrant this appropriation. I am not sure that I have the figures in mind, and I want the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. MADDEN] to answer a question or two. How much of this money that was appropriated last year was used by the Post Office Department to buy German airplanes?

Mr. MADDEN. Two hundred thousand dollars, according to the report.

Mr. TINCHER. And how many planes did they buy?

Mr. MADDEN. Eight.

Mr. TINCHER. What has become of those planes?

Mr. MADDEN. Three of them were burned up.

Mr. TINCHER. And what became of the pilots of those planes?

Mr. MADDEN. Those men were burned up.

Mr. TINCHER. And that is the way this appropriation, which is unconscionable, is being used. Now, they have offered to alight in my district, so this matter is not personal with me. Yesterday they pulled off the ordinary demonstration, that is as old as the hills, for the purpose of preventing any opposition to this appropriation. I can remember as a boy, when the Navy was asking for appropriations to build battleships and the bill was pending in Congress, we always had a war just before they had the naval appropriation bill up for consideration. A day or two ago, knowing that this matter was coming up, they made a showing of how quickly they could fly from San Francisco to New York. They burned up only one man in one plane and got across with about a shirt tail full of mail. They wanted to justify this raid on the Treasury for $1,500,000. I am in sympathy with the man who is going to administer the affairs of the Post Office Department after the 4th of March, if I am correctly advised as to who he is, and I am speaking in his favor now, because the men who have airplane stations in their district are expected to be in favor of this appropriation. Take Omaha, for instance. I see they carried a couple of sacks of mail to Omaha from Chicago and beat a train two or three hours. Of course, the Omaha Representative must be for that. The airplane station is a nice place to go and show folks where they alight with the airplanes. Perhaps for the amusement of the folks in Omaha they burned a few of these German airplanes there. I do not know.

I say to you that the testimony offered before the Appropriations Committee asking for a million and a half dollars would not get for a widow $2.50 by an honest jury as between man and man, and still I think it will be sufficient on a roll call, if we have an opportunity to have one, to extract from the Public Treasury for the benefit of a few cities where they will have the alighting places for airplanes, a million and a half dollars. It may be that you think I am not sincere in fighting this, but I want to stop this graft from the Public Treasury. [Applause.]

Mr. ROUSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ROUSE. Will the gentleman explain the difference between his amendment and the Senate amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. The difference is that the Senate amendment provides that the Postmaster General may contract for airplane mail service. My amendment proposes that the Postmaster General may contract for the transportation of mail by airplane. Now, there is quite a distinction between transporting mail by airplane and contracting for airplane mail service. We do not know what airplane mail service means. We do not know what transportation of mail by airplane means. We know that under the language that is sought to be amended, during the last year the Postmaster General did establish a number of routes that were not authorized by this language, and for which he expended $488,000, and for which he came to the Appropriations Committee and asked a deficiency. We thought that if we were going to authorize the Postmaster General to contract for carrying the mail by airplane that we ought to say so. We say that in respect to transportation of mail by rail and by ships, and we thought we ought to say the same in respect to the transportation of mail by air.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This provision is in the existing law. How much mail is now being carried in this way under this provision of law?

Mr. MADDEN. Under this provision of law there is a route between New York and Washington, but I do not know how much mail they carry. There is another one from Chicago to St. Louis, and to Minneapolis and St. Paul, and I think one in the extreme Northwest. These routes were established by the Postmaster General without any authority of law and have been used presumably as the result of this language.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Postmaster General must claim that the mail is carried by airplane at no greater expense than would occur if carried by train.

Mr. MADDEN. I will say to my colleague that the Postmaster General under this provision during the last year did let a contract, amounting to $685,000 in the aggregate, for the transportation of mail by air between New York and Atlanta and between other points, and the contract price would be about ninety times what the actual rail rates would be.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think the gentleman is slightly inaccurate about carrying the mail under this provision. As I understand, there has been no mail carried by virtue of the contract provision; that is, the mail is authorized to be carried by contract if the contract price does not exceed the cost by rail transportation. What they have done is to carry the mail on routes the gentleman has mentioned under section 3 of the appropriation act of June 30, 1921, third section. Where it authorizes the Secretary of War to turn over airplanes to the Post Office Department, and the Postmaster General is authorized to use the same for the transportation of mail. The section reads as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is authorized hereafter, in his discretion, to deliver and turn over to the Postmaster General, without charge therefor, from time to time, such motor vehicles, airplanes, and parts thereof, and machinery and tools to repair and maintain the same, as may be suitable for use in the Postal Service; and the Postmaster General is authorized to use the same in the transportation of the mails and to pay the necessary expenses thereof, including the replacement, maintenance, exchange, and repair of such equipment, out of any appropriation available for the service in which such vehicles or airplanes are used.

We had a hearing before my committee recently, and we asked Mr. Corrydon, of the air mail service, by what authority he was establishing these routes, and he said by virtue of section 3.

Mr. MADDEN. There has been no appropriation made for that purpose.

Mr. STEENERSON. No; the money must be taken from the appropriation for the transportation of mail by railroad, because there is no other fund. But the fact is this is the only claim for authority, because the contract provision that has been quoted has never been performed. Contracts have been made, but no service has been yet performed under them. The contract has been waiting on the action of Congress.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. DYER. I wanted to call to the attention of the gentleman from Illinois that that provision is still the law, and this does not affect that provision. In my opinion, the department has no authority to establish new lines under said section 3. The only authorized route is the transcontinental route, and this service to Washington, Chicago, and Minneapolis, and so forth, is illegal. There is no appropriation out of which that service can lawfully be paid.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman from Minnesota has very accurately stated that the Post Office Department is operating this service, which the gentleman mentions, under section 3 of the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1921. In answer to the criticism directed against the Post Office Department as having exceeded its authority, I think it is fair to state that the matter was submitted to the Auditor of the Post Office Department, and if the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, I will read the auditor's opinion.

Mr. MADDEN. I would be the last man to do anyone an injustice.

Mr. BLACK. I am sure the gentleman feels that way, but there has been a good deal of criticism of the Postmaster General about this particular matter, and that is why I have asked to read what the auditor says. It is:

As you know, this office is not authorized to render a decision in advance of the settlement of accounts; but in view of the very short time between the approval of the act and the date it goes into effect, and your statement that the Post Office Department must act at once on options for material, personnel, and fields for service, I advise you informally that this office concurs in the interpretation the Post Office Department places upon this legislation, viz, that the aviation and truck material turned over to the Post Office Department by the Secretary of War may be operated in the Postal Service on and after July 1, 1920, and paid for out of the appropriation for railway transportation, power-boat transportation service, or out of the appropriation for any other service in which such planes or trucks are used.

That was the opinion of the Auditor for the Post Office Department, and it was upon that opinion that the Postmaster General has operated this service. I admit that such construction of the language referred to seems to me to be contrary to the intent of Congress, but nevertheless it was made, as I have stated.

Mr. MADDEN. I am very glad, indeed, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] has read that opinion into the RECORD.

Mr. STEENERSON. Why not get the opinion of the Comptroller of the Treasury? The auditor has no authority to grant an opinion of that kind.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS.]

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the ruling of the Auditor for the Post Office Department is not conclusive authority. The auditor is right in saying that he has no authority to render an advance opinion. The law specifically provides that the Comptroller of the Treasury may render an advance opinion, and that opinion will be final and conclusive upon all the officers of the Government in the adjustment of the accounts. The opinion of an auditor in advance, as given in this case, is wholly out of the order and is not worth the paper it is written on.

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GRIEST. In connection with the inquiry, I think of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], in respect to the relative cost of transporting mail in the air and by rail, it may be interesting to the House to know that it was stated yesterday before the Postal Commission that the cost per pouch of taking mail from New York to Cleveland by air is $56 and the cost of taking it by car is 41 cents.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. What is the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. To provide for giving authority to the Postmaster General to contract for airplane mail transportation at a cost not higher than mail transportation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 14: Page 9, line 4, insert "For the operation and maintenance of the airplane mail service between New York, N. Y., and San Francisco, Calif., via Chicago, Ill., and Omaha, Nebr., including necessary incidental expenses and employment of necessary personnel, $1,500,000."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,250,000."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this is an item upon which I think it is fair the House should be thoroughly advised. It will be recalled that last year in the Post Office appropriation bill authority was granted for the establishment of an airplane mail route between New York and San Francisco. The object principally was to experiment not only in the more expeditious movement of the mail, but also to experiment in flying under varying climatic and altitudinal conditions. The thing that led the House to act in favor of the establishment of this route at that time was that while we were experimenting in the development of airplane flying, we might also properly get some revenue, and that could only be had through carrying the mail. I think it is the consensus of opinion among the advanced thinkers of America that the United States ought to keep abreast of the other nations of the world in the development of aircraft, and while I have said more than once that if we undertook to carry the mail in any large quantities by air it would be unjustifiable because of the excessive cost, yet I believe that we would not be justified in eliminating this particular experiment. The cost of carrying mail by train is about 7 cents per ton-mile. The cost of carrying mail by air is about $5.50 per ton-mile. The cheapest rate at which an airplane can run without carrying anything at all is $1 a mile, and I doubt if that cost will be reduced much, because it is said that the life of a plane is 150 hours of actual flying. The cost of these planes is high. However, the people all over the route from New York to San Francisco have been delighted with the thought that we were giving an opportunity for them to see the new scientific development in the air, and they have at their own expense prepared landing fields and airdromes, and have welcomed the introduction of this activity with an enthusiasm which may not be justified by the expense, but which nevertheless does exist.

It is said that we advance the mail by reason of this method of transportation, and we do to some extent, but not to the extent that the air mail enthusiasts argue. However, whether we advance it or not, whether the cost is higher as compared with the cost of land transportation or not, it seems to me that we can not afford to say to America that we are not as farseeing in our desire for the development of aeronautics as any other nation in the world; and, further, I think we can well afford to spend $1,000,000 a year or a little over to try out the development and encourage people to enter aeronautics from a commercial standpoint. Whether they will ever be able to do that successfully, I do not know; but, for one, although opposed to the tremendous cost, I feel that I would be derelict in the proper discharge of my duty if I did not present the facts as I now present them and urge the adoption of the Senate amendment with the amendment which I have proposed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I just voted for the gentleman's amendment that it should be carried at a cost not exceeding the cost of other mail service. The gentleman now offers an amendment to make a special appropriation of $1,250,000 instead of the Senate amount of $1,500,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I listened with interest to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER]. What the gentleman now proposes is a mere show. The people can get that at the circuses and they can get it by viewing the voluntary flying here and there. I do not believe, under existing conditions, that we are authorized to spend $1,250,000 a year merely for show.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. We authorized this for the current fiscal year. We began the operation in October. They have not had a fair chance to make a fair test, and it seems to me that we ought to give them at least one year more to make this test.

Mr. CANNON. It has resulted, however, in the buying of certain flying machines from Germany and other countries.

Mr. MADDEN. Only from Germany—eight of them.

Mr. CANNON. To my mind we have enough burdens as it is without running in opposition to the circuses of the country.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. The naval appropriation bill carries quite an appropriation for developing aeronautics.

Mr. MADDEN. About $30,000,000, I think.

Mr. TINCHER. And the military appropriation bill carries a large appropriation for developing aeronautics in the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose it will when it goes through.

Mr. TINCHER. It did as it passed this House.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Does the gentleman believe in "duplicity" in these departments [laughter]—perhaps I ought to say in duplicating these activities in these departments—or does the gentleman think the Post Office Department is more efficient to develop aeronautics than the War and Navy Departments?

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to say this in reply to my friend, that the Post Office Department is the only department through which any revenue can be returned in any experiment which may be had in connection with the development of the Air Service.

Mr. TINCHER. Then will my friend yield? Does he think it would be a good idea to put all these experiments under the Post Office Department and do away with them in the other departments?

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, I think my friend knows that I do not believe we can carry all the mail by air, and I do not believe we ought to do it if we could.

Mr. TINCHER. The parties who appeared before the gentleman's committee and asked for this line between New York and San Francisco asked $3,500,000. The gentleman brought in the original bill for $1,250,000 and his present amendment reduced this——

Mr. MADDEN. No; this brings it to the original.

Mr. TINCHER. Now, that figure was arrived at absolutely arbitrarily?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. There is no basis for any such figure in any hearing before the committee?

Mr. MADDEN. There was no scientific calculation.

Mr. TINCHER. The only scientific calculation was by the gentleman himself in which he disclosed the inefficiency of carrying mail from New York to Chicago, taking about 12 hours more by airplane than by train and the extreme cost of carrying by airplane over carrying it by train.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, we can not overlook the fact that it does cost a great deal more.

Mr. TINCHER. Do I understand the gentleman is advocating the carrying of this item because there is some peculiar training for a man to carry the mail? Does he think that by the airplane simply flying through the air it is going to be of equal benefit to us as these experiments of the War and Navy Departments?

Mr. MADDEN. I will say the House is only a part in the Congress, and in the consideration of this problem we have to take the views of the other side into consideration.

Mr. TINCHER. Let me say to the gentleman this matter was never mentioned on the floor on the other side, if the gentleman is worried about that.

Mr. MADDEN. It was not mentioned because there was no opposition to it.

Mr. TINCHER. I think there was.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman's committee when it brought in the Post Office bill brought in this item for a transcontinental air mail service, as I understand it?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Therefore, as a matter of fact, when the gentleman moves to recede and concur he simply recommends the action that he and his committee originally recommended?

Mr. MADDEN. It would be consistent, of course.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, if the gentleman will yield me just a moment further, say, two minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I will yield the gentleman from Wyoming three minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think we all, like the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], wish to avoid duplication in these appropriations, likewise duplication of activities. Generally, this item, fortunately or unfortunately, as one may look at it, is one of the items with regard to the development of the science of aeronautics that has no uncertainty in it. We have various items in bills which have passed the House under which uncertain and indefinite sums can be used for the airplane service. There is such a provision in the Agricultural bill with respect to the Forest Service, under which the Forest Service can use quite a considerable appropriation for that purpose if they see fit to do so. We have placed a provision in this bill under which the Post Office Department may be tempted to make contracts not clearly within the purview of the amendment; they are proposals likely to lead to large and indefinite expenditure. Now, this is a proposal for a definite service and at a limited cost.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. The country expects us, in my opinion at least, to make this contribution toward the development of aeronautics. This is a contribution made in a limited way for a service now established and well under way, and I think if we are to do anything for aeronautics anywhere this item ought to be accepted.

Mr. MADDEN. I yield the gentleman from Connecticut one minute.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, there is no duplication here. The appropriations for aviation carried in the naval appropriation bill are for the national defense in warfare carried on by the Navy. The Army appropriations are necessary in order to keep abreast of the times by having aeronautics developed in the Army branch of our national defense. We spend a substantial sum for these two services. Here is the only place where we are doing anything at all toward developing aeronautics for commercial or peaceful purposes. It seems to me that we can well afford to maintain at least one through line from the Atlantic to the Pacific and thus spend a comparatively small amount for development along commercial and peaceful lines. I do not think we can afford to neglect it. Other countries are going ahead and we should not permit this country to be left behind. We ought not to allow ourselves to be left behind in such an important matter by smaller and less progressive countries. I think the $1,250,000 is none too much.

Mr. MADDEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, before the House votes upon this proposition I think we ought to know something about the facts that have been recently disclosed before various hearings of the Post Office Committee and before the Joint Commission. Now, if the House desires to maintain this present continental line, as the gentleman from Connecticut suggests, as a contribution to commercial aeronautics, that is one thing.

On the other hand, if you want to contribute to it out of the postal funds for the purpose of maintaining a show, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] suggests that it is, that is another thing. But it is established, by evidence which I do not think can be successfully contradicted, that as a mail facility this service is a complete failure.

The expert testimony before the Post Office Committee showed that the mail was very little, if any, expedited by the Air Service to San Francisco. Besides, the small amount as compared with the total volume of first-class mail is so insignificant that there is not one man in ten thousand who gets a letter by air, while he has got to pay this extra expense for this extraordinary speed they claim they have attained.

Well, practically there is no advantage in the speed, either. In the Joint Commission recently, as was referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRIEST], it appeared that not only the cost was out of proportion, but here is the transcontinental route, that starts from New York and goes to Cleveland and Chicago, and the Post Office Department reported they had 98 per cent performance, but the expert that examined it shows that the department has instructed the aviators to call a trip that started a "performance," although they never get more than a mile, perhaps, or never get to the destination. He showed that the percentage of failures to make connections with train 35 at Cleveland is 93 per cent. So that only 7 per cent of the performance on that schedule was performed, because, if they failed to make train 35, the mail came into Chicago on the same train on which it left New York, which is train 43.

Ninety-three per cent of the time the mail went to Chicago on that train; 93 per cent of the time the mail came to Chicago on the same train on which it started from New York.

Now, that is the general performance. At Omaha there is 55 per cent of failure to reach the plane by which they intend to expedite the mail, according to this testimony, and the result is that there is practically no advantage so far as expedition of the mail is concerned.

Of course, when you consider the small quantity of mail they intend to expedite, it is insignificant. So that the conclusion is irresistible that if you want to vote this as simply a contribution to commercial aeronautics you must do it on that ground, but do not do it because it helps the mail service, for it does not. I do not argue the question of whether you should contribute one million and a quarter dollars to commercial aeronautics or not. I leave that to yourselves.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. JEFFERIS].

Mr. JEFFERIS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the future of the air mail or the Air Service is one that I think should require the careful and thoughtful study of our people. It is a new service, it is true, but this Congress has deemed it wise, from the standpoint of war facilities, to make appropriations for the Army and for the Navy to develop it.

Now, if this Nation is really to exist as a great Nation, it must have, as it should have, a national viewpoint concerning these new developments. It would seem to me that nothing could do more toward solidifying the whole thought of the country than by having not only the experiments in the Air Service in the Army and in the Navy, but likewise across the center of this Republic, from one ocean to the other. [Applause.]

You may speak of it as a show, but let me remind you that when Robert Fulton first invented his steamboat the people made fun of it. The same might be said of the first engine, which has since been developed, for the hauling of the commerce of this country, and so regarding many other new inventions in their day. But, nevertheless, if we want the young people of America to have a forward-looking mind, and to undertake to develop and keep America in the forefront of the world, there is nothing that can do more in that line than the development of the Air Service.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JEFFERIS. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman spoke of the route being across the center of the country. Of course, that means through the city of Omaha?

Mr. JEFFERIS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Rather than by St. Paul and the Santa Fe route?

Mr. JEFFERIS. I thank the gentleman. I am glad to say it does go through Omaha. Why? Because Omaha happens to be the center of the United States, being located halfway between the Pacific and the Atlantic Oceans, and it should have no rocks thrown toward it simply because of its natural location. I want to cite here an instance. Out there in the city of Omaha a small boy by the name of Fetters has during this past summer invented an airplane. His father is an engineer and has taken up the boy's ideas, and I believe that their combined efforts will result in an airplane in the near future that will surpass any that have been developed up to this time. The young idea, young America, is directing its thought toward the manufacture, toward the invention, of some of these things which will be of great advantage to this country, not only from a commercial standpoint but from the standpoint of war, from the standpoint of defense. For Congress here, after it has tried this experiment only one year, and after it has made the expenditure of this year, and after the cities along this route have established their hangars, and so forth, to throw it aside and discard it seems to me is not giving the air mail service a fair trial. For one, I am in favor of the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, it is wonderful how we progress. And this progression commenced on an amendment reported on an appropriation by the Committee on Appropriations that I had the honor to have charge of.

Prof. Langley, the head of the Smithsonian Institution, now dead and gone, invented the airplane, the first one that was ever built on earth. The ridicule that he received was the cause of his death. He was cartooned and ridiculed all over the country. He did make a machine with the modest appropriation, as I recall it, of $10,000. It was taken on a scow down on the Potomac, and at first it did not make an extended flight. That machine is still in existence. It did this much good: The Wright brothers, those bright men—we call them "Yankees"; if not, they are first cousins of the Yankees—put their hands to the plow, and they found that what that machine needed was an engine, and an engine was constructed, in the course of time, without any appropriation from the Government. That engine was installed in this machine, and it flew all over Washington, and spread all over the world. It played an important part in the late war.

But it seems to me that there are other things under existing conditions that need appropriations more than this $1,250,000 is needed, from the standpoint of Omaha, or to show that they are still building these machines, and I have no doubt improving them. The $1,250,000 is partially to go to the people who are engaged in getting a sale for their product. I do not believe that it is necessary, or that it will forward the development of aviation one particle. That is all I desire to say.

God knows that, in unscrambling these eggs on the appropriations that we are compelled to make, this proposed appropriation of $1,250,000 should not be made. [Applause.] "Many mickles make a muckle," is an old Scotch proverb. I would be glad if we could have some regard for the taxpayers of this country, some of whom, the farmers and others, want loans, multiplying into the hundreds of millions of dollars.

You may say, "Are you selfish, CANNON, in this?" No. I am anxious where we can that we shall keep down the appropriations; and I want to say to my friends on this side of the House that something will be done unless we can keep down the appropriations and lessen taxation inside of two years and four years from now. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois what is to be demonstrated by the use of this appropriation that can not be demonstrated or is not already known as the result of experiments on the part of the Army and Navy?

Mr. MADDEN. The Army and Navy experiment in particular places under given circumstances. The advantage to be gained by the experiments to be pursued through this appropriation will be that flying will be done under all climatic and latitudinal conditions, making a complete record of the ability to develop the air possibilities in the mountain regions, in the frozen north, among the clouds, in the valleys, in the summer, in the winter; and there is no other route that could be selected in which all the conditions that are provided in this route could be obtained.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me a little time, say three minutes?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield to the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have the information from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], because I assume that the Army is not making these experiments in flying above the clouds in the various altitudinous positions and maneuvers on the theory that if we get into a war and if the conditions are unfavorable, the Army airplanes will remain on the ground and the war will stop until the altitudinous conditons are more favorable. [Laughter.]

I think that, so far as concerns the securing of any information above the clouds of the various classes of weather in which planes can be flown, it is not necessary to appropriate money for the Post Office Department to get that information. But, Mr. Speaker, there is another aspect of this matter that I think the people should take into consideration, and especially the reinforcements upon this floor to that band of raiders upon the Federal Treasury that exists elsewhere. I sometimes regret that the rigid rules of the House require one to be rather restricted in expressing his opinion as to the matters that come before us in the way of amendments from other regions. We do not want to forget that there are several other conference reports to be acted upon before we adjourn; that is, we hope to. They may have some claims upon them, put on elsewhere. We go on appropriating money, $1,250,000 in one lump. There may not be enough money to take care of those claims. Because we took down the bars and removed the hinges from the doors of the Treasury Department yesterday, here is another effort to go in and take $1,250,000 out to get some information about carrying a few mail bags through the fog or up over the mountains or down through the valleys in the incidental view of the great city of Omaha, which enjoys the great distinction of being located in the geographical center of this great Republic.

I desire to reenforce the sentiment expressed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], that it is time this raid upon the Treasury of the United States should cease. We are having a perfect saturnalia of appropriations, and this Congress will hand to the new administration a deficit increased many hundreds of thousands of dollars to make very difficult the problems that will confront the Chief Executive after the 4th of March. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be unfortunate if the House should get the opinion that this air mail service from New York to San Francisco is operated purely as an experimental service. In my judgment mail service by airplane is now a permanent establishment in the United States.

What is the objective in handling first-class mail, anyhow? The object is to handle it as rapidly as possible, to make the delivery as soon as possible. Why do we use the telegraph in preference to the mail service? Because we want to get a rapid transmittal of our communications. That is the primary purpose of the air mail service. There is where its greatest possibilities lie.

I think the House would be interested in knowing what the Post Office Department is actually accomplishing in this airplane mail service from New York to San Francisco. In the report of the Postmaster General he gives an account of its present administration.

I know the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Minnesota have criticized this report, and yet the hearings before the committee have not impeached in any way the accuracy of these statements. Of course, they do not show that this service is a perfect success. These hearings do not show that all the difficulties have been obviated and that all the obstacles have been overcome, but they do show that the service is being operated with a measurable degree of success.

Now, what is the method of operation? The Postmaster General states it accurately in his report:

> In the operation of the New York-San Francisco service the Post Office Department had to choose between advancing 15,000 letters 42 hours, each direction, or by combining the air mail with the railway service, using trains at night to advance 64,000 letters 24 hours, each direction. It decided upon the latter policy, which is accomplished by the following operation:
> The plane leaves New York at daybreak with 16,000 letters that would not depart from New York for San Francisco until 8.40 o'clock that night and delivers them in Chicago that afternoon in ample time to dispatch them to the through west mail connection which left New York at 8.40 o'clock the previous night. These 16,000 letters are thus advanced 24 hours.

Now, I will not take time to read the description of the same operation as to the other three legs of the journey, for the operation is substantially the same. What is accomplished annually by this airplane mail service? The Postmaster General says that—

> The cost of operating the air mail service, including interest on investment, the writing off of losses for planes and equipment damaged beyond repair, and including every conceivable expenditure in connection with the flying of the planes, was $553,156.10.
> For this expenditure the air mail advanced the delivery of 23,463,120 letters 16 to 24 hours.

The report also shows that $646,143.70 was used in remodeling aircraft turned over by the War Department, in buying new necessary equipment, and things of that kind.

Now, gentlemen of the House, I am not advocating that this air-mail service be gone into on an extravagant scale, but I do believe that the country expects that we continue this utility along practical lines and expand its use as conditions justify, and I can think of no more practical route than the one between New York and San Francisco.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman think we would be justified in stopping the only experiment in which we are now engaged, in using aviation for peaceful purposes?

Mr. BLACK. I do not; and as I have stated, I look upon it as more than an experiment. I believe it is now a permanent branch of the service.

Mr. TILSON. But it is the only experiment that we are now conducting along that line.

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the House unhesitatingly gave appropriations for the Navy Department and for the War Department for this same service. We have had a statement of the utility that has been derived from this service through the Post Office Department. Anyone who looked into this subject after the armistice will realize that we had no airplanes that could cross the mountains. The people east of the Sierra Nevada Mountains desired an airplane service from San Francisco. They had the airplanes, and the people in those localities were ready and willing to lay down a check to pay all the expenses of the Government for sending the planes from the fields in San Francisco across the Sierra Nevada Mountains, crossing from Nevada into the northern part of California. When it came to a show-down—there is no secret about the matter, for we have the letters—the War Department had to admit that they had no planes that could cross the Sierra Nevadas, by reason of the altitude; that they had had no experience which would enable them to rise to the altitude that would be necessary and then come down into the valleys after crossing the mountains. Now, from the western coast until you strike the Atlantic you find every degree of change of climate and wind that there is. There is a practical demonstration every day, or every other day, so that these experienced men will be in a position to know what the machines will require, what the different altitudes will mean, what are the conditions of the air currents in these various valleys, and it will bring a success, just like that which has been achieved in the carrying of the mails by automobile. The same objection was made, that you could not carry the mail by automobile over the mountains, and that was only 10 years ago. The same objection is made here, where we can use a little money and get the most of it back, and we can demonstrate to the Navy Department and to the War Department, and they can get the benefit of the use that will be made by the Post Office Department, and eventually there will be a commercial service, which will be of advantage to this country not only in time of peace but if by any chance we should have a necessity for airplanes in any conflict we will have the information upon which to work and upon which to act. I hope the amendment will be agreed to by the House.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recede and concur with an amendment.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for a division.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for the yeas and nays, and, pending that, I make the point of no quorum present.

Mr. KING. There has been no division.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand the yeas and nays?

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of no quorum first.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum present.

Mr. BLANTON. It is an automatic call, Mr. Speaker. The House is dividing.

The SPEAKER. There has been no division yet.

Mr. BLANTON. The Speaker stated that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. KING. There has been nothing but a viva voce vote.

The SPEAKER. A quorum has not failed to vote.

Mr. BLANTON. I will withdraw the point for the present and will ask for a division.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were 94 ayes and 57 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in Senate amendment No. 14.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 219, nays 121, answered "present" 1, not voting 87, as follows:

Mr. MCCULLOCH with Mr. DENT.

Mr. HUTCHINSON with Mr. SMALL.

Mr. STEENERSON with Mr. KITCHIN.

Mr. STINESS with Mr. VINSON.

Mr. HICKS with Mr. GARRETT.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan with Mr. WATKINS.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. BANKHEAD, and I wish to withdraw that vote and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 18: Page 16, line 8, strike out lines 8, 9, and 10, which read as follows: "For village delivery service in towns and villages having post offices of the second or third class, and in communities adjacent to cities having city delivery, $1,500,000."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 19: Page 16, after line 13, insert:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, at his discretion, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to loan to any State of the Union, when so requested by the highway department of the State, such tractors as are retained and not distributed under the act approved March 15, 1920, for use in highway construction by the highway department of such State: Provided, That all expenses for repairs and upkeep of tractors so loaned and the expenses of loading and freight shall be paid by the State, both in transfer to the State and the return to the Army."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 20: Page 17, insert at the top of the page the following:

"SEC. 3. That the joint commission authorized under section 6 of the act approved April 24, 1920, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes,' is hereby continued until June 30, 1922, to complete the investigation and to prepare a detailed report containing a summary of its findings thereof, and such recommendations as to legislation as it may deem proper."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur, but before the vote is taken I wish to say that this commission was appointed during the last session of the Congress, and the life of the commission was to expire on the 4th of March next. The time allotted between the appointment of the commission and the 4th of March next is not nearly sufficient to enable the commission to function properly. The commission was organized for the purpose of investigating how we could expedite the handling, the dispatching, and the transportation of mail. It is conceded by people everywhere who have given consideration to the question that the time has come when there must be greater terminal facilities for handling the parcel post, and it seems that if those facilities are not supplied the first-class mail is bound to be more or less slowed up. The commission is now considering the question of not only how we can supply the facilities to handle the parcel post separately from the first-class mail but it is also considering many other things in connection with the expeditious dispatch of the mail. It is one of the most important functions that has ever been imposed upon a commission, and it is believed by all who have thought about it that good results will follow the investigation. I sincerely trust that the House will agree to extend the life of the commission so that it may really do the work for which it was authorized and selected.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ROUSE. Can the gentleman inform the House what the cost of this commission has been up to the present time?

Mr. MADDEN. $48,487.69.

Mr. ROUSE. How has that money been expended?

Mr. MADDEN. The statement of expenses is as follows:

Statement of expenses, Joint Commission on Postal Service.

Expense, May 17 to July 1	$967.15
Expense, first quarter, including July, August, September	3,075.26
Expense, second quarter, including October, November, December	2,970.34
	7,012.75

Transportation charges for January	1,244.06
Total engineers' service for January		21,832.84
Grand total		48,487.69

Mr. ROUSE. What engineers have been employed?

Mr. MADDEN. W. B. Richards & Co., of New York, I understand.

Mr. ROUSE. How many engineers have been employed?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know how many they have. I am not a member of the commission, but I understand they have whatever number it is thought will be necessary to expedite the work. It fluctuates from month to month.

Mr. ROUSE. Does the gentleman know how much money is being paid monthly?

Mr. MADDEN. I understand the highest paid engineers get $1,000 a month and their railroad expenses, but no other expense, and the next lowest down to $750 a month. That includes all of their expenses except railroad fare.

Mr. ROUSE. Does the gentleman believe these engineers can give more information regarding transportation than could be given by the post-office inspectors and other postal employees?

Mr. MADDEN. I really do not know just exactly what sort of information the engineers are giving. I am not qualified to answer the question. If I were a member of the commission I would be better qualified to answer it.

Mr. ROUSE. Will the gentleman yield to the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON]? Possibly he can give the House that information.

Mr. MADDEN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. What is the question?

Mr. ROUSE. The question is, How many engineers are employed and what are the salaries paid to these engineers?

Mr. STEENERSON. I understand that Richards & Co., who are efficiency engineers in New York, have a large staff employed. I can not tell how many men they have in this work. It started only last October, and the work is in progress. Sometimes they have a great many men on the work and sometimes not so many. They have gone into a very elaborate investigation of the whole transportation system. They have investigated the congested conditions, especially in New York, with a view to determining whether or not the tunnel that was proposed by the department, to cost $1,800,000, between the New York Central and the Pennsylvania Stations, was advisable. They have made a report saying that the tunnel would not relieve the situation, that the congestion is at the terminals and that building a tunnel would not help out any. They say that the terminals can not be extended because the New York Central terminal is sunk about 70 feet into the solid rock and the land on each side is so expensive that it can not be had at a reasonable price. It would be economically impossible to extend the terminals sufficiently to have space in which to move cars which would be required. They have suggested, as the gentleman from Illinois has said, a separation of the parcel-post mail from the first-class mail, and taking that another way. The recommendations of the engineers, I believe, could not be arrived at by anybody except engineers of that kind. The postal experts could not do it.

Mr. ROUSE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. ROUSE. Does the gentleman believe these engineers will get any information other than from postal employees?

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, yes; a great deal, and the postal employees are not at liberty to get at the facts.

Mr. ROUSE. If the gentleman will pardon me, the commission has the right to ask any question it wishes?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; and that is what the commission is doing?

Mr. ROUSE. Then why not save this money by——

Mr. STEENERSON. Because the post office employees could not do it; it would be absolutely impossible. They are no more fit for that than for physicians or surgeons.

Mr. ROUSE. Where do the engineers get the information, if not from postal employees?

Mr. STEENERSON. They get it from all sources; they go to the records. For instance, in their air-mail investigation they sent men to take the actual records of flying——

Mr. ROUSE. And they got that information from——

Mr. STEENERSON. At the local stations. Now, the Postmaster General reports 98 per cent in performance. The engineers sent men there to find out the instructions to the flyers, and so forth, and they find that the flyers have orders to make a start whenever they can, and many times they will start and come back in 15 or 20 minutes. The department calls that a performance if they only start, whereas a performance should only be counted when the trip is completed. In this way they report 98 per cent performance, when in fact there was only 55 per cent performance on the New York to Chicago test. I want to make a few general remarks, if the gentleman will excuse me. This provision was considered by the Post Office Committee, discussed, and it was canvassed in every way, and a unanimous report was made recommending its passage. It is now on the calendar, so the Post Office Committee has recommended the enactment of this identical provision, and I do not think there is any division of opinion. There is no doubt in my mind that if this commission is given further time it will save many millions in the economic administration of the Postal Service. This is no reflection on the Postal Service at all. The best business houses in the United States are employing men like these that are being employed to suggest improvements in methods and economies—the Steel Corporation, the Westinghouse Co., and many others.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will yield.

Mr. DUNBAR. How long will it take the commission before it finishes this work?

Mr. STEENERSON. I think the engineers may complete it in two or three months, and then the commission, of course, will have to meet and decide upon what recommendations to make.

Mr. DUNBAR. What will be the additional cost?

Mr. STEENERSON. The additional cost of what?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. DUNBAR. What will be the additional cost for the labor of the commission?

Mr. STEENERSON. I am unable to state the additional cost.

Mr. DUNBAR. Does the gentleman know how many are employed by this commission?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; nobody knows, because the number varies from day to day as they are undertaking investigations.

Mr. DUNBAR. Well, approximately how many?

Mr. STEENERSON. Perhaps 20 or 25.

Mr. DUNBAR. Well, under whose direction are they, the Postmaster General?

Mr. STEENERSON. They operate under the commission. Senator TOWNSEND is chairman of the commission, and I have the honor to be the vice chairman. The active chairman is Senator TOWNSEND, of Michigan, and he is looking after it very minutely.

Mr. DUNBAR. And they work under your directions?

Mr. STEENERSON. They work under the direction of this commission. All these are employees of the commission. We also have advisory counsel, consisting of men who are prominent in business in the large cities.

Mr. ROUSE. In the gentleman's remarks will he place the names of this advisory counsel so it will appear in the RECORD?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will place them in the RECORD. It has been changed. Former Secretary of Commerce Redfield was on the advisory counsel for a long time, but he recently resigned; but I can supply the names. They are as follows:

Advisory counsel of the Postal Service Commission: John Gribbel, Philadelphia, Pa., chairman; Charles G. Bancroft, Boston, Mass.; Union N. Bethell, New York, N. Y.; A. Holmboe, Crookston, Minn.; T. W. Dwight, Sioux Falls, S. Dak.; I. C. Wade, Cornelia, Ga.; M. E. Cooley, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman refer to me or to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. BLACK. Perhaps the gentleman from Illinois can give the information. When this commission was created, the law provided that the pay of these engineers and other employees should come out of any unexpended balance of the Post Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1920?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Now, I presume if we give the commission life for another year that that provision will still continue and these employees under the commission will be paid out of any unexpended balance for the fiscal year 1920?

Mr. MADDEN. This provision does not change the law at all.

Mr. BLACK. Can the gentleman give any information as to what is that unexpended balance of the department for the year?

Mr. MADDEN. I have not the slightest idea.

Mr. BLACK. Did the committee inquire what the probable cost would be for the continuance of this commission for another year?

Mr. MADDEN. Nobody could tell exactly, because no one can tell how extensive an investigation along a given line will be; but I wish to say in answer to the question of the gentleman that if they can do the work I think ought to be done by the commission and the results are obtained that I think would be obtained, it would not make any difference how much money they spent, it would be money well spent, but I assume they would not spend over $150,000.

Mr. BLACK. Does not the gentleman think that in a matter of this kind, in the creation of a commission, there ought to be some recommendation of the amount of money that they can spend?

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, if you put a limitation on you may embarrass the work. I apprehend the purpose we have in mind is to facilitate the work; to get the information; to adjust the conditions; to provide for more expeditious movement of the mail; to see that it is handled, dispatched, and transported more rapidly; to see that the first-class mail gets priority, and, in fact, to do everything that can be done to make the Post Office Department function better than it has functioned in the past.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment. After the word "proper," at the end of the Senate amendment, add the following:

Provided, That said commission shall not expend a greater sum than $150,000 during the fiscal year 1922.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] made a preferential motion that the House recede and concur.

Mr. BLACK. Is it not in order to amend the amendment?

The SPEAKER. The motion to recede and concur has preference.

Mr. BLACK. Then I ask that the motion be divided.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to do that. He demands a division. The question is on receding.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLACK to the Senate amendment: After the word "proper," at the end of the amendment, insert: "Provided, That said commission shall not expend a greater sum than $150,000 during the fiscal year 1922."

Mr. MADDEN. I accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Then the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment as amended.

The Senate amendment as amended was agreed to.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 15872, the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will read.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15872) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8, 20, and 35.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 15, 21, and 24, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$379,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$403,600"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "$5,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$18,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,874,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,909,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,400,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments: Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 18, 19, 22, 23, 26, 27, 30, 32, 33, 34, and 36.

JOHN JACOB ROGERS,
J. A. ELSTON,
JNO. H. SMALL,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. C. LODGE,
W. E. BORAH (by H. C. L.),
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15872) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On Nos. 6 and 7: Appropriates $403,600, instead of $378,600, as proposed by the House, and $428,600, as proposed by the Senate, for salaries in the Diplomatic Service.

On No. 8: Strikes out the increase of $180,000, inserted by the Senate, in the appropriation for clerks at embassies and legations.

On No. 15: Reduces from $10,000 to $5,000, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation for the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico.

On Nos. 16 and 17, relating to the International Institute for Agriculture: Appropriates $5,000 for the salary of one member of the permanent committee, instead of $3,000, as proposed by the House, and $7,500, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the appropriations, inserted by the Senate, of $2,500 for a secretary and $2,500 for traveling expenses.

On Nos. 20 and 21: Strikes out the increase of $12,000, proposed by the Senate, in the appropriation for expenses of the International Joint Commission, United States and Great Britain, and inserts the proviso, proposed by the Senate, authorizing expenditures for rent in the District of Columbia if space can not be furnished in other governmental buildings under the control of the Public Buildings Commission.

On Nos. 24 and 25: Inserts a substitute for the language proposed by the Senate and the language proposed by the House, for the acceptance of the gift of the London residence of J.

Pierpont Morgan for use as the residence of the diplomatic representatives of the United States.

On Nos. 28 and 29: Appropriates $1,909,500, instead of $1,809,500, as proposed by the House, and $2,009,500, as proposed by the Senate, for salaries of the Consular Service.

On No. 31: Appropriates $1,400,000, instead of $1,200,000, as proposed by the House, and $1,800,000, as proposed by the Senate, for allowance for clerk hire at United States consulates.

On No. 35: Strikes out the appropriation of $66,000, inserted by the Senate, for relief of the contributors to the Ellen M. Stone ransom fund.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments of the Senate:

On Nos. 1 to 5, inclusive: Providing for an ambassador to Turkey at $17,500 as proposed by the Senate instead of at $10,000 as proposed by the House.

On No. 9: Appropriating $39,500 for salaries of interpreters to embassies and legations.

On No. 10: Appropriating $1,800 for quarters for student interpreters at embassies.

On No. 11: Appropriating $4,500 to pay one year's salary to the widow of Jay White, late consul to Naples, Italy.

On No. 12: Appropriating $4,000 to pay one year's salary to the widow of Edward Higgins, late consul to Bahia, Brazil.

On Nos. 13 and 14: Providing for authority to pay for transporting to their homes the remains of clerks in the Diplomatic and Consular Service who die abroad or in transit.

On No. 18: Appropriating $2,000 for the Bureau of Interparliamentary Union for Promotion of International Arbitration.

On No. 19: Appropriating $25,000 for the United States Section of the Inter-American High Commission.

On No. 22: Appropriating $2,658 for expenses of the International Research Council.

On Nos. 23, 26, and 27: Appropriating $300,000 for the acquisition of embassy, legation, and consular buildings and grounds and creating a commission to supervise the expenditure of that sum.

On No. 30: Appropriating $500,000 for post allowances to diplomatic and consular officers.

On Nos. 32 and 33: Extending indefinitely the provisions of the passport control act of May 22, 1918, in so far as they relate to passports and visés of aliens coming to the United States and making the appropriation for the execution of the act "immediately available."

On No. 34: Appropriating $41,300 for expenses of embassies, legations, or consular offices, not otherwise provided for in the bill.

On No. 36: Appropriating $7,425 for expenses of the Sixteenth International Congress against Alcoholism.

JOHN JACOB ROGERS,
J. A. ELSTON,
JNO. H. SMALL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition to curtail discussion of the conference report, but I think there is not anything within the report itself which is likely to excite very much discussion. And while I shall be glad to yield to any questions, I propose to move the previous question at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not read the report. Does the gentleman agree to the Senate amendment which was under discussion when the bill was before the House a few days ago?

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker, what is the idea of rushing it through without any discussion at all?

Mr. ROGERS. There is no idea, as I just explained. If the gentleman has any questions to ask I shall be pleased to answer them. I assumed that the comments of the Members would more naturally arise in connection with matters on which a separate vote is required under the rules of the House. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to hear the gentleman from where I sat. What is the conference report? Will my colleague tell me? Is it on the passport bill?

Mr. ROGERS. The conference report deals only with the items as to which the conferees have power to agree. The passport item, to which the gentleman refers, will be presented for a separate vote a little later.

Mr. MASON. Thank you.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first five amendments may be reported and considered together. They relate entirely to one specific question, and they more naturally should be considered en bloc.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the first five Senate amendments be read and considered together. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 1: Page 2, line 4, strike out the word "and" before the word "Spain."

Amendment No. 2: Insert, after the word "Spain," line 4, page 2, the words "and Turkey."

Amendment No. 3: Page 2, line 5, strike out "$210,000" and insert "$227,500."

Amendment No. 4: Page 2, line 7, strike out the language: "For ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to Turkey, $10,000."

Amendment No. 5: Page 2, line 25, strike out "$566,000" and insert "$583,500."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede from the House disagreement to the five Senate amendments, and agree to the same. I will say in explanation that when this bill passed the House it provided a salary of $10,000 for our ambassador to Turkey. All our other ambassadors receive a salary of $17,500, and ever since an embassy was created in Turkey that ambassador has received a salary of $17,500. As in the view of the Senate, the salaries of all ambassadors should be made uniform, the Senate adopted the amendments which have just been reported and which reestablish the salary at $17,500.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is the total in the bill as it passed the House wrong, or is the total in the bill as it passed the Senate wrong? They do not jibe. The gentleman adds $7,500 by way of appropriation. The total adds $17,500. Of course, it is not important, but we might as well be accurate.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. They did not have Turkey in there at all in the first item.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am not speaking of the first item. I am speaking of the total at the bottom of the page—amendment No. 5.

Mr. ROGERS. I think the gentleman's point is entirely sound, and I suspect that the correct figure is $573,500 instead of $583,500.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman can move to concur in all the Senate amendments with an amendment to amendment No. 5.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the first four amendments and to concur with an amendment to Senate amendment No. 5, so that the figures will be "$573,500" instead of "$583,500."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to concur in the first four amendments and to concur with an amendment to Senate amendment No. 5, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 5: Strike out "$583,500" and insert "$573,500."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the five amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 9: Page 4, after line 9, insert:

"SALARIES, INTERPRETERS TO EMBASSIES AND LEGATIONS.

"Interpreter to legation and consulate general to Persia, $2,000;

"Interpreter to legation and consulate general to Bangkok, Siam, $2,000;

"For 10 student interpreters at the legation to China, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the Chinese language with a view to supplying interpreters to the legation and consulates in China, at $1,500 each, $15,000: Provided, That the method of selecting said student interpreters shall be nonpartisan: And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as an interpreter at the legation or consulates in China so long as his services may be required within a period of five years;

"For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters in China, at the rate of $350 per annum each, $3,500;

"For six student interpreters at the embassy to Japan, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the Japanese language with a view to supplying interpreters to the embassy and consulates in Japan, at $1,500 each, $9,000: Provided, That the method of selecting said student interpreters shall be nonpartisan: And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as an interpreter at the embassy or consulates in Japan so long as his services may be required within a period of five years;

"For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters at the embassy to Japan, at the rate of $200 per annum each, $1,200;

"For four student interpreters at the embassy to Turkey, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the language of Turkey and any other language that may be necessary to qualify them for service as interpreters to the embassy and consulates in Turkey, at $1,500 each, $6,000: Provided, That the method of selecting said student interpreters shall be nonpartisan: And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as an interpreter to the embassy and consulates in Turkey so long as his services may be required within a period of five years;

"For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters at the embassy to Turkey, at the rate of $200 per annum each, $800;

"No person drawing the salary of interpreter or student interpreter as above provided shall be allowed any part of the salary appropriated for any secretary of legation or other officer;

"Total, $39,500."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. This is simply the restoration of items that went out in the House on points of order?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the proportion of the amendments brought back under the rule seems rather large; but the fact is that 13 of the 22 amendments brought back under the rule result from the fact that on technical points of order items which were essential to the foreign service and which had been carried for many years in the bill went out in the House. We are attempting in this indirect way to restore the havoc that was wrought. I move the previous question on the amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, that the House recede and concur.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 1.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees. As many as favor the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the House recede and concur will answer "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will answer "nay." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 317, nays 4, answered "present" 1, not voting 106, as follows:

So the motion to recede and concur was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Mr. COSTELLO with Mr. HAMILL.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan with Mr. EVANS of Nevada.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts with Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. KAHN with Mr. DENT.

Mr. YATES with Mr. RUBEY.

Mr. WILLIAMS with Mr. KITCHIN.

Mr. BUTLER with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. GOODALL with Mr. MANN of South Carolina.

Mr. HILL with Mr. STEVENSON.

Mr. RAMSEY with Mr. HOLLAND.

Mr. MOTT with Mr. LESHER.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea." I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. BANKHEAD, so I wish to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 10: Page 6, in line 12, insert:

"QUARTERS FOR STUDENT INTERPRETERS AT EMBASSIES.

"For rent of quarters for the student interpreters attached to the embassy to Japan, $1,200.

"For rent of quarters for the student interpreters attached to the embassy to Turkey, $600.

"Total, $1,800."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede from the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment and concur in the same.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I call the attention of the gentleman to the typographical error in line 13 in the misspelling of the word "attached." I think the gentleman would like to have that corrected.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent that the typographical error in line 13 be corrected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that it is correct in the engrossed copy.

Mr. ROGERS. I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of getting a record of it, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 153, noes 1.

Accordingly the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 11: Page 9, line 19, insert:

"PAYMENT TO MRS. ANNA GALE WHITE.

"To Mrs. Anna Gale White, widow of Jay White, late consul to Naples, Italy, $4,500, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty from illness incurred in the Consular Service."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is it the policy now to pay the widow of a diplomatic or consular officer who dies in the service a year's salary?

Mr. ROGERS. It is not the settled policy. The gratuity, if you care to call it that, has been reserved for cases of real want, established in the given case. I am advised by the Department of State and through personal friends of the widow in this particular case that really straitened circumstances exist. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion that the House recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 12: Page 10, line 1, insert:

"PAYMENT TO MRS. MARY A. HIGGINS.

"To Mrs. Mary A. Higgins, widow of Edward Higgins, late consul to Bahia, Brazil, $4,000, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty from illness incurred in the Consular Service."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 13: Page 10, line 7, after the word "assistants," insert "and clerks."

Mr. ROGERS. I move to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 14: Page 10, line 11, after the word "assistants," insert "and clerks."

Mr. ROGERS. I move to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 18: Page 16, line 1, insert:

"BUREAU OF INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION FOR PROMOTION OF INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

"For the contribution of the United States toward the maintenance of the Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union for the promotion of International Arbitration at Brussels, Belgium, $2,000."

Mr. ROGERS. I move to recede and concur.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is this the Mexican-boundary amendment?

Mr. ROGERS. No; this is the Interparliamentary Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 19: Page 18, line 1, insert:

"UNITED STATES SECTION OF THE INTER-AMERICAN HIGH COMMISSION.

"To defray the actual and necessary expenses on the part of the United States section of the Inter-American High Commission, $25,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State."

Mr. ROGERS. I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 22: Page 19, line 22, insert:

"INTERNATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL.

"To pay the annual share of the United States, as an adhering member of the International Research Council and of the Associated Unions, organized at Brussels, July 18–28, 1919, as follows: International Research Council, $129; International Astronomical Union, $772; International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry, $290; International Union of Geodesy and Geophysics, $1,338; International Union of Mathematics, $129; in all, $2,658, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State."

Mr. ROGERS. I move to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendments 23, 26, and 27 be reported and considered together, they being a unit in their effect.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that amendments 23, 26, and 27 be considered together. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Reserving the right to object, what are these amendments?

Mr. ROGERS. They are three amendments that relate to the acquisition of buildings for legations, embassies, and consulates.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Does one of these amendments relate to the Morgan home in London?

Mr. ROGERS. The Morgan home is disposed of by the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I object.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask that the Clerk report amendment No. 23.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 23: Page 21, line 9, strike out the words "legation building and grounds at San Salvador."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the acquisition of embassy, legation, or consular buildings and grounds at any or all of the following places: Rome, Brussels, Berlin, Christiania, Athens, Belgrade, Bucharest, Prague, Monrovia, Vienna, Budapest, Canton, Hankow, and Amoy, $300,000: Provided, That the limit of cost shall not exceed the sum of $150,000 at any one place; And provided further, That such acquisition shall be subject to approval of the commission hereinafter constituted.

There is hereby constituted a commission composed of the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of the Treasury, of which the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate shall be the chairman, whose duty it shall be to consider and formulate plans or proposals for the purchase of embassy, legation, and consular buildings and grounds under the authority contained in this act.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend.

Mr. ROGERS. I make the point of order that my motion is preferential.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman's motion may be divided.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks a division of the question. The question is on the motion to recede.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Now I move to amend the Senate amendment by striking out "$300,000" and inserting "$450,000."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LINTHICUM moves to amend the Senate amendment, in line 5 of the matter proposed by the Senate, by striking out the figures "$300,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$450,000."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$450,000" and inserting "$200,000."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MANN of Illinois offers an amendment to the amendment by striking out "$450,000" and inserting "$200,000."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I shall need the whole five minutes, but I do want to impress on the House that if there ever was a time in the history of this country and of the world when we had an opportunity to buy at a reasonable rate homes for embassies and consulates, now is that time. It was testified at the hearings that the mission in Berlin—and, in fact, I received a letter from the chairman of that mission that the embassy which formerly cost the Austrian Government $1,500,000, $750,000 for the purchase of the property and $750,000 for repairs, reconstruction, and changes—could now be bought for $75,000. I visited Berlin last year, I visited Prague, and I visited Vienna, and went into these matters fully with those in authority. If there ever was a time when we could procure property at a reasonable rate, now is the time to do it. I was greatly impressed and would love to sufficiently impress you with its importance. If we wait two or three years we will pay three or four times as much as we will have to pay now. With $450,000 in Europe at the present rate of exchange we can almost get embassy buildings in Paris, Vienna, Prague, and all other capitals in Europe, having already provided for Paris and London. It is the best investment the Government could possibly make. I feel satisfied from my visit there that if you purchase even from a speculative standpoint it will be a wonderful investment. I do not want to say anything more except that now is the time to purchase embassies there. I have personally inspected it. I have visited those embassies, and have seen the great opportunity that is offered to this Government.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What will it require to maintain the million and a half dollar building that the gentleman speaks of in normal times if normal times are reestablished?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I should think not as much as it costs to maintain the building that you are occupying at the present time in Wilhelm Platz in Berlin.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That does not answer my question, for I do not know how much we are paying for that.

Mr. LINTHICUM. It will not cost anywhere near what it costs at present for the building we are renting which I mentioned. Certainly not more.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If the building cost a million and a half dollars it must be a very elaborate building, better than we would care to construct. If we could get it for $75,000 that would not mean that it would not be a great expense in normal times.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I saw the property we are now occupying in Wilhelm Platz and the cost of maintaining this building would not be as much as it costs to rent and maintain the building we are now occupying. I think it is a wonderful chance to purchase property.

Mr. PELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. PELL. Would not the adoption of the gentleman's amendment increase the number of places to which a comparatively poor man could be sent as a representative of the United States?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes; that has been the trouble in the past, it was impossible to send a man as ambassador to these capitals who was not rich because the salary and allowances are too small to maintain him with the dignity and standing of our country under present conditions. Wealth must necessarily prevail no matter how brainy a man with inadequate means might be.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I did not make a point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland. I do not know whether it was subject to the point of order or not, but I am inclined to think it was. We have a law which provides in reference to making appropriations for the purchase of diplomatic and consular buildings abroad. That law says that not more than $500,000 can be expended in any one year. Now, this bill already carries $150,000 for an embassy building in Paris. The gentleman's amendment proposes to add $450,000 to that, making a total of at least $600,000, when under the law it can not be expended.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Congress made the law, did it not?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Congress made the law which governs the expenditure of money for the purchase of embassy buildings, and it says that the Government shall not expend more than $500,000 in any one year. We may appropriate more money, but the law is not repealed, the law is not changed, and the Department of State can not expend it. What is the use of appropriating it?

Mr. LINTHICUM. This is a subsequent law to the other.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is a mere appropriation. We can appropriate a billion dollars, perhaps, but the law says that the Secretary of State or the State Department or the Government shall not expend more than $500,000 in any one year for this purpose. To appropriate more money is idle, although that is not the only reason I am opposed to it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I did not think so.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; I have not yet gone plumb crazy on the subject.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I think I can state with some confidence that the Senate amendment was limited to $300,000 for the precise reason suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. There is a separate provision of $150,000 for Paris carried in this bill. The Paris item and this, combined, appropriate $450,000. In the face of the Lowden Act it seemed inadvisable to attempt to exceed the $500,000, whether it would have been valid or not to do so.

I quite agree with what the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] has said as to the extraordinary opportunity that is now presented to the country to acquire embassies, legations, and consulates abroad. We pay in rent for the offices of our ministers something like $150,000 a year, much of which can be saved by the adoption of this amendment, all of which can perhaps be saved by continuing the program which is inaugurated in this amendment. The question of exchange has never been so favorable to any country as it is to the United States to-day. A dollar of American money will go as far as $50 or even $100 in purchasing property of this kind in some of the principal capitals of the world.

In addition to that, many countries owe us large sums of money. We expect them to pay and we believe that they will pay; but I assume there is no doubt that there will be a considerable lapse of time before some of them will be physically able to pay in full. We believe those countries will be delighted to turn over to the United States a suitable embassy building or legation building or consulate building in exchange for a credit upon their debt of the fair purchase price of that property, not to exceed $150,000. We thought there ought to be some money available for certain countries that do not owe us. It will be noticed that in the list of authorized cities appears Christiania, where we should have a suitable building. Norway is not in the debt of the United States, but we should acquire a legation in her capital city.

I hope that the House will disagree to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] the effect of which would be to reduce the available amount from $300,000 to $200,000. Three hundred thousand dollars spent at this time and in this way will bring us an enormous return upon the investment. I think that the utility of the measure will be considerably impaired if there is a reduction such as proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield three minutes more to me?

Mr. ROGERS. Has the gentleman something further to submit?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I have.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I want to say, as to the Lowden Act, that this is an entirely new proposition, and it seems to me that whatever law we pass to-day not in accord with the Lowden Act will supersede that act in so far as the purchase of embassies is concerned. If gentlemen will notice, the bill establishes a commission and provides that such acquisition shall be subject to the approval of the commission herein created. In other words, we constitute a commission which shall purchase those embassies, and no embassy can be purchased without the sanction of the commission. It is an entirely new proposition. Congress enacted the Lowden Act and Congress can supersede the Lowden Act by the new legislation.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LINTHICUM) there were—ayes 12, noes 131.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 27: Page 23, line 8, insert the following:
"With the approval of said commission and within a limit of cost at any one place of $150,000, the Secretary of State shall have power to purchase from any foreign Government suitable embassy, legation, and consular buildings and grounds in any city specified in the foregoing paragraph and to effect payment therefor by causing the purchase price thereof to be credited upon the obligations or debts of such Government then held by or owing to the United States, or by causing a part of such purchase price so to be credited, paying the remainder in money from applicable sums hereinbefore appropriated for the acquisition of embassy, legation, and consular buildings and grounds; and when the Secretary of State shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that a purchase has been made, the Government from which made, and that a part or all of the purchase price is to be paid by crediting the same upon obligations or debts of said Government then held by or owing to the United States, the date as of which said payment is to be made and the amount in United States dollars so to be credited, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to credit the amount so certified upon unpaid principal or interest of obligations or debts of said foreign Government held by the United States: And provided further, That the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to accept on behalf of the United States unconditional gifts of land, buildings, furniture, and furnishings, or any of them, for the use of diplomatic and consular offices and residences."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede from the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment and concur in the same with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ROGERS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 27, and agree to the same with the following amendment: Strike out line 4 of the matter inserted by said amendment and all of line 5 of said matter up to and including the word "paragraph," and in lieu thereof insert the following: "Suitable buildings or buildings and grounds for embassy, legation, and consular purposes, separate or combined, in any city specified in connection with the foregoing appropriation of $500,000."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the reference in the amendment as sent to the Clerk's desk is to the printed copy of the Senate amendments; but in the bill which is in the hands of Members it applies to lines 11 and 12 of page 23. The principal effect of the amendment is to take care of an erroneous reference to the words "the foregoing paragraph," which appears in the text.

The reference to "the foregoing paragraph" was correct as the bill was originally prepared; but a new paragraph was created, so that the reference should now be to the paragraph prior to the preceding paragraph.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that a proposition like that involved in these two amendments ought to go through the House without any explanation of them at all. This bill creates a new executive commission, composed of Members of the legislative bodies. I have never been enthusiastic about creating any commission of Congress to do executive or administrative work. I think the executive and legislative authorities ought to be in separate hands. One of the amendments has already been agreed to, the one creating a new commission, consisting of the chairman and the ranking minority members of the two Foreign Affairs and Foreign Relations Committees of the House and Senate, to make plans with reference to public buildings, to buy public buildings abroad, make any sort of trade they want to without even so far, as I now recall, as making a report to anybody on earth.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will.

Mr. RAYBURN. I want to know what the gentleman from Illinois thinks about the policy of the United States Government, beginning at this early date, being paid by the Governments that owe it by these chips and whetstones that they bring in here? Does not the gentleman think that it would be much better policy for the United States Government to allow the Governments that owe us to pay the money and then pay the money out for anything we want to buy in those countries?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I think it is a very great lack of dignity on the part of a great Government like ours, which has immense sums of money due us from other Governments, to try to dicker with them as to whether they will get $150,000 or $50,000 to be paid out of the millions and hundreds of millions due us. I think it is beneath our dignity. [Applause.] If anybody is going to do it at all, I do not think the dickering ought to be done by a portion of the legislative branch of the Government composed into an executive commission. I do not think it ought to pass without some statement made in its behalf on the floor of the House, as it is such an unusual thing to come before us.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad, in compliance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], to offer an explanation of the viewpoint of the conferees in presenting the motion in reference to this Senate amendment that the House recede and concur with only a technical amendment. The Senate amendment originated with a Member of this body. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER], chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, has introduced a bill which is almost identical with this amendment. Members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs have deemed this a suitable piece of legislation, although I am not aware that they have taken any formal action as a committee. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggests, forcibly, as his suggestions always are forcible, that it is not desirable for a committee of Congress to be involved in an undertaking of this nature.

This was the viewpoint of gentlemen of the House who are interested in this proposal: The House of Representatives has always been reluctant to bestow upon the Secretary of State or any other individual any considerable degree of authority to buy embassies or legations. The House of Representatives has repeatedly expressed the opinion, both in debate and by vote, that the Congress should retain control of these expenditures; that we should not appropriate a blanket sum, $200,000, $300,000, or $500,000, and turn it over to the Department of State to do what it likes with it in the acquisition of these properties. It is not material at this moment whether or not that viewpoint is correct; but I think it has been the declared viewpoint of the House of Representatives. In drawing up this amendment it seemed to us that it would be a proper thing and a safeguarding thing if we should provide that any action taken by the Secretary of State on these matters should be subject to the control and subject to a veto of a commission of which more than half the membership was made up of Members of the Senate and House of Representatives.

You will notice the language of the proposal that is now pending, "With the approval of said commission and within a limit of cost at any one place of $150,000, the Secretary of State shall have power to purchase from any foreign Government," and so forth, these suitable buildings. That commission is to be made up of six members. The chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations is the chairman of the commission. The ranking minority member is the second member. The chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs is the third member, and the ranking minority member of the same committee is the fourth member. The Secretary of State is added to it, and because the transaction involves the assets of the United States the Secretary of the Treasury is also made a member of the commission. Four out of the six are members of one or the other Houses of Congress. We thought that this proposal would be approved by the House and that it was free from substantial objection. The Secretary of State will have the duty of negotiating. He will bring back a report to this commission who will say "yes" or "no." The actual negotiations will inevitably and properly be in the hands of the Secretary of State, but Members of Congress will control and will determine whether the decision of the Secretary of State shall prevail.

Mr. GARRETT and Mr. CONNALLY rose.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield first to the gentleman from Texas, who was on his feet.

Mr. CONNALLY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts this. On page 24 the Senate amendment contains this language:

Provided further, That the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to accept in behalf of the United States unconditional gifts of land, buildings, furniture, and furnishings, or any of them, for the use of diplomatic and consular offices and residences.

Is not the Government able to buy furnishings and furniture? And why does the committee have to agree to an amendment of that kind?

Mr. ROGERS. The Government, of course, is able to buy furniture, but the gentleman from Texas knows perfectly well that this very Capitol Building is filled with objects of art and decoration which were donated by patriotic citizens. Now, is it sensible, before a beautiful vase, such as stands in the Speaker's lobby here, can be accepted as a part of the furnishings of some public building, that the Congress must pass upon and authorize that individual gift?

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman is putting a rather large area in his question. I would say that the amendment certainly covers a large ground in accepting gifts and——

Mr. ROGERS. I am frank to say that I regard that last proviso as not an essential part of this amendment. But I do not see any danger involved in putting the authority in the hands of the President of the United States.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. On page 23 it reads:

With the approval of said commission and within a limit of cost at any one place of $150,000 the Secretary of State shall have power to purchase from any foreign Government suitable embassy, legation, and consular buildings and grounds in any city specified in the foregoing paragraph and to effect payment therefor by causing the purchase price thereof to be credited upon the obligations or debts of such Government then held by or owing to the United States.

And so on. Is it intended that the right to purchase shall be limited to a purchase from the foreign Government?

Mr. ROGERS. Is it intended that this sort of transaction should be possible? Suppose in the city of Berlin the Austro-Hungarian Government owned in years past an embassy. Germany, we will assume, does not owe us money. Austro-Hungary, we will assume, does owe us money. This language is intended to permit the acquisition from Austria of that building in Berlin.

Mr. GARRETT. Well, the power to purchase would be confined under this to purchase from a Government?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; under this language. The $300,000 dealt with in amendment 26, of course, would have no such limitation.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROGERS. I yield.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I want to say to the gentleman that I see on page 11 where the conference committee struck out the $10,000 from the bill and substituted $5,000 for the protection of the Mexican boundary. I want to know if the gentleman's committee is willing to assume the responsibility of destroying that commission?

Mr. ROGERS. It does not destroy the commission.

Mr. HUDSPETH. It absolutely does. You can not finance the same for $5,000.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CONNALLY. I would like if the gentleman would yield to my colleague from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. I would like three minutes.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have been of the opinion for some time that the countries that owe us money would start in in some way to pay that money to us and relieve themselves of that obligation in a way that would not benefit us, but I had no idea that a monstrous proposition like this would find any support here or elsewhere. I want to warn the Members of this House at this time and to let them understand the sea upon which they are embarking by adopting such amendments as this. To think of the great Government of the United States accepting in payment of the obligations due it from other Governments a dicker for a piece of real estate in the capitals of some of these countries. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that if I ever saw a proposition in my life that was beneath the dignity of a great Government like this, this amendment 27 entirely covers it. They will want to be selling us some barren island somewhere for an immense sum to cover the obligations that they now owe us. This is the entering wedge, and I want this House to understand that when it votes upon this question.

Listen to the amendment that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] called attention to:

And provided further, That the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to accept on behalf of the United States unconditional gifts—

Not of paintings, not of vases, not of little matters like that, but of lands and buildings. I never in all my life saw such an opportunity for the humiliation of a great Government as is contained in this amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas is getting very much excited over a creation of his own imagination. It has been habitual on the part of the United States Congress to authorize the acceptance of gifts. I have some of the precedents in my hand. We occupy a legation at Bangkok that was presented to us by the Emperor of Siam. We occupy a building in Morocco that was presented to us by the Emperor of Morocco. We occupy a consulate in Tahiti that was presented to us by the reigning queen of the islands. If it is true that in the past we deemed it proper to accept gifts from potentates, why is it ignominious now for us to accept gifts from American citizens who, in the opinion of the President of the United States, seek to present to us objects which it is desirable for the United States to possess? Time and time again within my brief service in the House we have authorized the acceptance of gifts of various kinds and of great value. We have authorized the acceptance of gifts as sites for the manufacture of armor; we have authorized the acceptance of aviation sites, of mobilization sites, of nitrate-plant sites, of various gifts to the United States Navy, including just the sort of thing that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] alluded to. We have authorized the acceptance of gifts of horses for breeding purposes, the acceptance of land for hatchery purposes, the acceptance of buildings in the District of Columbia for housing purposes, the acceptance of gifts for rifle ranges, and gifts from various memorial associations. I will put in the RECORD a list of these recent statutes, where we have authorized in blanket terms acceptance of gifts of these various kinds.

The legation property in Bangkok was presented to us in 1884 by the King of Siam, and its exchange for other property owned by the Siamese Government was only recently authorized by Congress. The consular property in Tahiti was a gift from the reigning queen.

The new legation in Salvador is erected upon land presented by that Government and accepted by the President under the authority of the act of Congress approved April 15, 1918.

Instances where Congress has authorized the acceptance of gifts from individual citizens are very numerous. Some of them are here enumerated:

Sites for manufacture of armor. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 563.)
Aviation sites. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 622; June 15, 1917, 40 Stat., 182; July 27, 1917, 40 Stat., 247.)
Mobilization sites. (Act Aug. 29, 1916, 39 Stat., 623.)
Nitrate-plant sites. (Act June 3, 1916, 39 Stat., 215.)
Gifts to Navy. (Act May 20, 1908, 35 Stat., 171.)
Horses for breeding purposes. (41 Stat., 962.)
Expenses of land for hatchery to be given by individual named in the act. (39 Stat., 431.)
Buildings in the District of Columbia for housing purposes. (40 Stat., 550.)
Gifts for rifle ranges. (36 Stat., 1457.)
Land to be given by Memorial Association of Georgia. (39 Stat., 901.)
One hundred and twenty-five acres, premises at Guilford Court House. (39 Stat., 997.)
Authorization to receive gifts of land. (36 Stat., 964.)
Gift from Lincoln Farm Association of birthplace of Lincoln and $60,000 for its maintenance. (39 Stat., 385.)
Land for cemeterial purposes. (36 Stat., 1077.)
Constitution Island. (35 Stat., 1166.)
Land near Fort Missoula. (33 Stat., 142.)

It is the rule to do under authority of Congress exactly what this amendment proposes to do. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] froths at the mouth over this practice. Why, it is not a new thing. It is just as old as Congress itself. And the committee of conference in recommending this language is simply recognizing the practice that has prevailed ever since the United States was a government.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROGERS. I yield.

Mr. BEE. Has the gentleman from Massachusetts any precedents for accepting in lieu of a debt a piece of land from a foreign Government?

Mr. ROGERS. That is a very different question, and that is not the question to which I was addressing myself.

Mr. BEE. That is involved in this amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Oh, no.

Mr. BEE. Is this to be the forerunner of the way they can cancel the debts they owe the United States hereafter?

Mr. ROGERS. Oh, no; my personal viewpoint is that the foreign Governments concerned will be very glad to show their good faith in the matter of these debts by turning over to us a suitable building where we can be permanently housed. It will be a business transaction involving not exceeding $150,000 in any one place. It will have no bearing whatever upon the general collection of the debts. I may say to the gentleman that I am just as much in favor of the United States collecting those debts promptly as he can be. But this is a method by which we can get something of value without imperiling or in any way affecting the opportunity to collect the debts or impairing the general international relationships of the United States.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Is not the United States of America amply able to buy this land without dickering with the foreign countries to get a credit on a debt?

Mr. ROGERS. Of course it is; but when that Government owes us something why not collect the debt as best we can? When a man owes the gentleman from Texas something, if the man is not prepared to pay at once he may make an arrangement with the gentleman from Texas to pay in kind something that the gentleman from Texas desires.

Mr. BEE. I will promise the gentleman from Massachusetts that if they pay me in kind, I will get a profit in the kind if they do not pay me the cash. [Applause.]

Mr. ROGERS. This is a liberal proposition, so far as the United States is concerned.

Mr. BEE. Are we trying to make a profit?

Mr. ROGERS. The American dollar in certain countries is now worth anywhere from ten to fifty times as much as it was worth in normal times.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. In addition to the three instances which the gentleman enumerated where the foreign Governments have made donations, is the gentleman able to find anywhere instances where we have made gifts?

Mr. ROGERS. I was citing those instances where donations of sites of embassies, legations, or consulates have been made to us by foreign rulers. I might also cite similar cases in Japan and China.

Mr. RAKER. Does not the gentleman make a distinction between sites for rivers and harbors and other public works and gifts by foreign countries to our ambassadors and consuls abroad if they are accepted by the President? Does he not make a distinction there?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Does it not look bad to permit these officers to ask the President to allow them to accept furniture and furnishings for these buildings abroad? Does not the gentleman think it is a dangerous precedent to allow even the President, on behalf of these various foreign offices, to accept these gifts of furniture and furnishings?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not think so. Of course, foreign Governments are not going to give away very much to the United States. There will be cases where American citizens may desire to make these gifts.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I wish to say, if the gentleman will permit, that while I can not give my approval to the form of this amendment, and while I think the method of purchasing embassies by offsets of debts is rather undignified, certainly indelicate, yet this matter of providing buildings for our service abroad is a duty which our Government has too long postponed. I congratulate the House that we have now some opportunity for the acquisition of quarters for our foreign representatives. Heretofore, with few exceptions, only wealthy men could represent the Nation abroad. This practice is a negation of our democracy. We should not function as a democracy at home and a plutocracy abroad. [Applause.] Therefore, I shall vote for almost any measure that looks to the accomplishment of the object that the committee seems to have in view. [Applause.]

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The gentleman from Massachusetts moves the previous question.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield me two or three minutes before he moves the previous question?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes. I yield to the gentleman three minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws his motion for the previous question, and yields to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] three minutes.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, of course, this amendment No. 27 ought not to pass. No part of it should pass. The part of it before the proviso will place the country in the indelicate and unfortunate involvement which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] has so forcefully pointed out. The proviso gives a blanket authority to the President of the United States in his discretion to accept unconditional gifts of land and buildings and furniture and furnishings.

That is not a desirable thing to do. Accept gifts from whom? I do not believe they ought to be accepted from anybody. [Applause.] I think it is extremely unfortunate that this House ever agreed to the acceptance of this Morgan house at London. [Applause.] It is a humiliation to this country. [Applause.]

I concur in the thoughts expressed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] that, within reason, this country ought to own homes for its diplomatic representatives abroad. That is true, I think, within reason, and moving along proper lines and dealing with each condition as it arises. But have we come to the point where this Nation is willing to say, "We will not buy, but we will accept as a gift from a nation, or from Tom, Dick, or Harry, land and houses in which to shelter those who represent our sovereignty abroad"?

Oh, gentlemen, we ought not to agree to this. We ought to disagree to this amendment, and then we ought to reconsider the section immediately before it, and let this go back to conference and let these gentlemen work out something that will be in accord with the dignity and the fine traditions of this Republic. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SMALL rose.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to concur with the criticisms made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] of this amendment, but it seems impossible to do so. The proposed amendment is very simple. It authorizes us to purchase quarters for embassies and legations and consulates from Governments, and have the same credited upon an indebtedness to us.

Gentlemen say it is undignified. We loaned our credit to those Governments who owe these amounts to us, and they expended it for foodstuffs and grain and clothing and munitions. And yet it is now said to be undignified that we shall accept in part payment a building and grounds for the use of our Diplomatic Service and have that part payment credited upon the obligation. Why have we become suddenly so supersensitive upon this question? For 20 years I have heard gentlemen in this House advocate the plain duty of Congress to provide suitable quarters for our legations and embassies. I recall notably the efforts of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] on that subject. But Congress has failed to discharge its duty, with the result, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] points out, that the appointments to most of our important diplomatic posts are restricted to men of wealth, because the salaries which we pay them will not permit poor men to represent this great Government. It seems to me it is stretching the point of dignity too far to complain at this moment that we can not accept from another Government in part payment of a valid obligation the purchase price of a suitable embassy or legation.

As to the proviso authorizing the President to accept gifts, gentlemen say that it is a dangerous proviso. In what respect is it dangerous? In the first place no citizen is going to offer us any property, and no Government is going to offer us any property except it be done in a punctilious way that complies with all the laws and obligations of international courtesy. If perchance there should be any impropriety connected with its acceptance, have we ever had a President or a Secretary of State who would not observe the proprieties and protect the dignity of the United States? And if such a gift is offered us under the laws of propriety and courtesy, are we going to act to the contrary in declining to accept a gift of that kind? No similar gift which has heretofore been offered to the United States by any individual or Government has been refused by Congress. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] three minutes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, in ordinary times, when we did not have to question the expenditure of money, because of a great debt and high taxes, we did not appropriate sufficient sums to buy embassies abroad. If we did not do it then, we are surely not going to do it now, with the Treasury in its present depleted condition. However, in this time of stress we may be able to credit upon the indebtedness owing to us by foreign nations amounts which will enable us to buy suitable embassies. Gentlemen say that is undignified, if not indelicate. Why undignified? We are doing favors to nations embarrassed, to nations not in a position to pay in money, to nations which want to maintain their credit and good faith, to nations which want to discharge their debts and are willing to give that which is of greater value to us than money itself at the present moment. Why then should it not be done?

Only a couple of years ago we paid $20,000,000 for some islands down in the Caribbean, to protect the Panama Canal. Suppose that Denmark had owed us that amount and suppose we had credited it upon that indebtedness, at a time when Denmark was not ready to pay. Where is the gentleman who will say that that would not have been a wise, a good, and a proper transaction?

Then we hear it suggested, let me say in answer to the gentleman from Texas, that we may have some barren islands thrust upon us to apply upon these debts. Only a few days ago we heard it suggested that the British West Indies, such as Jamaica, might be transferred in part payment of the debt of Great Britain to us. Well, will the gentleman say that that complete protection to the Panama Canal, that insuring its being guarded for all time, that safeguarding our interests in this way would not be a wise and a statesmanlike thing to do?

So I think there can be no question about the advisability of such transactions.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Does not the gentleman distinguish between the purchase of sovereignty over territory and the matter of having given to us by some foreign nation the home in which our diplomatic representatives are housed?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do, indeed, and I say to the gentleman in answer to that suggestion what has been said by the chairman of this subcommittee, that that is a minor and small part of this section, and when the gentleman stops to think of it I do not believe he will consider that of serious consequence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I should like one or two minutes more.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman from Tennessee well knows that that is meant not so much to meet such small gifts as may come to us from foreigners, but that wealthy Americans who are traveling abroad will often see the opportunity to present something of interest or historic value to their country and desire to avail themselves of it. Why, only a day or two ago I wandered into a room in the Army and Navy Club, and there I found all of the belongings of Capt. Culver, a captain in the Navy who recently died. His belongings were assembled in that room in memory of him, and such things and only such things, not of great moment, not of sufficient importance to dignify them by becoming apprehensive of evil results, are the things that are contemplated, and they are the only things that will result or come out of this provision.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. If it is merely a matter of personal belongings why does it say lands and buildings?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It means that to any man who exercises just ordinary common sense.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield to me three minutes?

Mr. ROGERS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois three minutes.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to add to what has been said by the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Texas a note of warning in regard to this trading and dickering upon the amount of money that is owing to the United States. First of all, I am opposed, and I think it is a great mistake, to be accepting presents. I think that when we bought the strip of land in Panama and made it American territory we did the wisest thing, although the strip of land had been promised to us as a gift.

So I am opposed to accepting presents, and particularly opposed to crediting it on the amount of money due to this Government by other Governments. That money is due. We are not asking them for the money; let them give us their notes; let us be able to liquidate and make liquid assets out of those notes. If you start in the entering wedge, you know the propaganda that is started in this country, and if you do not, you ought to—eventually we will dicker and deal back and forth until distinguished peace Christian statesmen have their way, who are willing to be generous with other people's money and allow us to forget and forgive.

If this proposition which is the entering wedge means anything, it means that some great nation that owes us two or three billion dollars can begin negotiations; they will tender us $50,000 worth of some islands to withhold the final settlement. In other words, you remember what I say when I am through, you young men who are here, they will be offering you from day to day, from time to time, two bananas as partial payment for a billion dollars due, and while you are considering the question of whether you are going to take that partial payment the debt will go on, and your constituents and mine will continue to pay the interest on the debt that that Government owes us. I am opposed to the amendment for the reason suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Let them give us their notes and let us buy and pay for what we get. [Applause.]

Mr. ROGERS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, as a general rule I have the highest opinion of my friends, the gentleman from Tennessee, and the gentleman from Texas, but in this case I think they are making a mountain out of a molehill. This is nothing new; it is the usual thing. We have acquired embassies by gift for many years. In some countries you can not buy embassies. You can not buy property in Japan, and we have an embassy there by gift from the Japanese Government.

There is one thing foreign governments who owe us money can not do now, and that is to pay us in cash. They not only can not pay the principal, but they can not pay a cent of interest. We are not putting ourselves under obligations to those nations by permitting them to pay the equivalent in real estate. We are putting them under obligations to us, and I can not see any possible reason, nor does it derogate from our dignity as a Nation, to permit the settlement of some of those debts by accepting the thing we need, to wit, land and buildings in the capitals of other countries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on receding and concurring with an amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division of the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas demands a division of the motion, and the question is on the motion to recede.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on concurring in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAYBURN) there were 123 ayes and 58 noes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and six Members present; not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 204, nays 120, answered "present" 2, not voting 102, as follows:

So the motion to recede and concur in the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois with Mr. POU.

Mr. HARRELD with Mr. FERRIS.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts with Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. REAVIS with Mr. SIMS.

Mr. TINCHER with Mr. HOEY.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana with Mr. MEAD.

Mr. DYER with Mr. MCKEOWN.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan with Mr. VENABLE.

Mr. TOWNER with Mr. LAZARO.

Mr. JUUL with Mr. SCULLY.

Mr. COPLEY with Mr. BLAND of Missouri.

Mr. SLEMP with Mr. MCANDREWS.

Mr. FREEMAN with Mr. SULLIVAN.

Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. CALDWELL.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ with Mr. EAGLE.

Mr. HULINGS with Mr. SMITH of New York.

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island with Mr. LONERGAN.

Mr. MCCULLOCH with Mr. MCDUFFIE.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea." I desire to withdraw my vote because I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. BANKHEAD.

The name of Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 30: Page 25, after line 9, insert:

"POST ALLOWANCES TO DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS.

"To enable the President, in his discretion, and in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, to make special allowances by way of additional compensation to diplomatic and consular officers and consular assistants and officers of the United States Court for China in order to adjust their official income to the ascertained cost of living at the posts to which they may be assigned, $500,000."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede from the House disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ROGERS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 30, and agree to the same with the following amendment: "In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert '$250,000.'"

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, this exact item was included in the bill as it was reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations carrying an appropriation of $250,000. A point of order was made against the paragraph in the House and the point of order was sustained. The Senate restored the item and recommended $500,000 instead of the $250,000. The committee of conference recommends concurring in the Senate amendment, but with the amount of $250,000, as originally proposed to the House.

I move the previous question on the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 32: Page 28, line 11, after the word "and," strike out "Public act No. 79 of the Sixty-sixth Congress, when the latter act shall have become effective," and insert "of this act, to be immediately available, $600,000."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, amendments 32 and 33 should stand or fall together. I ask unanimous consent that amendment No. 33 be reported and be considered with amendment No. 32.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, this amendment continues in effect the passport-control system which has been in force for some time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this amendment No. 33 does not do that.

Mr. ROGERS. The two amendments together do that. The first amendment taken by itself simply appropriates for the enforcement of the act of May 22, 1918.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I submit there is no need for debate upon that question.

Mr. ROGERS. That is precisely why I hoped that the gentleman from New York would permit the consideration of the two amendments together.

Mr. SIEGEL. I think amendment No. 32 would not arouse any discussion.

Mr. ROGERS. Then, I move to recede and concur, and on that I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur with amendment No. 32.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 33: Page 28, after the amendment just adopted, insert: "Provided, That the provisions of the act approved May 22, 1918, shall, in so far as they relate to requiring passports and visés from aliens seeking to come to the United States, continue in force and effect until otherwise provided by law."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. On page 28, line 17, what is the use of the words "until otherwise provided by law"? Does not the gentleman think that useless verbiage?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not think it is of any value, and on the other hand I do not think it is particularly detrimental or bad legislative language.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I have never observed it before in legislative language.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. I would like to have some agreement so that we may be heard on this amendment. I am opposed to it.

Mr. ROGERS. How much time does the gentleman require?

Mr. MASON. I want five minutes.

Mr. SIEGEL. I want five minutes.

Mr. SABATH. I want five minutes.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, the visé law, as it is called, was originally enacted as a war measure. Later we passed a resolution of the House continuing it in force until March 4, 1921. No logical reason can be urged why in this bill we should proceed to make the visé requirement a permanent law. At this very minute the State Department and the Department of Labor are not enforcing it in all cases, because they have found that in some cases they are unable to enforce it without perpetrating gross inhumanities. The last time when this subject came up I said if this law were enforced no political refugee could come into America. We have seen since that political refugees are being denied the right of asylum here because of their inability to have passports viséed.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. While the Committee on Naturalization and Immigration has been investigating these matters, would the gentleman inform the House what particular cases there are where they have allowed these men to enter without passports?

Mr. SIEGEL. Well, now, let us take one case, for example. I refer to the O'Callaghan case. He will not be deported, because the American people will never permit the deportation of a political refugee. By the laws of nations, he should remain here. Why enact a law of a kind which we know well enough that we do not intend to enforce, because it is opposed to all of our traditions? I said weeks ago that some of the agents engaged in this visé work were corrupt, and there was some doubt expressed here about it. A jury in the United States district court in New York convicted one last week, and he was sentenced to one year yesterday.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will.

Mr. RAKER. Outside of the O'Callaghan case, what other man who entered without a passport has not been ordered deported?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will say for the benefit of the gentleman that I do not propose to name the political refugees who have arrived here. He has the same sources of information available that I have and if he desires to drive political refugees out of this country, let him do so. I do not believe in any such policy. Neither does the average American citizen.

Mr. RAKER. I want to know if the immigration officers are enforcing the law.

Mr. SIEGEL. The immigration officers and the State Department are doing their full duty. What is the sense of having a visé law continued indefinitely? Every man here knows that there are pitiable cases which are brought to his attention. I had one case here to-day; four children over in Antwerp coming from Ukraine, never obtained a passport because there is no recognized government. They have arrived at Antwerp, the father here a declarant, the mother killed, and there is no way to get a visé for those children to come over to this country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There is a way to get a visé, and there is a method of making an appeal.

Mr. SIEGEL. There is no way by which they can get a visé, as the way our visé law reads you must have a passport from that particular country whose existence as a government must have been recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Are not refugees getting visés from the French Government, not citizens of France, but other countries?

Mr. SIEGEL. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think they are.

Mr. SIEGEL. I want to say for the benefit of the gentleman it is not so, because I made inquiry to-day at the State Department in reference to the particular case I have just cited. The man came here seven years ago, tried to bring his wife and children over after being here a few months, he being a declarant, his wife was killed, and those children have been over there trying to get across. They are in Antwerp, and they can not get over unless an exception, based upon the ground of humanity, is made.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How are refugees, who are stacked up in France now, being transported to the United States to get passports if they do not get them from the French Government?

Mr. SIEGEL. These refugees to which I refer are people coming from Litvia, Georgia; it is only from nations which are in existence. This law, clear as it may appear upon the surface of it, can not function as far as women and children are concerned where there are no regular governments organized. I am opposed to any further extension of war measures, and this is one of them.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five mintues to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, if there is anything that our party promised—and I speak to my friends on this side of the Chamber—in this last campaign, it was that we would repeal all of these war laws. Until the war there was no necessity for a man having a passport from his master, the king, before he could come to America. It was a necessary law during the war. Now, as it has appeared before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, they have recommended, according to my recollection, that a law be passed which would permit them to admit a man without a visé provided he makes a showing that he is a refugee, that he is persecuted either in a political or religious way, and presents to the Government the fact that he is eligible under the immigration law to come into this country.

Now, I have no disposition to find fault with the immigration laws, but this is doing exactly the thing which we promised not to do. We are continuing a war measure. This law that we had during the war would have kept the Pilgrim Fathers out, and it would have kept out many men, and most of your ancestors, if it had been a law when they started for this country. Take, for instance, as an illustration, the incident just now given by my friend from New York [Mr. SIEGEL]. I have many cases now where some of my constituents who have been here for many years and have made a success in life want to bring here an aged father or a mother. They make a showing to the department that they are abundantly able to take care of them, but they can not get a passport for some reason or other. Suppose they were coming from the soviet government in Russia, what chance is there of their getting a passport? We recognize no government there. Here are two gentlemen starting out from Great Britain or some of her colonies, the Indias or Ireland. One of them is coming here to spread propaganda of Indian or Irish principles.

The other is coming for the purpose of continuing Great Britain's rule in Ireland or India. The King says to one man, "You may go," and to the other man, "You must stay." We submitted to it during the war, for we had our alliances and our fighting friends, and we said that we would not let anyone come in here for any purpose unless the Governments gave them a passport; and they did the same for us. But with this law in times of peace you allow somebody besides the people of the United States to say who may come to this country. It is a delegation of American power to a foreign body or to a foreign court. And I say that the law ought to be repealed. It has been repealed by action of peace. We claimed it when we passed the declaration of peace.

I say, if you please, that this legislation ought to be taken up by itself. I am a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and this particular item of extending the law for one year I have not heard discussed. I have been necessarily absent for some time. But it is the extension of the war measure, which allows the kings and the rulers of other countries to say who shall come into this country, and is an absolute invasion of American rights.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. If you make it quick.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman know that he was present and participated in the debates of the committee upon the visé control act?

Mr. MASON. Yes; it was the gentleman's bill.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes; and it was reported favorably to the House, and it is waiting on the calendar.

Mr. MASON. I made a minority report, and I am speaking for that report now; that is, not this bill. I am opposed to any country in the world saying to any man in the world if he strikes the American shore and is shipwrecked, if he has not anything in the world except an ambition to become an American citizen, and he will satisfy the people of the country that he is in love with our principles, that he is a refugee, that he has been persecuted for religious and political duties, and he lands here and complies with the immigration law, that he shall not stay here. If we do otherwise we have violated the fundamental principles of the American Constitution.

The fathers of this Republic when they wrote the Declaration of Independence complained of Great Britain that they viséed all Government passports and permitted the addition only of British subjects. What is the fact to-day? They have it in their power. They are coming from that Kingdom, they are coming from that Empire, whenever the people of that nation say. I say let us reserve to the people of the United States the power to say who shall and who shall not become citizens of our Republic. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this proposition is a simple one. It provides for the further extension of the war-passport act, in so far as it applies to incoming aliens, and continues that act until otherwise provided by law.

Congress did make one extension of that act, which extension expires on March 4 next without ever having been operative, for the reason that the United States has failed to reach a legal state of peace with enemy countries. Hence the old war-passport act runs, but it will run only until the day we reach a declaration of peace. It is certain that one of the first acts of the next Congress will be a declaration of peace. It is not possible to get action upon a new passport bill. In my opinion, it is a dangerous proposition, with the state of unrest that now exists in the world, to let the United States drop the passport requirements as now applied to incoming aliens.

Aliens who are entitled to be admitted to the United States under some circumstances without passports and visés are now admitted. For the fiscal year ending June 30 of this past year 1,001 Germans were admitted without passports under special conditions. Other aliens have been admitted without passports on a proper showing. Refugees from certain countries in Europe now reach other countries in Europe without passports, and in the course of getting them out of those countries where they have arrived they are given passports to the United States. This seems to be for the good of the second country, but I contend that it is not so good for the United States. Therefore we need and will continue to need the visé. It seems to be nearly always to the United States they desire to come, and most of these other countries seem quite willing—even anxious—to assist them out of their countries into ours.

Some objection appears to the words "until otherwise provided by law," and a date certain is suggested. I presume the words imply the intent—I do not think the words amount to a great deal, but I am sure it is the intent of members of certain committees, both of the House and of the Senate, to work in harmony in an effort to draw a further passport law. If gentlemen will remember——

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In one moment. Gentlemen will remember I opposed in the previous session of this Congress an extension of the passport act with an amendment which gave the State Department officials the power to override and act above the immigration laws. I opposed that, and you remember we overturned the conference report. But this amendment does not upset or supersede the immigration laws. Our State Department officials in other countries have only the power now to refuse to visé upon knowledge and information that the person applying for that visé is dangerous politically, harmful to the integrity and institutions of the United States. Our consular agents can not refuse applications for visés to persons for even apparent defects that would be certain to cause them to fail to get into the United States after arriving at our gates. I have opposed enlargement of State Department authority because I do not want to see a State Department passport regulation superimposed upon the immigration laws. This amendment, as I say, does not do that, but it extends the law already adopted.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman spoke of that language as being perhaps of no effect. Is it not true that the effect of that language is to make permanent law of that which was originally adopted as a war-time measure?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; I think not, for we will reach permanent legislation, I hope.

Mr. CRAMTON. And in the event that Congress does not agree upon new legislation this would continue perpetually and be permanent law?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The assumption is that inasmuch as this is a live subject and the new Congress will be a live Congress, we will make haste toward a complete passport bill intended as permanent law.

Mr. CRAMTON. This may continue for all time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We should act within one year, but I thought that before, for I introduced and pressed the first extension—the one with a time limit now about to expire.

Mr. CRAMTON. If Congress acted it would continue in effect, perhaps, for one year, but if Congress did not act it would fellow that, although it is a war-time agency, it is to be perpetually continued.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I want to know whether, if this becomes a law, a political prisoner in Great Britain, imprisoned because of the trouble in Ireland, if he escapes from prison and becomes a stowaway, coming on a vessel from Great Britain to the United States, will be deprived of admission into or return from the United States because he has not a passport visé?

Mr. ROGERS. I will answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois by saying that he will not be deprived of admission to the United States.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. ROGERS. The Secretary of State has power to exclude, and the Secretary of State has power to admit.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Under the passport law?

Mr. ROGERS. Under the passport law of May 22, 1918, under the proclamation of the President and under the regulations issued in accordance therewith.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It has been stated recently in the press that a certain Irishman who has come to the United States—however, I think he did not escape from prison—has been ordered deported because he did not have his passport viséed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But he claimed to be a sailor.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Did the law apply to that case?

Mr. ROGERS. If the matter had been properly presented to the Secretary of State he would have had the right to admit the particular person to whom the gentleman refers.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Or the right to exclude him?

Mr. ROGERS. Or the right to exclude him.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. So that under this law if a man does escape, when he has been imprisoned for a political offense—and there are many such cases now—if he manages to escape and get into the United States, he may be sent back by our Government to the prison from which he escaped?

Mr. ROGERS. May I answer the gentleman further?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes. I want information.

Mr. ROGERS. I have in my hand the regulations issued by the Department of State in connection with the execution of this law and dated August 28, 1920. I will not take the time to read them at length.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield to the gentleman one minute more. I will not read the regulations at length; but the provision is that in order for an alien to be excludable he must be of a class which is dangerous to the public safety of the United States. Of course, the Secretary of State, like an immigration officer, may err or may even be corrupt on the question of facts; but in order to exclude such a man as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has referred to the Secretary of State must decide that in fact the man is dangerous to the public safety of this country.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What does the passport law mean if it requires a passport viséed, if, when a man comes here, the Secretary of State has to declare that he is of a class which ought to be excluded?

Mr. ROGERS. Because the law itself provides that the President may make regulations in order to exclude aliens who would be dangerous to the public safety.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I confess I thought I would get this thing cleared in my own mind, but it is as muddy as ever.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I should like more time than that.

Mr. ROGERS. Let the gentleman take his five minutes, and then he can ask for more.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, the measure under consideration makes a permanent law of the act of May 22, 1918, by which it is provided that it shall—

> Be unlawful for any alien to depart from or enter or attempt to depart from or enter the United States except under such reasonable rules, regulations, and orders, and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe.

The penalty for violating said act is $10,000 fine and 20 years imprisonment.

That law was passed as a war measure and by its terms its operation was limited to the war. By this measure that law is reenacted so far as aliens are concerned, and it is made of permanent operation.

Any regulations which the President may adopt under this law obviously must require the alien desiring to come to the United States to have some form of permit from some agent of our Government stationed in the foreign country. As at present applied the regulations require the alien to obtain a passport from his own Government and to have same viséed by an American consul in his home country. That is the present practice. The offices of our consuls in various European cities are besieged by multitudes of emigrants seeking visés so that they may come to the United States. Long lines of these unfortunates stand in wait day by day. Sometimes weeks are consumed before the emigrant can learn from the consul what is required of him. Necessarily our consular offices are not equipped for this business. They have not sufficient clerical force. There is much useless red tape, heartbreaking delays, and much unnecessary suffering; but with this aspect of the matter it is not my purpose to deal.

THE O'CALLAGHAN CASE.

Under the law which it is now proposed to make a permanent part of the American system, no alien can secretly come to the United States, for obviously under any regulation which may be adopted he must obtain the consular permit before leaving home. If he is proscribed by his home authorities, he can not openly apply to the consul for the permit. If he should slip away and take ship as a stowaway or otherwise, he will find that upon setting his foot upon American soil he has committed a crime, and will find himself not in a land of freedom and opportunity, but will be confronted by officers of the law who will conduct him to a penitentiary for 20 years' imprisonment.

The recent case of O'Callaghan, the Irish refugee, has been referred to in this debate. The moment O'Callaghan put his foot upon the soil of Norfolk he violated the law; he became liable to 20 years' imprisonment. What course will finally be taken in his case, I do not know. Suffice it to say that he is now out of jail merely by grace of the Department of Justice. The law makes no exception in behalf of political refugees, nor of those persecuted upon racial or religious grounds. It makes no allowance for those fleeing from oppression, tyranny, or brutality. It requires that any alien who wishes to come to the United States must openly present himself at our consular office in his own country and by open application for a permit subject himself to the pogrom of a "black hundred," to the proscription of a red terror, or to execution by a firing squad.

ROBERT EMMET COULD NOT HAVE COME TO AMERICA.

The law proposed makes no exception—no alien can come secretly to the United States. He may be a man of high character; he may be a patriot; but he can not come to the United States without the permit. No Irish republican marked for death by a "black and tan" reprisal can find asylum in America; no Polish nor Ukrainian Jew, persecuted for his religious beliefs, can come to America; no Wrangel or Kolchak, proscribed by the soviet authorities, can come; no Korean patriot, in rebellion against Japanese tyranny, can come to America; no Egyptian, no Hindu, no Boer, no Alsatian, revolting against the constituted authorities in defense of his native land, can find refuge in America. Kossuth could not have come to America; Kosciusko could not have come; Robert Emmet could not have escaped the hangman's noose by breaking jail and shipping as a stowaway for the United States. None of the world's patriots whom brave and free men all delight to honor could have come to the United States.

The measure comes into the House as a rider upon an appropriation bill. It has never been considered by any legislative committee. The parliamentary situation in which it is presented does not permit that it be given the consideration that a measure of such importance should receive. Nothing can justify legislation of such importance being passed through the House in such fashion except a great emergency. No such emergency exists. The existing law by its terms remains in effect until peace is proclaimed. Congress will have ample time at its next session to take such action as may be proper.

CONGRESSIONAL ABDICATION.

But for another reason no emergency exists. The Johnson immigration restriction bill has been amended by the Senate so as to permit only 3 per cent of the nationals of the immigrants who have been naturalized as citizens to come to the United States annually. The existing immigration laws forbid the coming of all anarchists and others opposed to organized government or advocating the overthrow of government by force. The Johnson bill still further restricts immigration to 3 per cent of immigrants already naturalized. That bill has been agreed on in conference, is on the Speaker's table, and will be acted on within a few hours. No excuse that the measure under consideration is needed to bar out anarchists or other undesirables can be made honestly. The measure is not a measure for immigration restriction. In reality it merely serves to mark the abdication by Congress of its legislative function and turns over the entire subject of the admission of aliens to the executive branch of the Government. It authorizes the Executive to say who may and who may not come to the United States. It leaves the Executive free to follow any whim or pursue any arbitrary fancy.

This measure has never been considered by any committee of the House. The Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which I am a member, has reported the Newton bill. That bill, bad though it is, is much better than the measure under consideration. The Newton bill is comparatively mild. It merely extends the passport-control act to June, 1922. It excepts all those who may seek to come to this country to escape political, racial, or religious persecution. Its penalty is only 1 year in prison, instead of 20 years as provided by this amendment. The Newton bill is bad, but this measure is infinitely worse. And the Newton bill was approved by the committee by a vote of only 5 to 4, there being less than a quorum present.

REPUBLICAN PROMISES TO REPEAL WAR LAWS.

Now for a little heart-to-heart talk with our Republican brethren on the other side of the Chamber. This law was originally passed as a war measure to meet an emergency. You have recently won a great political victory. You won it upon your promise to the people of America that you would repeal the war laws. For more than a year I have been trying to get the war laws repealed. I have cooperated with you in your measures to that end. I thought that you were sincere; I still believe that many of you were sincere.

You promised the people that you would repeal the war laws. This law is the most drastic of them all. If we adopt the measure under consideration, you will violate the promise you made to the people that you would have done with war measures. You promised that you would carry this country back to normal. You got the votes of the people of the United States upon the strength of that promise. This is one of the worst of the war laws. When you made your promise to the people to repeal those laws you did not except this one; you did not except it when you spoke to alien-born citizens of the great industrial communities and asked for their support; you did not make an exception of this measure when you spoke to them; you made no exception whatsoever; you included all of the war laws; and on the strength of the promise that you would repeal them they gave you their support.

PEOPLE DEMAND RETURN TO OLD-FASHIONED AMERICANISM.

The responsibility now is yours. You have the majority. Will you violate the promise that you made to the people of the United States? I call upon you to redeem your pledge of faith. I demand that you make good your promises. Upon behalf of the great masses of plain Americans, I challenge you to perform your preelection pledges. I say to you in their behalf that they are watching Congress as never before; they are demanding performance and not promises. They demand a return to old-fashioned Americanism and to American ideals. They will punish you if you refuse.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box].

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the Johnson immigration bill has not yet been enacted into law. I hope this House will be able to deal with and to pass the measure. It will then have to go to the Chief Executive for his approval or disapproval. If it becomes a law, it will not go into effect until April 1. The passport law will expire March 4. The reasons for the enactment of that measure are understood and appreciated by the House and continue to exist. Every reason which existed then urges the continuance of the law now. Such information as I have in connection with this subject prompts me to say and to urge that the continuance of this law is imperatively necessary. I think the committee has done the wise thing and hope their action will be ratified by the House.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. In the event that there should be a record vote upon this proposition and that it should be in progress when the recess arrives at 6 o'clock, would the yea-and-nay vote be allowed to continue until completed?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman does that, will he permit me to offer an amendment for the information of the House?

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the Senate amendment in accordance with the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAMTON moves to amend the Senate amendment by striking out of the last two lines of the matter inserted by the Senate the words "otherwise provided by law" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1922."

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to a statement that has been made very frequently in the course of the debate, to the effect that the existing law will lapse on the 4th of March. That is not correct. The existing law is the act of May 22, 1918, which will cease to be in effect at the conclusion of peace between the United States and those countries with which we are now technically at war.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEMPLE. In just a moment. In expectation that the war would cease prior to the 4th of March, 1921, Congress passed an act which is No. 79 of the Sixty-sixth Congress, which was to go into effect at the conclusion of peace when the act of May 22, 1918, ceased to be in effect and to remain in force until the 4th of March, 1921. It has not gone into effect as yet. If it had gone into effect, it is the law which would lapse on the 4th of March, but it has not yet superseded the act of May 22, 1918, which is to last throughout the war.

It is the act of May 22, 1918, which the Senate amendment would continue in effect until there should be further legislation. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I presume the gentleman has the act of May 22, 1918, in his hand?

Mr. TEMPLE. Yes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Public act 154?

Mr. TEMPLE. Yes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I would ask the gentleman what construction he would put upon the language, the last phrase of the first paragraph, "which shall until otherwise authorized by the President or Congress be unlawful"?

Mr. TEMPLE. The whole act gives the President the right to make certain regulations and to withdraw those regulations when he wishes to do so.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield one more minute to the gentleman in order that he may elaborate that point?

Mr. ROGERS. I yield an additional minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TEMPLE. The whole act of May 22, 1918, puts the question up to the President and authorizes the President to make such regulations as he may think fit.

Mr. GRIFFIN. But as a matter of fact, under the phrase which I have indicated to the gentleman, does not the act of May 22, 1918, remain in force until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress?

Mr. TEMPLE. No.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The language so states.

Mr. TEMPLE. The gentleman is mistaken. He reads a part of the sentence only—

> That when the United States is at war, if the President shall find that the public safety requires that restrictions and prohibitions in addition to those provided otherwise than by this be imposed upon the departure of persons from and their entry into the United States, and shall make public proclamation thereof, which shall until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress be unlawful—

And so forth.

This law does not go into effect until the President makes proclamation putting it into effect.

Mr. GRIFFIN. He has already done that.

Mr. TEMPLE. He did that, and when he makes another proclamation withdrawing the first one this act has no further effect.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, there has been a good deal said in the course of the discussion which I think tends to obscure the issue presented by this amendment. In the first place, passport control of aliens who desire to come to the United States has never been, is not now, and will not be if this amendment is adopted, an attempt to enforce the immigration law. In my judgment, it would be wise if such extension were inaugurated, but that is not permitted under the present law and it has never been attempted.

Under the law of May 22, 1918, the sole function of consuls to whom application must be made for visés is to determine whether an applicant is an anarchist or a person who believes in, advocates, or teaches opposition to all organized governments. In other words, the purpose of the law of May 22, 1918, that we suggest shall be continued for the present, is merely to keep out aliens who desire to come to the United States and here to preach the doctrine of anarchy and bolshevism, of destruction and of opposition to all organized government and society.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I can not yield just at this moment. I should think that gentlemen would hesitate to vote against the continuation of a law of that kind in view of the fact that its execution and administration have always been limited strictly to what is authorized by the law.

We have had hearings repeatedly on this general question before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, before the Committee on Immigration, and before the Committee on Appropriations. The testimony is universally to the effect that there has been no transgression of the restrictions laid down in the act of Congress itself.

What has been the effect of the law? We have kept out thousands of persons dangerous to the public welfare of the United States. The testimony is that 2 per cent of all persons who apply for a visé are rejected by our consular officers abroad. That is not a very large percentage. I think that it should be larger. But with immigration at this moment at the rate of something like a million persons a year that means that we are keeping out 20,000 anarchists and bolshevists through the medium of this law. I think with the world on fire to-day we are better off as a Nation to have these 20,000 people in Russia, Poland, or southeastern Europe than to have them in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I can not yield just now. It is quite possible that the law ought to be changed and modified when the new Congress comes in next month; but Mr. Harding has announced that he hopes that his first work will be to sign an agreement of peace and issue a proclamation of peace. At that moment this law stops, and there will be a hiatus in passport control. We, who are familiar with the legislative methods of Congress, know that it may be a long time before we can get through a continuation or a modification of this law. So we are urging to-day that the present salutary system shall continue for the present and until a carefully devised law shall replace it.

There is one more element I want to bring to the attention of the House before I move the previous question, and that is the matter of revenue. A million men and women come yearly into the United States under this law and $10 is charged per person. That means a revenue of $10,000,000, which is more than enough to maintain the entire foreign service of the United States, both at home and abroad. The revenue feature can not be overlooked.

A great deal has been said here to-day relative to the hardships in the case of the political refugee. The law of May 22, 1918, does not exclude the stowaway or the political refugee who comes to this country directly or by way of Mexico or some other country and who has no passport or visé.

It does not, it is true, say definitely that he may come in, and it ought not to say that he may come in. It says if the Secretary of State finds that that man is of a character who would be dangerous to our institutions that he shall be excluded, but in the event that he is not of a character dangerous to our institutions that he may be admitted. All this discussion about the danger to the political refugee, and about the danger that America may no longer be an asylum as she has been in the past, is pure poppycock. You can not find a line of it in the law or in the President's proclamation or in the regulations issued thereunder. The only question involved in agreeing to this amendment is whether you believe that we ought to keep out in the next year 20,000 anarchists who seek to wreck the United States. [Applause.] I move the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment pending which is preferential.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I demand a division of the question.

Mr. ROGERS. I make the point of order that the gentleman's amendment is not preferential at this time.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the situation is, we have already receded. Now, the question is merely on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not aware we had receded.

Mr. CRAMTON. It was my recollection that on the demand of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] the question was divided, and we voted then on the motion to recede.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman's recollection, if the Speaker will permit, is not correct. The request I made was to have two different amendments considered at once, and to that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] objected. There has been no motion to recede.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not remember one.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask a division of the question, to which I am entitled.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think my recollection of the facts is right, but it is immaterial.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed at the desk that there was no such motion to recede. The question is on the motion to recede.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentlemen from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAMTON moves to amend Senate amendment No. 33, after the word "until" in the fourth line of the matter inserted by the Senate, by striking out the words "otherwise provided by law," and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1922."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SABATH. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 128.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer as an amendment the Newton bill, which has been reported by the committee.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. The previous question having been put and carried, is further amendment in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would say, at first blush, that it was not. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Alabama if he has any argument.

Mr. ROGERS. I yielded to the gentleman from Michigan so that he could offer an amendment before the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The previous question was ordered before the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan was read for action.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Permit me to call your attention to the fact——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will certainly hear the gentleman.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The previous question was ordered, but subsequent to that the previous question was not ordered on the amendment and all amendments to final action. We have taken already two votes under the order for the previous question. We took the vote upon receding, and the previous question was not demanded upon the motion to adopt the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The previous question was demanded on the motion to recede and concur.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. When the motion was defeated, the previous question was not demanded on the motion to adopt the amendment.

The SPEAKER. It was not necessary.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, if the Speaker should rule that the right to make a motion to amend the Senate amendment that is now pending has been cut off by ordering the previous question, then that puts it in the power of the conferees having charge of a committee report to prevent the House considering any amendment.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no. It is within the power of the House—not of the conferees.

Mr. CRAMTON. Just a moment. The report is presented. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] in this case calls up a certain Senate amendment on which he has preferential recognition for debate. He can debate it for 5 or 10 minutes and then move the previous question, and if he can get a majority vote for ordering the previous question no Member of the House has an opportunity to get before the House a motion to amend the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. If the House is satisfied with a proposition and does not wish to have it amended or debated further, it has a right, by voting the previous question, to come to an immediate vote. That is what the previous question is for. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] to concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. IGOE. I make a point of order that no quorum is present, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, pending the announcement, may I make a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. It has already been agreed to that the House will recess at 6 o'clock. Now an automatic roll call will come. If 6 o'clock should come before the roll call is completed, would the roll call be interrupted?

The SPEAKER. The roll call would not be interrupted.

Mr. GARRETT. Then the House would not adjourn at 6 o'clock?

The SPEAKER. The House would not adjourn until after the roll call. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and fifteen Members are present. A quorum is present.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the yeas and nays. As many as favor taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Twenty-nine gentleman have risen—not a sufficient number.

So the yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the motion to concur is agreed to. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 34: Page 28, line 19, strike out: "For such expenses, not otherwise provided for herein, as may be necessary to enable the President to conduct and maintain any embassy, legation, or consular office authorized by law, $41,300."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, before passing to the next amendment I want to make a point of order, that the Speaker did not put the question on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Yes; the Chair did.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The demand was made for the yeas and nays. The Speaker asked those in favor of taking the vote by yeas and nays to rise and stand until they were counted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had already put the oral vote before that.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman's position is untenable.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I think the RECORD will show it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 36: Page 29, line 12, insert:

"SIXTEENTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS AGAINST ALCOHOLISM.

"For expenses of delegates, not exceeding 10 in number, to be designated by the President, to the Sixteenth International Congress against Alcoholism at Lausanne, Switzerland, August, 1921, not to exceed $7,425, to be paid out of the unexpended balance of the appropriations heretofore made for the Fifteenth International Congress against Alcoholism, said amount including secretarial and stenographic work and transcription of reports."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. And on that I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 6 o'clock having arrived——

Mr. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent to change a total in line 25, page 2, from "$573,000" to "$583,500."

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he has announced that the hour of 6 o'clock had arrived.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent to make a correction in the total from "$573,000" to "$583,500" on page 2, line 25.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What the gentleman means is that he asks unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the House concurred in Senate amendment No. 5 with an amendment, in order that it might correct the total.

Mr. ROGERS. That is true. I ask unanimous consent to do that.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment to the Senate amendment No. 5 was agreed to will be reconsidered, the amendment disagreed to, and the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur therein.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. It is simply to change the total in the amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is an error in the House print.

RECESS.

The SPEAKER. It being 1 minute to 6 by one clock and 1 minute after 6 by another clock [laughter], the House stands adjourned until 8 o'clock.

Thereupon, at 6 p. m., the House stood in recess until 8 o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House, at 8 o'clock p. m., resumed its session.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 15812, making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Agricultural appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks there is a possibility of a separate vote or separate consideration in the House on what is known as the seed-grain amendment?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know what the attitude of the Senate conferees will be on that matter, but I think it very likely that it will come back for a vote.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. MAGEE, and Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

H. R. 11945. An act for the relief of W. C. Stewart; and

H. R. 12005. An act for the relief of Henry P. Corbin.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 15422).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 10, 17, 18, 20, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 45, 46, 47, 48, 52, 54, 55, 56, 58, 59, 62, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 73, 79, 83, 84, 86, 96, 99, 100, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 113, 116, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 130, 131, 135, 140, 153, 154, 155, 156, 159, and 161.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 12, 19, 23, 40, 41, 51, 53, 57, 61, 63, 70, 71, 74, 75, 77, 85, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 97, 98, 112, 115, 117, 118, 119, 128, 129, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 157, 158, and 160, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "eleven"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$11,917.50"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,811,857.50"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 139: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 139, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$550,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 16, 21, 22, 28, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 42, 43, 44, 49, 50, 60, 72, 76, 78, 80, 81, 82, 87, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 111, 114, 120, 121, 127, 132, 133, 134, 136, 137, 138, 141, 142, 143, 149, 150, 151, 152, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, and 168.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On Nos. 3 and 4, relating to the remodeling of public buildings: Increases from $25,000 to $30,000, as proposed by the Senate, the limitation on expenditures at any one building, and appropriates $380,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $340,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 10: Strikes out the legislation proposed by the Senate with respect to enlarging the site of the customhouse, appraisers' stores, etc., building at Wilmington, N. C.

On Nos. 12 to 15, inclusive, relating to the Coast Guard: Increases from $6,000,000 to $6,800,000, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation for pay and allowances of the personnel; provides for 11 clerks to district superintendents, instead of 12 as proposed by the House and 10 as proposed by the Senate; and appropriates $11,917.50, instead of $13,000 as proposed by the House and $10,835 as proposed by the Senate, for the pay of clerks to district superintendents.

JAMES W. GOOD,
WALTER W. MAGEE,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the conferees found that there were many items in this bill as to which we would have very little difficulty in coming to an agreement. There were some items that were contested and some that we have not considered at all, because it was desired to get rid of those amendments as far as possible as to which we could come to an agreement within a short period of time. There are about 60 amendments as to which we have not come to an agreement, most of which we have discussed, and we will have to agree to some and to some the Senate will have to recede; and I ask unanimous consent that the House insist on its disagreement to Senate amendments 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 16, 21, 22, 28, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 60, 76, 78, 80, 81, 82, 87, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 132, 133, 134, 141, 142, 162, 163, 164, 165, and 166.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Did I understand the gentleman to mention amendment 50 or 60?

Mr. GOOD. Sixty.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Sixty is the nitrate amendment.

Mr. GOOD. No. 60 should be eliminated and should not be in the list; and I modify my request so that 60 will not be included.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. You are in disagreement on that?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and expect to take it up to-night.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why he includes No. 2, the archives building? It seems to me something ought to be done about that.

Mr. GOOD. I have included that along with the others. Something will need to be done with many of those. The action proposed simply places them back where they were before, when we went into conference, and leaves them for the conferees to handle.

Mr. DALLINGER. But it is not final?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no. We will go into conference on the matters which we did not have time to discuss in the conference, or on which we could not agree.

Mr. PARRISH. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask if the gentleman intends to include in this list 101?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; 101. It simply takes it back into conference, and will save perhaps an hour's time in the consideration of each individual case. My request simply puts it back into conference.

Mr. PARRISH. It will come back before the House if it is not agreed on?

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely; the same as any matter in conference. The conferees will have power to treat it just as before they made the report.

Mr. OLIVER. The same applies to the inland transportation item?

Mr. GOOD. The same applies to inland transportation. We have not discussed inland transportation in conference, and it simply places that matter back in conference, so we can consider it the same as in the original conference.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. This only continues the conference?

Mr. GOOD. As to these amendments.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. The House insisting no further than when it went into conference originally?

Mr. GOOD. That is true.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Aside from this request is it the purpose to consider the conference report afterwards in the order in which the items occur?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman include 113 and 114?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. WINGO. Those are not covered.

Mr. GOOD. No. 114 is coming up to-night; the Senate has receded on No. 113.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Did the gentleman request that a number of them be voted on at the same time?

Mr. GOOD. I am just asking unanimous consent that these amendments go back to conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the items to which he refers be disagreed to.

Mr. GOOD. That we insist on our disagreement to those amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the Senate added 168 amendments to the bill, involving an increase of $30,828,460.50. As to these amendments the Senate conferees have receded on 58, and the House conferees receded on 46. So far as the money consideration is concerned the House has receded on amendments aggregating approximately $1,114,000.

The House conferees were conscious after going over the matter of the Coast Guard that we could not reduce the estimates by as large a sum as the House had reduced it, unless men who had been enlisted for a number of years were summarily dismissed from the service. The action of the House in passing the joint resolution of May 18 increasing the pay of the Coast Guard was more far-reaching than we had at first supposed. That item itself makes it necessary next year to pay in increased pay in the Coast Guard, $2,100,000. It was found on a thorough examination that the House appropriation was too small.

The House bill carried $6,000,000, and the Senate amendment carried $6,800,000. The total estimates for this service by the department were over $9,000,000. In cutting that estimate to $6,000,000, going over the matter very carefully, and going over it so that we might appropriate a sum that would be sufficient and that would not make it necessary for the Coast Guard to come back for a deficiency, we found it would be necessary to yield. In agreeing to this amount the Coast Guard Service ought to take notice that it must cut its goods next year according to the cloth. It must bring its force within this appropriation or at the end of next year tie up its boats.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is not this increase of pay because of the fact that they were put on the same basis as the Navy during the war and that when the termination of the war has been judicially passed upon or legislatively passed upon, they will revert back to peace-time pay.

Mr. GOOD. My recollection is that they do not return to peace-time pay until six months after the proclamation of peace. But the pay I was referring to was under the act of May 18, the increased officers' pay, and that calls for $2,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. That is war-time pay also, is it not?

Mr. GOOD. The law provides that the pay of the officers of the Coast Guard shall be the same as the Navy pay, and then by the act of May 18 we increased the pay of the Navy, Marine Corps, and the Army, and the Coast Guard, and Public Health Service, and that act is in effect for the next fiscal year, irrespective of the proclamation of peace. That whole increase of pay under the act of May, 1918, next year will involve an expenditure of $75,000,000.

The next amendment was No. 70, the reflecting pool, in West Potomac Park. The estimate for this reflecting pool was $300,000. The House bill carried $150,000. The Senate amendment carries $250,000, an increase of $100,000. It was the plan of the House that the granite coping on this reflecting pool should not be placed there at the present time, when the prices are so excessive, and we only provided in the House bill for putting a concrete bottom in the pool. The Senate absolutely insists that the work shall be completed, and the conferees on the part of the House have agreed to the Senate amendment increasing that amount by $100,000.

The amendment as to the depredations on public timber—Senate amendment 89—carries an increase of $50,000. The estimate was for $650,000. The bill as it passed the House carried $500,000, and there was a very strong showing made that there would be a necessity for this money for next year. My recollection is that there is a deficiency in that appropriation for this year.

Then, in the contingent expenses of the Land Office the Senate added $25,000. The estimates of the department were for $425,000, but the House bill carried $375,000. The Senate amendment was for $400,000, which is $25,000 less than the estimate. The conferees have agreed to that amendment. The Senate items, items that are always placed on the bill in the Senate and agreed to by the House, amounted to $99,000, and have been agreed to. The principal reduction involved in the Senate amendments on which the Senate receded were the contingent expenses of Employees' Compensation Commission, $10,000, and the employees' compensation fund, $200,000. After the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations the Compensation Commission found that because of the reduction in the number of people that would be employed as clerical help in the departments and workmen in navy yards and arsenals, there might be an anticipated reduction in compensation for injury, and that there might be a reduction of $200,000 over what was carried in the House bill. The Senate amendment reduced the appropriation by $200,000, and to that the House conferees have agreed.

The general expenses of the Railroad Labor Board carries a reduction of $30,000, made in the Senate bill, and we have agreed to that.

There is a reduction, all told, in expenses for the maintenance of national cemeteries of $25,000, and we have agreed to that reduction.

In the printing and binding of the Interior Department there was a reduction of $20,000, made in the Senate bill, and we have agreed to that.

These are the principal items that have been agreed to in regard to the Senate amendments, and unless there are some questions with regard to these special items, I ask for a vote on the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 11: Page 15, line 1, insert the following:
"The heads of executive departments and independent establishments of the Government are hereby directed to issue and enforce such regulations as will prevent smoking in those portions of buildings owned or leased by the Government and used by any executive department or independent establishment in which such smoking endangers Government property or constitutes a hindrance to the efficient conduct of Government business."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, as far as this amendment is concerned, I care nothing about it. I realize that every department now can prevent smoking if it wants to. If it does not want to, the enactment of this provision would be a farce. We have agreed to bring it back because it is a matter of legislation, in order that the temper of the House might be tested on a vote. Therefore, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 11.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the House insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 11.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 42: Page 37, line 21, after the word "board," insert: "necessary medical service and treatment to trainees hereafter required in cases where such service or treatment is not provided by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and not more than $60,000 may be used for such service and treatment heretofore furnished."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, this item was estimated for and hearings were had upon it when the Committee on Appropriations was considering the bill. The situation is this: An ex-service man who has been discharged from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and goes into training under the Board for Vocational Education is no longer, then, a beneficiary of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and if he is taken sick he can not be placed in a hospital by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. They have found in some cases that trainees who have taken up this training become sick and need hospital treatment and are not able to take the treatment. It has been very earnestly urged both on behalf of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the vocational board that this item be carried in the bill. When inquiry was made as to how much it would cost, we were advised that it was anticipated that the cost would be large. I rather anticipate myself that it will be very much larger than either the vocational board or the Bureau of War Risk Insurance anticipate it will be. Yet the House and the Congress have been generous, so far as appropriations go, to that class of men who are taking this training. It is not a permanent thing, and is not intended to be; and a little later on, at the request of one of the departments, we carry a limitation in regard to the training. It has seemed to the committee, therefore, that this amendment of the Senate is a piece of legislation along humane lines for these soldiers who are taking training which ought to be adopted. The committee that heard the testimony would have reported out the provision originally in the bill if it were not for the fact that it would have been subject to a point of order, and we did not at that time desire to report out anything in the bill that could be avoided which would make it subject to such an attack.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 42 and agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 43, page 38, line 3, after the figures "$35,000,000," insert "of which sum not exceeding $500,000 may be used by the Federal Board for Vocational Education as a revolving fund for the purpose of making advancements to persons commencing or undergoing training under the vocational rehabilitation act, such advancements to bear no interest and to be reimbursed in such installments as may be determined by the Federal board by proper deductions from the monthly maintenance and support allowance, allowed by said act as amended."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the Order of Elks for some time has supplied this fund. Several hundred thousand dollars have been turned over by the Benevolent Order of Elks to the vocational board to make advances to the men who are taking vocational training. This order has notified the Congress and the department that it will be compelled to withdraw those funds at the end of this fiscal year. The Order of Elks looked into the matter very carefully when we were at war, and thought that this was one of the places where it could do some real benevolent work for men who had been injured in the service. I am advised by the board that there have been no losses, or comparatively few, that losses are negligible, that the loans or advances are rarely more than for one month's compensation, and as the amendment is worded it is intended that if perchance an ex-service man who is taking training should have sickness in his family or if something extraordinary should occur in his own private affairs which would require an unusual expenditure, he might anticipate a part of his compensation, and this fund would be used as a revolving fund for that purpose. If it is administered wisely, if it is administered as conservatively as it has been administered so far as the Elk's fund is concerned, it seems to me it would be a very great advantage to the ex-service men and it would not result in loss to the Government.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 43 and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 44, page 38, line 21, after the word "made," insert: "Provided further, That no person who has been declared eligible for training under the provisions of the vocational rehabilitation act, for whom training has been prescribed, and who has been notified by the board to begin training shall be eligible to the benefits of said act in the event of his failure to commence training within a reasonable time after notice has been sent such person by the board: Provided further, That except when such failure is due, in the opinion of the board, to physical incapacity, such time shall not be longer than 12 months after the passage of this act for persons already declared eligible and notified to begin training, and 12 months after notice is given for persons hereafter declared eligible and notified to begin training."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, this item is asked for by Dr. Lamkin, the director of the board. It simply does this: It gives the board the power to fix a limit within which a trainee must commence training after he has once made his application and that application has been granted. In no case, except where he is physically incapacitated, shall that time be extended beyond 12 months. It seems to me that the request of the board in this respect is along the line that Congress intended when it provided for the training, and that is, that this training should not continue indefinitely, that these men should take the training while they are young, and that Congress should not be called upon to appropriate money year after year for training these ex-service men, that they ought to take the training now.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. This amendment seems not to give the board the power to make that limitation, but makes the limitation itself.

Mr. GOOD. No; it does give the board power. The first proviso reads:

That no person who has been declared eligible for training under the provisions of the vocational rehabilitation act, for whom training has been prescribed and who has been notified by the board to begin training, shall be eligible to the benefits of said act in the event of his failure to commence training within a reasonable time after notice has been sent such person by the board.

It fixes a reasonable time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then it goes on and says what the reasonable time shall be, and says except for "physical disability." Has the attention of the gentleman been called to cases where men who would be entitled to this training had dependents upon them that might make it impossible for them to take the training for more than a year; in other words, may have to postpone for more than a year the taking of the training on account of some family circumstances that are not due to any physical incapacity? Does the gentleman know whether this limitation will work any hardship upon such cases?

Mr. GOOD. This is what the board asked for. This is not a provision prepared by a Member of Congress, this is a provision asked for by the director of the vocational board. I move to recede from our disagreement.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I do.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I want to get a little information as to how it will be construed in reference to the provision if he does not commence training "within a reasonable time after notice has been sent such person by the board."

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know whether this is to be a general regulation or a reasonable time in individual cases, but suppose a notice has been sent but not received? That frequently happens, and it would be what would frequently happen in the case of young men who were moving at times from one place to another. However, I do not want to ask a question that is too hard.

Mr. GOOD. I do not know just how the board would construe that; but I do know this, as the gentleman knows, that in all these cases the language is not construed against the trainee or ex-service man.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But if the law says so-and-so, that is the law.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I know. I do not know how the notice will be sent. I assume that if sent by mail a strict construction of this would mean that when the notice is deposited in the mail that that is the sending of the notice.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Undoubtedly.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman feels that the matter is liable to deprive some one of his just rights, I take it that the Senate would agree to an amendment to strike out the word "sent" and insert the words "received by the trainee."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Those who know more about it than I would be better judges, but that occurred to me.

Mr. GOOD. But the whole amendment was drawn by the board, it is their amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand, and I suppose they must have had language of that sort in their minds, but apparently this would depend upon the sending of the notice.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. SWEET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. SWEET. The proviso provides further:

That except when such failure is due, in the opinion of the board, to physical incapacity.

The only condition in there is to physical incapacity. Would it not be better to have some other condition put in there such as might be more reasonable by the board?

Mr. GOOD. Well, the gentleman will recollect that when this matter was before the Congress it was intended to clean up the whole thing except those who took college courses within three years. Now they have been at it for two years. This gives the board what it asked for and I take it if there is any injustice in it that it will be corrected by subsequent legislation, but it is only to bring to the attention of these men that they can take training now, but if we make it so loose, "it will hit if it is a deer and miss if it is a cow," we might as well not have any.

Mr. SWEET. But the point I make is their incapacity is passed upon by the board, and it is not your purpose or the purpose of the Congress to cut off any of these men in an unreasonable manner?

Mr. GOOD. No; it is a matter of limitation, that they must take their training——

Mr. SWEET. But the gentleman confines it simply to physical incapacity.

Mr. GOOD. I say it is one of the board's amendments, that they think is necessary in the economical administration of this law, and I do not see any serious objection to it. And I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 49. Page 43, line 6, insert:

"LINCOLN MEMORIAL COMMISSION.

"For additional work on the masonry approaches and terrace around the Lincoln Memorial, includ.ng foundations to rock and all necessary expenses of every kind incident thereto, $363,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, and the limit of cost of the said Lincoln Memorial is hereby increased from $2,594,000 to $2,957,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, this increases the limit of cost of the Lincoln Memorial from $2,594,000 to $2,957,000, and carries $363,000. The amendment, as I understand it, is to make some provision for the settling of the walls that carry the outer walls of the terrace. The walls of the memorial itself were built on a rock foundation. To have built these terrace walls, that are some distance from the memorial on each side, as well as steps leading to the memorial, on solid rock would have necessitated an excavation of about 18 to 20 feet of earth, so conferees were advised. Instead of doing that, large slabs of concrete were laid upon ground that had not settled. Why it was done one familiar with its situation can not well understand. To have laid this outer wall and these foundations upon that newly made ground without going to bedrock was a mistake.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Can the gentleman state whether or not the Government was protected by any bond given by the original contractors?

Mr. GOOD. The contractor performed his work just as it was specified. The trouble was in the specification. Instead of specifying that these outer walls should rest upon solid rock, the specification provided that they should simply rest on slabs of concrete.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Who was responsible for the specifications?

Mr. GOOD. The commission employed an architect to make the plans and specifications, and one of the things in this estimate I do not like is that it carries an estimate of $17,000 for architect's fees for the improvement. Why we should call in an architect at this time, when the work is the work of an engineer and not of an architect at all, I do not understand. I assume the $33,000 estimate for superintendence should cover any such charges. This work is underground, requiring the excavating of the dirt and the putting in concrete foundation down to rock. Now, personally, I believe that work must be done.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I wanted to ask the gentleman if the same architect is to be employed to do that work that is yet to be done that performed the first work?

Mr. GOOD. The work is already completed. The monument is finished. The architect has had his fees. This matter, when it is appropriated for, will be turned over to the commission to let a new contract.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did not hear all of the gentleman's statement. Of course this is not connected in any way with the foundations of the memorial building itself.

Mr. GOOD. That is true.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman said he could not understand why this was done. As a matter of fact, does not the gentleman know that eminent engineers went over this matter carefully, and in the effort to save a very large expenditure of money adopted the plan that was adopted?

Mr. GOOD. I suppose that is so. But the gentleman knows this monument stands on filled ground.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand.

Mr. GOOD. Now, then, it was newly made ground, and the Committee on Appropriations a year and a half ago absolutely refused an appropriation that was asked for by the engineers, to place a pavement upon that ground. We thought then it would be only a short time before the pavement would go to pieces. And we have refused up to this time to provide the funds to lay a permanent pavement upon that newly made ground. With the walls upon which the outer terrace rests standing on large blocks of concrete, on this newly made ground, it has settled. Now, those uneven walls in some cases have settled as much as 4 inches. And the only thing that is urged now, as I recall, why the work should be done at once is that they are fearful that where the girders are attached to the memorial itself there might be, if there should be much more settling, some breaking or chipping of the stone of the memorial.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand; but after all I doubt whether they are subject to criticism.

At least I do not feel disposed myself to criticize the engineers, who, after careful examination, endeavored to save money. But they sometimes make a mistake, an engineering mistake, as was made in this case. Of course, they could have provided stone or concrete foundations down to the solid rock to begin with, but that would have entailed a very great expense, which they thought, which good engineers thought, which I think most engineers of the country would have thought, was unnecessary.

Mr. GOOD. Does not the gentleman think that harm will be done if we postpone this for another year?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think that harm would be done, really.

Mr. GOOD. Why?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Because I think, with this ground settling in this connection, it may interfere with the foundations of the memorial structure itself. That would be a very great disaster and involve a very great expense.

Now, the gentleman is complaining that they did not go to the full expense in the first place, and endeavored to save money, and made a mistake. I hope we will not repeat the mistake in an effort to save a little money and involve ourselves where we have got to build new foundations for the entire structure at enormous expense.

Mr. GOOD. They do not claim that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They do claim now that it may settle and interfere with the upper structure.

Mr. GOOD. No. All they claim is that where the girders which support the floor of the terrace are attached to the foundation, if it settles much more—and they extend into the monument proper a short distance—they claim that that will tip some of the stones of the monument. That is all that they claim.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That will destroy practically the lower part of the monument.

Mr. GOOD. No. Those girders are about 20 feet apart and way below the surface, and there will not be very much tipping there.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, I do not know whether the eminent engineers of the House and Senate who were on this commission are subject to criticism or not.

Mr. GOOD. I do not think they would attempt to qualify as engineers or that they should be criticized.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think so myself.

Mr. GOOD. I will not criticize in the least the Members of the House and Senate who are on this commission. I think the gentleman from Illinois or any Member of the House would have done just as they did. They did employ engineers. But why an engineer should have done that, when he could go down and look at the ground and realize that it would cost only a little more to go down to the solid rock and put in these footings, when he knew the immense weight that was to be placed upon those piers of concrete, I do not understand.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Has the gentleman from Iowa examined this structure and this outer wall personally?

Mr. GOOD. I have not.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman said that this mistake could not have been avoided except by very deep excavations.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; about 18 feet.

Mr. MONDELL. But it could have been avoided by waiting a little longer, allowing this new material to settle. This is simply an outer wall, the function of which is to help sustain some of the terrace surrounding the monument. It has nothing whatever to do with the monument except as it is a retaining wall for the terrace, for the earth terrace. There was no necessity of putting in that wall at the time it was put in. They might very well have waited and have allowed the earth to settle, and in that event the settling that has now occurred would not have occurred at all.

Does the gentleman believe that there would be any possible damage to the monument by delaying this additional expense until we shall know how much settlement shall occur? The only point upon which there is any attachment to the monument proper is at a depth of some 20 feet below the surface, and then merely, I imagine, by some settling of the rods that do not go a great distance into the foundation.

Mr. GOOD. I realize that there is a great desire to complete this monument. I think that is the thought foremost in people's minds.

Mr. MONDELL. Is not that the only argument for the expense, that there is a desire to complete the monument? Otherwise the whole affair could be managed by allowing that outer wall to settle, which probably has settled now all that it will.

Mr. GOOD. I think that is correct.

Mr. MONDELL. Allowing a little more time, and then correcting the top, instead of the bottom, at a very slight cost?

Mr. GOOD. This settling commenced a long time ago.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will permit, the argument that was made to me on behalf of this appropriation was not that the appropriation was needed, not that any damage would occur, but that we must get this monument completed; and in order to complete it immediately it would be necessary to dig to the foundation of these outer walls and possibly, not certainly, possibly remedy the defect by extensive underpinning of the wall. We are not certain that this additional expense would accomplish what is intended to be accomplished, but we do know that in a short time the settlement will cease. Then we can tell what ought to be done there. Of course, it leaves the outer terraces of the monument in an incomplete condition, and one of the gentlemen urging it said, "Can we not afford to spend $365,000 more rather than leave this monument incomplete for another year?"

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BRAND. What has been expended on this memorial enterprise up to date?

Mr GOOD. $2,594,000.

Mr. BRAND. Upon whose judgment is the recommendation made to spend $365,000 more?

Mr. GOOD. The commission that has been created to build the monument.

Mr. BRAND. Is that the same commission that spent the $2,594,000?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BRAND. Who are they?

Mr. GOOD. I think John Temple Graves, from the gentleman's own State, is one of the members of the commission.

Mr. BRAND. He is not much of a business man, even if he is from my State. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. I do not have all the names, but——

Mr. BRAND. What are the names of others from other States?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. CLARK of Missouri is one, and ex-Speaker CANNON is a member, and William Howard Taft is a member.

Mr. BRAND. Mrs. Taft or ex-President Taft? Was it Mrs. Taft or President Taft? [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. William Howard Taft.

Mr. BRAND. Neither of these distinguished men had any practical control over this expenditure——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that John Temple Graves, of Georgia, is the resident commissioner.

Mr. BRAND. That does not change the situation. The money has been spent by somebody, whether by Taft or Graves.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MONTAGUE. With the permission of the gentleman from Illinois, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will it be necessary to remove the terraces around the monument building in order to secure this foundation?

Mr. GOOD. Really, I do not know how the work is to be done, but I should assume that it would be necessary. It will be necessary to go down under those cement footings. As I recall, there are big cement blocks that were put in, blocks several feet wide and a couple of feet thick. It will be necessary to go down under them and put in underpinning and make an excavation of from 18 to 20 feet to the solid rock. I do not see how the work can be done without excavating.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I made the inquiry because I thought perhaps the increased architects' fees might indicate additional work upon the terraces around the memorial, as incident to securing a foundation for them. I venture the criticism with reluctance, but with some confidence for a tyro——

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman were going to make an excavation under his own house to put in a wall, he would not hire an architect, he would hire an engineer.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will not enter upon that. If these terraces are to be taken away as an incident to securing the foundations, perhaps the faces or sides of the terrace might be improved in some way without very great cost. If I now recall correctly, the faces or sides of these terraces are either cement or granite running to a white marble foundation. Now, the monument itself is a credit to any architect and a credit to any people, but it is a great pity that the terraces should be so finished as to contradict the entire structure.

Mr. GOOD. They are not completed. The completion of the terraces will involve the planting of shrubs and dwarf evergreens that will reach to the top of the terraces.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You wish to hide this monstrosity with some sort of evergreens?

Mr. GOOD. I have nothing to do with hiding it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not criticizing the gentleman. I think a great monument of that sort ought to have a suitable and symmetrical environment, and therefore harmonious terraces.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion I made, and move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the sum in line 4 of the matter inserted by the Senate and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$345,720."

Mr. GOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the motion which I have offered provides for concurring in the Senate amendment with an amendment which reduces the amount of the appropriation by the amount of the architect's fee. Whether they can get along without that I do not know.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. What assurance has the gentleman that this reduction will be taken from the architect's fee?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have no assurance at all.

Mr. TILSON. It might be taken from the rest of the work and the architect be paid his $17,000 just the same.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We will be just that much ahead anyway. I do not know whether they ought to have an architect or architect's fee for this work or not. The commission on this memorial is composed of men of very high standing.

CHAMP CLARK, who is very careful about all matters of expenditure, is a member of the commission. Uncle JOE CANNON, who has always been an economist, is a member of this commission. Of course they act upon the recommendations of men who are employed by the commission, but very careful consideration was given to this subject. Evidently a mistake was made. I think it would be a greater mistake for us to stop now. I confess I want to see this memorial to Lincoln completed, so that the people of the country can see the most beautiful structure of its kind in the world as a memorial to a public man, and I hope the House will permit the appropriation to be made, so that the memorial can be completed without danger of chipping or injuring any part of it as now constructed. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the gentleman from Illinois able to suggest any way by which the beauty of this monument may be restored by in some manner hiding the back end of those buildings that have been built in front of it and back almost up to it?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If I had my way about it, I would remove every public building from the public parks.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the gentleman entirely.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does not the gentleman think it is a real mistake, if you want to do what you say you want to do, which is to complete this magnificent monument, to cut out the architect's fee? You must have an architect. You can not build it without an architect.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It may be that the gentleman is right. I want to have this appropriation made. I thought it would be more likely to be made and the House would be more likely to concur with this amendment in. I think we will get it done.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The same architect——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think the architect is responsible; I doubt whether the architect had anything to do with that.

Mr. CANNON. What is the amendment?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is to reduce the appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. That ought not to prevail; the architect is not to blame.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think the architect is to blame, and if my motion does not prevail I shall offer a motion to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I realize that it is not a popular thing to suggest that we ought to give a little care in the matter of an expenditure of nearly $350,000, even for the completion of a monument to the memory of one of the best men that ever lived. I am quite certain that what I shall say will not affect the vote, for gentlemen do not want to vote against an appropriation for the Lincoln Monument.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that this expenditure is wholly unnecessary. In the first place, the outer wall has nothing whatever to do with the monument except as it supports and holds in place a certain portion of the earth or terrace. The outer wall should not have been built until the ground filling around the monument had fully settled, but in the hurry to complete the monument and all approaches—and I am not criticizing anyone for that hurry—in the hurry to do it the outer walls were built. Of course, they do not go to the rock foundation. My understanding is that it will require an excavation of 18 feet or more to reach the foundation from the bottom of the terrace wall, which they used in the estimates for the appropriation we are asked to make.

The probability is that there will be no further settling of this outer wall. If there is a slight settling, no damage could come to the monument by that further settling. The only thought that those in charge of the monument had in connection with this matter was to hurry up the completion of the monument and not wait for the complete settling of the outer wall, to dig down outside of the outer wall and put in a further rock foundation, in order that the matter might be hurriedly done.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman state what portion of the outer wall has settled?

Mr. MONDELL. I understood the chairman to say that it had settled 4 inches in places. Only a portion of the wall is settled, and a comparatively small portion. I think probably the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois will carry, but I simply wanted to make this suggestion in regard to the matter: My opinion is that if we do what it is proposed to do with this appropriation, it will cost us not $365,000 but twice that sum before we get through. So in voting for this appropriation, which I believe is wholly unnecessary, I think we should have in mind the fact that eventually we will be called upon to vote as much more for the same kind of work, because I can not understand how it will be possible to make this extended excavation, going 18 feet below the present wall, even for any considerable distance, for the sum we are proposing to appropriate.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I was a member of the commission for the construction of this memorial. You can not always have your own way. I stood out for the location of that memorial, instead of in the park where it is now situated—I stood out for the location at the Soldiers' Home, which is 70 feet above the foundation of this Capitol. Uncle Sam owns it. The commission and public sentiment desired it to be constructed where it now is. Ex-Speaker CLARK agreed with me as to the proper location of the memorial.

Since it has been constructed, in the years that have come and gone, I am not so sure that I was right. I am very well acquainted with the architect who made the plans for this memorial. Nearly everybody in Washington, and business men and others out of Washington, wanted the location to be where it is.

Since I have been in Congress and within my recollection the tide ebbed and flowed over a part of that reservation, and I believe that it ebbed and flowed where the memorial actually stands. They had to go down from 60 to 70 feet, according to my recollection, to get a solid rock foundation, and so the memorial rests on the solid rock.

Since its construction they have undertaken the construction of a canal down there between the Memorial and the Washington Monument, at the boundary of Potomac Park, which is being done at great expense. Much expenditure has been made in improving that great park.

I was present a short time ago when this matter was presented to the Memorial Commission. We heard quite a number of people, and I am convinced that what was done was done in the best of faith on the advice of the experts, the best that that commission could get, who felt that the approaches to the Memorial should not be constructed at that time, and they were not constructed from the standpoint of economy. I am satisfied that the experts used their judgment and were perfectly honest. They supposed that the earth would settle gradually and that the concrete would be quite sufficient for the purpose of the support of the approaches. But they found that it settled and settled and settled, against their opinion. We had to go on as best we could. We believed in saving the amount that the opinion of the experts said could be saved.

Of course, this made land mostly was taken from the Potomac by hydraulic force, and it was also a dumping place for the city, from the cellars and excavations that were made throughout the city.

I call attention to the fact that on the 4th of July a few years ago after I began to come here the Washington Monument was only half completed. It stood there an eyesore. The patriotic ladies had raised the money and it was a great monument. John Sherman upon the 4th day of July rose in his place in the Senate and took over the matter and the Monument was completed, and instead of its being an eyesore I am told by experts it is the most magnificent shaft on the face of the earth. The Monument had begun to settle. It settled and settled and settled, and an Army engineer—I think his name was Casey—at a large expense made a foundation which took him the better part of two years to complete.

That Lincoln Memorial is there and it should be finished, whatever it costs. I do not believe it will cost anything near what has been mentioned here since I came into the Chamber. I think the country wants it finished and wants it finished now, and it ought to be finished, and the experts think it can be finished and dedicated by the time the frost is gone, along with the landscape gardening which has been planned. Lincoln is as dear to you as he is to me, and he is as dear to you on the other side of the aisle as he is to us on this side of the aisle. [Applause.] I do not believe that it will cost as much as has been suggested, but whatever it costs, having put our hand to the plow, we can not now look back. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that the depth to solid rock is 40 to 50 feet, I desire to correct the statement that I made. My statement was not taken from the report, for the report is silent on that subject, but was a statement made to the House conferees by the conferees on the part of the Senate, that it was only 18 feet. We had no knowledge except what was given us by the Senate conferees. As the gentleman is a member of the commission and is better informed, I think his statement is no doubt correct.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman takes his seat, will he yield to me?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BRAND. I simply want to make the statement, in justice to myself, that I did not mean by making the inquiry which I did a short time ago to intimate that I am opposed to this proposition or to the completion of this memorial, because I think it is a just tribute to one of the greatest men who ever lived and held public office in this Republic.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 50: Page 43, after the amendment just adopted, insert the following:

"NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS.

"For scientific research, technical investigations, and special reports in the field of aeronautics, including the necessary laboratory and technical assistants; traveling expenses of members and employees; office supplies, printing, and other miscellaneous expenses, including technical periodicals and books of reference; equipment, maintenance, and operation of Langley Memorial Aeronautical Laboratory, and construction of additional buildings necessary in connection therewith; maintenance and operation of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle; and purchase, maintenance, and operation of one passenger-carrying motor cycle; personal services in the field and in the District of Columbia: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for clerical, drafting, and messenger service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, shall not exceed $30,000; in all, $200,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 50 and concur in the same.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, should not the word "purchased," in line 24, with respect to motor cycles, be stricken out?

Mr. GOOD. The same language I think was carried in the House bill, and it went out on a point of order in the House because it changed the name of the field to the Langley Memorial Aeronautical Laboratory, and also with regard to the item authorizing the buildings in connection therewith.

Mr. MACGREGOR. What I referred to was with reference to this word "purchased" in respect to "motor cycles."

Mr. GOOD. We have them in the War Department, but we have to appropriate the money.

Mr. MACGREGOR. We struck the word out in the other bills that we passed.

Mr. GOOD. I think they decided perhaps they did not need them and that was the reason it was stricken out in such bills.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. How much did the sundry civil bill carry for this item last year?

Mr. GOOD. The same amount carried here.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from the disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 50 and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the next item, numbered 60, with respect to the nitrate plant, be postponed until we conclude the other amendments in the bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman anticipate that will take it over until to-morrow?

Mr. GOOD. I can not say as to that. It depends on how long it will take to get through with the other items. I do not want to extend an invitation to anyone to leave the Chamber.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman's request is that this amendment go over until all of the other amendments have been disposed of?

Mr. GOOD. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that amendment No. 60 be postponed until the other amendments are considered. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 54, at the top of the page, insert:

"Nitrate plant: For continuing construction of locks, dams, power houses, and appurtenances authorized by the national defense act approved June 3, 1916, $10,000,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to amendment No. 60.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 60 and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers a preferential motion that the House recede and concur. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, when the matter was before the House before it was stated that they would be compelled to hold additional hearings to ascertain certain facts necessary to a correct understanding of this situation. We have held those hearings. It has taken about four days to conduct those hearings. My opinion is that men ought not to vote or be called on to vote on an amendment that takes $10,000,000 out of the Treasury without understanding just what is involved. There has been considerable demand on this side of the House for time to debate a $10,000,000 proposition, and I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate be limited to two hours and that I control the time, and, if consent is granted, I will yield one-half of that time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But the gentleman will not have control of it.

Mr. GOOD. Why not?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Because the gentleman will only have control of an hour.

Mr. GOOD. But I have asked unanimous consent that I have control of two hours.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; the gentleman has not asked that.

Mr. GOOD. I incorporate that in my request.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman does not want unanimous consent that he shall control two hours of time.

Mr. GOOD. No; I am going to yield one hour to the gentleman from Tennessee, but not yield the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment shall be two hours, the time to be controlled by himself, and he will yield one-half to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, if the time is to be eventually divided and is to be for two hours, somebody else is entitled to recognition for one hour's time. The gentleman ought not to make a request that he have two hours of time.

Mr. GOOD. But I have control of the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I suggest the gentleman from Illinois, having made the preferential motion, would be entitled to recognition.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not care for the time. I have no desire to be recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Do I understand the gentleman's request to be that debate close in two hours and that he yields one-half of that to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Who is opposed to the motion, and then he desires to have the other hour for himself?

Mr. GOOD. I made the unanimous-consent request for that time so I would not lose the floor. It simply meant that my time be extended one hour, and I would yield that hour to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What does the gentleman mean by not yielding the floor?

Mr. GOOD. I desire to retain the floor on this whole matter and close debate upon the amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman will have the right to close debate.

Mr. GOOD. I do not know whether I would or not. That has been contested here a great many times on the other side of the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, he would have the right to close debate unless the other side could not use the time, and then he would have the right to close debate. Of course, the request did not state that the previous question should be ordered at the end of that time.

Mr. GOOD. I intended to do so.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman would have the right to move the previous question.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate on this amendment be limited to two hours; one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and one hour by myself, and at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Reserving the right to object, would the gentleman from Tennessee have the right to yield time?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that general debate on this amendment be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by himself and one hour by the gentleman from Tennessee, and at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if this request is granted would the vote come at midnight to-night?

The SPEAKER. It depends upon whether the House adjourned over until to-morrow or not. The House can adjourn at any time it desires. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

EMERGENCY TARIFF BILL.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a conference report for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan offers a conference report (H. Rept. 1359) for printing under the rule. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 15275. An act imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

CONFERENCE REPORT, SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE]. [Applause.]

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, I am against the proposed appropriation of an additional $10,000,000 for this Muscle Shoals project. I am against it for several reasons. One is that I am against governmental paternalism. Another reason is that I am in favor of rigid economy in public expenditures. [Applause.] I think the country elected a Republican House with the expectation that a Republican House would sustain Republican policies and not permit further raids upon the Treasury of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.] While I do not criticise the attitude of any of my colleagues or question their motives, conceding them the right to act individually just as they may see fit and in accordance with their convictions, I as a Member of the House claim the same right, and I propose to speak just exactly as I feel about this proposition, calling a spade a spade.

This proposal to appropriate ten millions of dollars additional for this project is in my opinion nothing more nor less than a well-organized raid, backed by an extensive propaganda, upon the Treasury of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Our opponents say—although the Government has already wasted there more than $100,000,000, having expended, I think, about $114,000,000—that they want to expend $50,000,000 more in order that they may give the farmers cheap fertilizer. I want to say that the question of the manufacture and sale of fertilizer is not involved in this proposition. That plant at Muscle Shoals never has produced a pound of fertilizer and, in my judgment, never will. The fertilizer question is only brought into this proposition in order to appeal to the credulity of the American farmer. That is all it is here for, but they can not fool anybody. It is conceded that if the Wilson Dam is completed, costing $50,000,000, there will be from 88,000 to 100,000 primary horsepower.

You know what primary horsepower is—the horsepower that is available the year around. The flow of the Tennessee River is very intermittent. At times the water is high, at other times very low. It is estimated that there will be from 100,000 to 400,000 additional horsepower, which is designated as secondary horsepower.

It is conceded that the primary horsepower is so valuable that it should not and will not be used for the manufacture of fertilizer. Those favoring the appropriation claim that they want to use the secondary horsepower for such purposes. But if they are going to use only the secondary horsepower for the manufacture of fertilizer, you can see that there will be certain seasons of the year when the plant will have to be shut down, or they will have to supplement the use of the secondary power with a steam plant.

They say that they do not want to use a steam plant, because it is conceded that if they did they would have to keep a steam-plant organization the year around, even though they did not use it, as estimated, only two to four months in the year. So the proposition is, as stated by the representative of the National Farmers' Union to our committee, when they do not have the secondary horsepower to shut down the plant.

It is conceded that the Government will employ from 2,000 to 2,500 men at the plant, and when we asked Mr. Bower, a very bright man, if he would have the Government pay these men while the plant was shut down he said that he would. That is the proposition—if the plant should be idle for three or four months in the year, with 2,500 employees, the Government should pay the men while the plant is shut down. You can see, gentlemen—anybody can see—that when they come before a committee and say that they intend to use secondary horsepower solely to run the plant for purposes of manufacturing fertilizer, they admit themselves out of court. There is not anything to that kind of a proposition. The Government has a plant there to-day—a steam plant—which is in perfect running order. They say that plant can not be used for the manufacture of fertilizer because it would cost too much; it would make the price of the product prohibitive. What they propose to do is to get money out of the Treasury of the United States to complete this project solely for power purposes.

They want to supply power within an area of 600,000 square miles—within a radius of 250 miles from Muscle Shoals. That is the proposition—not to distribute power, but to generate and sell electric light and power. I say to that proposition, before we go into that, before the Government goes into the business of generating and selling electric light and power, the policy of the Government should be determined by competent authority. And I want to say that no authority now exists for an appropriation of one dollar for the purpose of the generation and sale of electric light and power there. That is conceded. If you will note the wording of this appropriation, you will see that it is headed "Nitrate plant." And it is proposed to make this appropriation under the provisions of the national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, under the provisions of which not a dollar can be appropriated except for the purposes and necessities of war.

I have called attention to these facts in order that the country may see, clearly see, and in order that all except the blind may see, clearly see, what a howling, rip-roaring farce is the basis of this attempted raid upon the Treasury of the United States. [Applause.] I hope that my friends in the House will not vote to instruct me to vote for this project. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in 1914, when I first became a member of the Military Committee, I had an opportunity to vote in favor of the construction of a nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals. I voted for it then, and I have never regretted it. I shall vote for it to-night. At that time we saw the European war approaching. It was a question of national defense then. It was defeated, and in consequence of that during the war we had to go 5,000 miles to Chile to get nitrates with which to fight. That is not national defense.

Now, you have heard in the past a great many figures given to you in regard to what you have at Muscle Shoals. Briefly, I want to call your attention to some of the figures. Many that are given to you are grossly exaggerated and confusing. You have to-day plant No. 2 completed, $80,000,000 spent. It is a nitrate plant, the cyanamid process—a success, workable and complete, with steam. You have another plant, No. 1, under the Haber process, and $13,000,000 has been spent there, and it is not a working success. However, the experts expect to make it a perfect success. It is one of the German processes. What you have before you and in view is simply the proposition of whether you are going to spend $26,000,000 to $33,000,000 on the Wilson Dam to make of the Muscle Shoals project a going concern. You have spent on the Wilson Dam to-day practically $17,000,000, and to make it a going concern you must spend $26,000,000 more at least or $33,000,000 at the most, and this $7,000,000 discrepancy depends on the amount of horsepower you develop, 100,000 or 600,000, and the latter is possible.

It is not $50,000,000; it is not $100,000,000; it is from $26,000,000 to $33,000,000; and when you spend it what have you got? You have got a going concern, and it will be workable, and it will connect up, if you want it, with an $80,000,000 project that you have there—the nitrate plant No. 2; also with the nitrate plant No. 1.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not want to, but I will in this case.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Are they producing nitrates at plant No. 2 now?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No, sir. They have produced nitrates at No. 2, and they can do it. But this is the proposition: If you have only steam, it is not a workable proposition, because your power costs too much money to make nitrates for anything except war purposes in war time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. So that they are not producing nitrates now at this completed plant?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They are not, and they never will, in my opinion, unless you complete the Wilson Dam, at a cost of from $26,000,000 to $33,000,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. How far are the nitrate plants from the dam?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. As I understand it, about 5 miles.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Tennessee give me five minutes more?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE] since when has it become Republican policy to sacrifice $110,000,000 because you will not spend $26,000,000 to make it a going concern? That is the proposition that gentlemen on this side have to face, and if you do not spend it you are going to have a monument of Republican inefficiency down at Muscle Shoals.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman kindly inform us how that $80,000,000 plant down there could be a monument of Republican inefficiency?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Simply because if the Republican Party will appropriate from $26,000,000 to $33,000,000 it can be made a going concern, and if you refuse to do so it can not be leased, sold, or operated; it must stand there idle and unproductive because we, the Republican Party, lacked vision enough to spend $30,000,000 to save $140,000,000, including the last $30,000,000.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman may think so, but well-informed people do not. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The best informed men think so. I call the attention of the gentleman from Wyoming to the statement of the best informed gentleman there is in this country on that very proposition, Col. Cooper, and I will read you his testimony on that very point. This is a statement by Col. Cooper made before the Committee on Appropriations:

Col. COOPER. On the question of the 10 per cent on capital cost of $50,000,000, I personally am very much opposed to the United States Government going into any business of any kind whatsoever in peace times.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

I hope you will applaud it clear through, gentlemen. Then he continues:

And I should fight it just as hard as I could forever and amen. Here we have a condition where some $15,000,000 has been spent and the question comes up whether you will finish it, put up $35,000,000 more, and the way you could accomplish that. My plan would be this, that the Government should go ahead and finish this work up to the extent of $43,000,000, not $50,000,000, up to the extent of finishing everything and putting in the 100,000 primary power, and then at that time let the Federal Power Commission lease this structure for a term of 50 years on a basis that will net the United States Treasury 5 per cent interest on all money that it has in there, and let the lessee operate the plant, keep it up, and maintain it. That, to my mind, is the most practical thing to do.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will read one word where Col. Cooper said he would build this dam to make nitrates, I will vote for the bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am going to read some more of what Col. Cooper said. I am talking about completing the Wilson Dam. You do not have to complete the dam to make the nitrates. Col. Cooper admitted he was not an authority on that subject. He is a civil engineer, and says it was inconceivable, unthinkable, and would be a national calamity to abandon this project now.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will read one word from Col. Cooper where he said he would complete this dam to make nitrates, I will vote for it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. He would do it to save the $110,000,000 you have invested.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to call attention to the fact that Col. Cooper said it would be a national calamity if Congress failed to complete this dam.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will read you from the record a letter under date of November 27, 1920, in which Col. Cooper says:

On the second question, as to the cost of closing down the work at this time, this is difficult to answer. It is not conceivable that the Government would withdraw from this project entirely in view of the more than $12,000,000 already invested.

That is from Col. Cooper. It is inconceivable and unthinkable to him that you are going to sacrifice a $110,000,000 proposition there when by the expenditure of $26,000,000 you can make it a going concern, and then it will be up to the Republican Party to determine what they want to do with the proposition.

Then you can decide to lease, operate, or sell it. When the Fertilizer Trust find out you have a well-equipped plant, able to compete with them, you need not worry; you can sell, and you can name the price.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman from Iowa has referred repeatedly to "a going concern." Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell us what "a going concern" is?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman give me just one minute more?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to answer the gentleman. "A going concern" is one that will pay interest on the investment, and Col. Cooper says this will pay 5 per cent if you complete it. That is "a going concern."

Mr. TREADWAY. That would also make the Government a business concern.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No, sir; not according to Col. Cooper's plan.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will it not, according to your judgment?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No, sir.

Mr. TREADWAY. It will, according to mine.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman never worries about the Government spending some money in Massachusetts. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in every great project which entails the expenditure of a very large amount of money there naturally is, and there ought to be, diversity of opinion and free and intelligent discussion. But for the life of me I can not see why this discussion should take a partisan sense or view. In my humble judgment it is a national question. In no way ought it to be considered as a party question.

I see very little sense and less good judgment in those who endeavor to appeal to partisan spirit or party fealty either in regard to the advocacy of this measure or the opposition to it. The gentleman from New York appeals to his party side of the aisle and says the Republicans must live up to their record for economy. I appeal to the Democratic side of the aisle, and say that they, too, in their wisdom and in their duty to their country must also consider the question of economy. But I deem it unwise to save at the spigot and waste at the bunghole. I deem it very unwise to have an expenditure of $110,000,000 in this project and let that go to absolute waste and destruction because you perhaps in your wisdom may say that you should save possibly $28,000,000 by refusing to comply with this proposed amendment of the Senate.

And what in regard to this question of paternalism referred to by the gentleman from New York? I as a Democrat am opposed to paternalism in government. That is one of the principles that I learned when I first read the history of my country, and it has been imbued and instilled in me ever since I voted the Democratic ticket, and I hope that I will be able to cleave to that idea. But this is not paternalism. In my judgment it is the conservation and the preservation of the great water power of the Tennessee River, and I believe that the Nation ought to conserve, use, and employ all the water power of this country that it can avail itself of at any time. [Applause.] If that be paternalism, then I am in favor of paternalism.

What is the value of this matter before us? Col. Cooper testifies that in order to complete this entire work, taking into account the amount of money already expended, it will cost $50,000,000 at present prices, and he estimates now at the highest prices. Taking into consideration that the labor market is falling in price, that materials are also decreasing in price, is it not fair to say that Col. Cooper has fixed the maximum amount which this project will cost in its entirety? In the very same breath he tells you that the power that will be created by this plant, by the construction of this dam, will be 550,000 horsepower, or greater than the horsepower that there is on the American side of Niagara Falls. He tells you that that power can be created at a cost of $15 per horsepower, and he tells you that the distribution will cost $12 per horsepower, making a total cost of $27 to the consumer. He constructed the Keokuk Dam. By the way, he has the reputation of being the greatest hydraulic engineer there is in this country. At the Keokuk Dam they are to-day receiving $33 per horsepower.

Is there a demand for this horsepower? You have Birmingham to the south. Those who know of that region know that it is teeming with the iron industry of the South. You have Nashville 100 miles away, Chattanooga 125 miles away, and Memphis, I think, 135 miles away. That entire section of the country is demanding and waiting for the opportunity to have this horsepower.

Mr. SWEET. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. DEWALT. I will, sir, with pleasure.

Mr. SWEET. I have great respect for the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. DEWALT. That may be complimentary to the gentleman and not to the opinion.

Mr. SWEET. And he has stated that he is not in favor of paternalism. He has also suggested that by the expenditure of this $10,000,000 we can save $80,000,000 or $100,000,000.

Mr. DEWALT. I did not quite say that. Possibly the gentleman misconstrued it. I will let the gentleman put his own construction upon it.

Mr. SWEET. Now, is it the purpose of the gentleman to have the Government go into the business of manufacturing power to sell to the various cities of this country, or is it his purpose to put this plant in shape and then sell it to private interests?

Mr. DEWALT. My answer to that question is this: In the consideration of the water power bill before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I was convinced, as I said before, that there is absolute need for the Congress to conserve and use as speedily as possible all the water power that is available. I go one step further. If it be for the benefit of the public at large and for the people who are living in the section, belonging to any portion of the Union, to have that water power sold to them, I say sell it to them, in God's name, and let them prosper. [Applause.] That is my answer to that question.

Col. Cooper not only says that the potential horsepower is 550,000 but he tells you another remarkable thing. He says that the amount necessary to complete this plant will be $50,000,000, and in the same breath he says to you that within 30 years from this time the demand for this power sold at the rates that he has specified will bring an income sufficient to pay 5 per cent upon the investment of $50,000,000 and leave a surplus fund of $10,000,000 besides. [Applause.] In other words, the consequence is that if Col. Cooper is correct in his statement the Government can not lose anything upon this proposition and the Government will be repaid for the investment by the surplus then created every year to the tune of $10,000,000.

If, then, the Government can not lose, and if the people prosper, whether they be in the North or in the South, whether they are on the fertile plains of the West or upon the coasts of the Atlantic—there is no sectionalism in my heart or mind—wherever they are, if the Government loses nothing, then give them the benefit of this $10,000,000 appropriation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DEWALT. I would like to have more time, but I know the gentleman has no more time to give me, and therefore I conclude.

Mr. GOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. JEFFERIS].

Mr. JEFFERIS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am really gratified to-night by the remarks of the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. DEWALT]. His remarks reveal this proposition stripped of some of the camouflage that has been put forth here in regard to it. In other words, if I understood him, he was advocating this expenditure on the basis that it was a power proposition—for the sale of power to the different cities and communities near Muscle Shoals. That being true, it becomes a local matter for one section of our country.

I wish to discuss it for a moment from the standpoint of what has been contended before, namely, that this is a fertilizer proposition. I want to call your attention to some of the testimony given by Dr. Parsons, who was appointed by this Government to go to Europe in 1916 and study the nitrogen proposition from all angles. This learned gentleman has been giving it his study from that time to this. He was asked by Mr. GOOD, of Iowa, a few days ago what he had to say in regard to the production of nitrogen by the cyanamid process, the one provided for at Muscle Shoals. His testimony is this:

> No plants are being erected anywhere, so far as I am aware. In fact, the present plants are stopping their production. I was informed last Friday that in all probability the production of the cyanamid plants in Germany this next year would not be over one-sixth the production of last year, and there is no question—I think it is quite generally admitted—that the cyanamid process is in a condition of obsolescence, and I do not expect to see it operated in any part of the world to any extent a few years hence.

He also says:

I was told last summer by Mr. A. G. Barton, in his office in London, that in his opinion the cyanamid process was absolutely a process of the past. To quote almost his exact words—I have them written down at my office—he said: "Dr. Parsons, as sure as you and I are sitting here, the cyanamid process is a process of the past, being sure to be replaced by the synthetic ammonia process."

The doctor goes on in this testimony as to what the farmers think they are getting, and testifies:

What is your opinion with regard to the operation of the Muscle Shoals plant under the plan proposed by the War Department; would it pay?

His answer was:

I do not think it would; no, sir.
Would it pay expenses?
I do not think it would; no. I am sure it would not.

Again, Dr. Parsons says in regard to the farmers:

I am in open-hearted sympathy with the desire of the farmers and the War Department to follow the needs of the American people; I believe, however, that the farmers' organizations are very seriously deceiving themselves as to the outcome of this proposition. To my mind, I believe from the standpoint of the war reserve and from the standpoint of producing cheap fertilizer for the farmer nothing worse can be done than to operate the plant at Muscle Shoals.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it had not been my desire to participate in this argument this evening. I imagine that what I had said on a former occasion, not long ago, would perhaps cover the ground about as thoroughly as I cared to, but it may be that I can add something of benefit this evening.

This appropriation is one of $10,000,000 for the purpose of carrying on the work at the Muscle Shoals Dam. Now, we are justified in voting for this proposition on one of two grounds only, if at all. The first one is the proposition that thereby we improve the navigability of the Tennessee River. I called your attention before to the proposition that this dam in itself will not add to the navigability of the Tennessee River in any particular. As a matter of fact, gentlemen of the House, it interferes with the navigability of the present Muscle Shoals Canal, which formerly gave 5 feet of water around the rapids. Dam No. 2 is built exactly in the middle of the rapids, and in order to make the Tennessee River navigable at this place it would be necessary, according to the estimates of the engineers made in peace times, to build two additional dams, one of which will cost two and one-half million dollars and the other twelve and one-half million dollars at peace-time prices. So it was that Col. Cooper and others testified that so far as that being of assistance to navigation it was of no importance at all.

Now, if it does not add to the navigation we must consider it as a power dam. We are only justified in voting for it as a power dam on one of two propositions: First, that the law authorizes us to erect the dam to make power that we can sell to the communities surrounding it; second, that we can make a dam that will furnish the power for Muscle Shoals plant No. 2. I want to call to your attention again, as I did before, that there was not a cent of money that came from the national defense fund—not a penny—that went into the Muscle Shoals plant No. 2. Not a cent came from the national defense fund, and I challenge anybody, in view of that fact, to cite to me a statute under which we can vote to appropriate for building the dam. There is no such law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. When this proposition was offered, when the bill was pending before the House, did not the gentleman state to the Chair at that time that he did not desire to make the point of order because after investigation he had determined that it could not be sustained?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I did; and I say so now. The trouble is that the point of order will not lie on this kind of proposition, because the Chair can not stop to investigate the facts. The only way that you can find out whether this money was expended from the national defense fund is to examine the facts; and the parliamentary law is that the Speaker can not go into the facts to determine a question of order. Therefore I made that statement, and was right about it, and I adhere to it now. There is no law upon which you can base this vote, if we vote for the appropriation desired.

Further than that, let us go into the question of power. It has been stated here time and time again, and it is the absolute truth, that this thing has developed until it is simply a proposition of building a dam and selling the power to the country down there in which this dam is to be located. Let me call your attention to what this vote to-night means. I have done it before, and I want to call your attention to it again. If you vote for this appropriation of $10,000,000, you must go on through the piece and grant the rest of the appropriations, and it will be necessary for you to expend the balance needed to make $50,000,000, the proposed cost of the dam. You will have to appropriate, in order to complete this, $12,500,000 for one dam, $2,500,000 for another dam, and $12,500,000 more to convert the nitrate plant into an ammonium sulphate plant, and that means $65,000,000 more which we must put into this business. Is there any man in this House who will say to me, "I am justified in voting for an appropriation of $65,000,000 in order to save $12,000,000 that we have put in the abutments of this dam down there before we have established any policy whatever, before we have said what we will do about the nitrate plant"? You gentlemen over here who are advancing this project advocate getting this through before the 4th of March and appropriating this additional $10,000,000, as then it will be too late to stop. We on this side of the House, particularly, told the people in the last campaign that we would save the public purse and the Public Treasury. We condemned things like this. We condemned practices by which the money of the country was being voted out of the Treasury. Are we going now at this time to vote this money out, when we know that in 10 days a new administration will come into power in this country that may investigate this and may have an entirely different idea about what ought to be the future of this enterprise? I do not believe anyone ought to do it.

Let me call your attention to one or two things. In the examination of Col. Cooper, he stated time and time again that he was opposed to this for any other purpose except as a power proposition. He said that was all that it was. I want to call your attention to two examples where he said that. The chairman [Mr. GOOD] asked him—

Do you mean by furnishing cheap fertilizer or furnishing cheap power to the industries?

To that he replied:

I mean by furnishing cheap power to the industries.
You are not urging that this amendment be adopted and that this work go on for the purpose of furnishing fertilizer?
Not at all.
Your proposition is simply a water-power proposition?
Yes; that is it.

Again, in answer to a question put to him by Mr. MAGEE—

But you are not in favor of the Government running it?
No, sir; I am not.
You are in favor of the Government keeping out of this business?
Yes; I think they should keep out of it.
You think it is a business that should be conducted by private enterprise?
Absolutely.

Do not you gentlemen agree with him about that? Do you think that we ought to go into the business of making fertilizer? Why should we go into the business of making fertilizer any more than we should go into the business of making harness? One is as essential to carrying on agriculture as is the other. The only reason anyone gives that we put some more money in is for the purpose of getting back what we have already put in. Do you think it is good policy, if we have put $12,000,000 into the foundation of a dam, to put $33,000,000 more to get that $12,000,000 out, and in the end have nothing but a power, and find ourselves in the business of selling power to the surrounding country?

I want to call your attention to a map that I have here, and I want you Alabama men to note this. We paid $5,000,000 to help the Alabama Power Co. on its feet, to get control of that country down there, and even the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], when we were discussing this thing on the floor of the House here, I believe, made some statement to the effect that he had nothing to say favorable about the operations of the Alabama Power Co.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If the gentleman will ask a question, yes.

Mr. GARRETT. I think the Alabama Power Co.—I said so in the report and on the floor of the House—took advantage of the Government's necessities and imposed expenses that the Government ought not to have gone to, and if the Government does not do this, the Alabama Power Co. will still retain the monopoly.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I am glad the gentleman interrupted me. Look at this map. This map is an official map published by the Alabama Power Co. Up here in the corner is the nitrate plant. All these surrounding lines we helped them build during the war, and furnished the money to do it, and now they have a complete circle around Birmingham, Ala., and all that industrial territory, and they have gotten clear up to a little place called Athens, and there is only a little gap of 15 or 20 miles which they have to close there, and then they will have that territory in a circle.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; I do not care to yield now. The only possible purchaser of this power will be the Alabama Power Co., absolutely. It is the only possible purchaser in that field. In fact, I want to call your attention to what Maj. Burgess said about this thing. An agent of the War Department went down there and looked the thing over.

Now notice what this Government report says. This is by an Engineer officer of the War Department sent down there to make a survey of this situation, and this is what he says. He is referring to Government cooperation.

And also makes the Alabama Power Co. the logical and in fact the only company capable of building up the market necessary to use all the power which may be developed at Muscle Shoals.

So says Maj. Burgess. And it is a fact, gentlemen, it is the only possible purchaser for this power. I see my time is going and there are some things I desire to say which I will not have the time to say.

It has been stated that we have invested $17,000,000 and we must expend this money or otherwise we will lose the $17,000,000 we have. I want to call your attention to some things that have been done that have got us in the position so that we have that $12,000,000 in this hole. In the first place during the war the building was stopped on this dam by the Priorities Committee, because they refused to give the War Department priorities on the materials for this dam, claiming that the dam could not be completed in time to be of service in the war. The armistice was signed on the 11th day of November, 1918, and on the 9th of November, 1918, word was sent down there, through the Engineer Department, for them to start work on that dam, and they started on the 9th and they have continued at full force ever since. Since the armistice was signed they have opened up this Waco quarry and spent a million and a quarter dollars when they knew the Congress of the United States had not decided upon anything. They finished the Alabama Power Co. plant and built a little village or town for them and put a 30,000-kilowatt turbo-generator in place. They did all these things so as to get in a position to say to the Congress of the United States, when this thing came up that they had gone so far that they could not turn back. Now at this time, within a few days before the close of Congress, they come to us and say to us that we ought to go ahead with this thing and embark upon an enterprise that will cost $65,000,000 if we keep it up.

It has been said the farmers of this country are for this thing. I do not believe they are, if they knew the facts. I believe the farmers of the country will suffer instead of benefiting by it. I believe there ought to be built up in this country a nitrate industry, and I say to you now solemnly and with due consideration of what I am about to say that if the Government goes into the nitrate business down here nobody else is going into it in opposition and in competition with the Government. And another thing: The Secretary of War came before the committee of which I am chairman and we asked him and others who came there who they were going to sell this product to, and they told us the fertilizer makers. Do you know, gentlemen, that what they make down there, ammonium sulphate, is not fertilizer in itself? You have to mix that ammonium sulphate with phosphates and with other elements to make commercial fertilizer. It has to be mixed with other ingredients in order to make fertilizer out of it, so what do the farmers get out of it? Gentlemen, it is a delusion, in my judgment, and no real argument can be made that will show that there is any real profit in it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SELLS]. [Applause.]

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to discuss the technical features of this proposition, notwithstanding I have given it a rather close and impartial investigation. I believe it to be sound as an economic policy, and assailed from every possible angle as it has been its enemies have not been able to discredit it. From the standpoint of its potential worth and of its influence on the industrial and commercial development of the South there is nothing in this country that can compare with it. I believe that my record in this House, covering a period of 10 years' service, will bear me out in the statement that I have been an unwavering supporter of Republican policies and an unquestioning follower of Republican leadership. In deference to that leadership I voted against the bill which authorized the first appropriation for this purpose. Probably partisan prejudice was largely the cause of my action, and without attempting to offer any unjust or any unwarranted criticism, possibly other gentlemen on this side of the Chamber voted against that bill just as they are now opposing this for the same reason, and my purpose in addressing you briefly this evening is to beg of you gentlemen on the Republican side of the Chamber to forget, if you can, the location of this stupendous plant and to give to it the same unbiased consideration that you give to projects of a similar nature in other sections of this country. I recognize the fact that the material progress of the South has been retarded by a blind devotion to a political ideal and in its adherence to doctrines long since discarded elsewhere.

For this evidence of her mistaken loyalty I bespeak your patient sympathy. We have suffered as a result; not you. But the light of a new life is dawning full on her face, and in the results of the last November election may be seen the breaking up of traditions and the establishment of a new creed of political thought and action. The "solid South" has been broken. Tennessee, a secession State, has proclaimed to the Nation her abandonment of dead issues and buried doctrines [applause]; and for the first time in our history the flag of a militant Republican Party has unfurled in victory above the cotton fields of Dixie.

Will the Republicans in this House by their refusal to grant this appropriation strike down what will otherwise become Tennessee's greatest asset, affecting every section of our Commonwealth? Shall we carry back to our people at home the tidings that a Republican Congress has unjustly and ungenerously denied this measure of helpfulness, and that our Republican brethren in the North have refused the proffered hand of political fellowship which we have for the first time in our history extended in trust and confidence across Mason and Dixon's line? [Applause.]

The South is no beggar. She asks as alms for none of the crumbs that fall from the rich man's table. But she does ask that sectionalism shall be forgotten and that her claims for recognition shall be judged by the same standards that you apply to those of the remaining States of this Union. [Applause.]

Members of this House, in an excess of patriotic zeal, are wont to proclaim that there is no North, no South, no East, no West. Gentlemen, the vote here on this side of the Chamber to-night will constitute the acid test which will determine the truth and sincerity of that statement. And I make this statement, not as a threat, please understand, but merely as the expression of my honest judgment, that if this Congress, both branches of which are Republican, shall defeat this measure, Tennessee will not give another electoral vote to a Republican candidate during your lifetime or mine.

The South is ready to cut adrift from her political moorings. Her progressive men realize the disadvantage and utter folly of servitude to one political party. They merely wait to see what recognition shall be given to her just claims, and to just what extent the prejudice of sectionalism shall militate against her. A golden opportunity is presented here to-night, and I have faith to believe that gentlemen on this, the Republican, side of the Chamber will take advantage of it to do full and substantial justice. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Friday, February 25, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

424. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting deficiency estimate of appropriation, in the sum of $5,594.21, required by the Department of Labor for "Salaries and expenses of the International Conference of Labor, 1920" (H. Doc. No. 1014); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

425. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, together with report of Maj. W. A. Johnson, Corps of Engineers, on preliminary examination of the Narrows between Choctawhatchee Bar and Santa Rosa Sound, Fla., including the swash channel from Camp Walton to Mary Esther; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

426. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a tentative draft of a bill regarding suits at law or in equity now pending or hereafter brought in any State court on account of any contract, etc., made by the Navy Department during the war with Germany; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. VESTAL, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to which was referred the bill (S. 4893) to authorize the coinage of a 50-cent piece in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of Missouri into the Union, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1356), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MONTAGUE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10963) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Haileys Ferry, and between the counties of Anderson, S. C., and Hart, Ga., reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1358), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FESS: A bill (H. R. 16150) to amend the vocational rehabilitation act to exempt from taxation amounts heretofore or hereafter received thereunder as training pay and allowances; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CURRY of California: A bill (H. R. 16151) to create a department of aeronautics, defining the powers and duties of the secretary thereof, providing for the organization, disposition, and administration of a United States air force, and providing for the development of civil and commercial aviation, the regulation of air navigation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. EMERSON: Resolution (H. Res. 694) asking the Secretary of the Navy to give information to Congress concerning the cost of metal furniture as produced by the Navy Department; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, relating to the exchange of privately owned lands for lands belonging to the Federal Government; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, regarding the reclamation of arid and swamp lands in the State of Idaho; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

Also (by request), memorial from the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, favoring the passage of the French-Capper bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, in connection with Government censorship of moving pictures; to the Committee on Education.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, in connection with the transportation act of 1920, so as to eliminate therefrom the rule of rate making; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, in connection with the designation of Fort Meade as a military hospital; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, in connection with the Rogers bill, H. R. 14961; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, memorial from the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, favoring the immediate enactment of an emergency tariff law for the relief of the farmers and live-stock producers; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HAWLEY: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of Oregon, asking Congress to pass legislation directing the United States Bureau of Public Health and the United States Commissioner of Pensions to appoint physicians and dentists who are now in the military service, or who have been honorably discharged from the same, as public health officers and on boards of examining surgeons, in preference to those who are not in the military or naval service, or who have not so served and been honorably discharged; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6041. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of certain citizens of Megargel, Tex., protesting against market gambling in farm products; to the Committee on Agriculture.

6042. Also, petition of the Boston Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, favoring a thorough and rigid investigation of matters in Haiti and San Domingo; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

6043. Also, petition of Denver Typographical Union No. 49, favoring the recognition of the Irish republic by the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6044. By Mr. CLEARY: Petition of Matthew J. Smith and 768 others, of Brooklyn, N. Y., protesting against the passage of the Smith-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

6045. By Mr. CRAGO: Petition of the State Federation of Pennsylvania Women, favoring the passage of the Sheppard-Towner bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

6046. By Mr. FULLER: Petition of the St. Joseph Society of Peru, Ill., protesting against the passage of the Smith-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

6047. Also, petition of W. R. Everett, Mrs. Bessie M. Johnson, Mrs. Florence R. Lewis, Mrs. Jessie Goodspeed, St. Monica Court No. 501 (Daughters of Isabella), Mrs. Carrie Stenger, Mrs. Eva Gorman, Mrs. Josephene H. Landgraf, Mrs. Florence B. Crittenden, Mrs. Elsie B. Corveth, Mrs. Agnes E. Morgan, B. G. Morgan, F. Kate Kelley, Louis H. Gillardon, John F. Parker, O. M. Williams, Mrs. O. M. Williams, Mrs. Clara Gillardon, Mrs. Ida E. Orput, Lorenz Weber, Mrs. Lorenz Weber, Mrs. William Eskridge, Miss Ruth C. Ogren, Andrew J. Ogren, Mrs. Ell Myer, Mary C. Ogren, R. A. Orput, Mrs. Nellie Hewitt, George A. Hewitt, Mrs. Mary Proctor, Miss Josie Samuelson, Miss Ruth E. Hewitt, Mrs. B. A. Solem, Mrs. John F. Parker, Nellie M. Keeling, F. S. Madden, A. C. Woods, Mrs. Lottie N. Woods, Miss Ethel Eudeley, Arthur Janes, Mrs. Ellen E. Janes, Andrew P. Lorenzen, Emma S. Carver, Katherine McClintock, Mrs. Clara G. Strokert, Maud V. Patterson, Jennie E. Woodruff, Edward J. Hollister, H. H. Biggert, Martha E. Kennedy, Mrs. Fannie P. Walker, and Mr. and Mrs. Perry Jackson, of Rockford, Ill.; Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Engdal, Mrs. Minnie L. Dempsey, Mrs. Carrie L. Gilroy, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Puls, and Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Carter, of Belvidere, Ill.; Miss Minnie L. Richardson, of Roscoe, Ill.; and Rodney K. Cummins, of Champaign, Ill., protesting against the passage of the so-called Capper-Fess bills, S. 3950 and H. R. 12652; to the Committee on Education.

6048. By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of Division 72, Ancient Order of Hibernians, Boston, Mass., J. A. Cantwell, secretary, protesting against the passage of the Smith-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

6049. By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: Petition of St. Joseph's Casino, of Pittsburgh, Pa., protesting against the passage of the Smith-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

6050. Also, petition of the City Council of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the burial of an unidentified soldier, killed in France, in Independence Square, Philadelphia, Pa.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

6051. By Mr. KIESS: Petition of the Renovo Branch of the Ladies' Catholic Benevolent Association, of Renovo, Pa., protesting against the passage of the Smith-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

6052. By Mr. LAMPERT: Petition of voters of Oshkosh, Wis., requesting an amendment to the Volstead enforcement act permitting the manufacture and sale of beer and light wines; also protesting against the so-called blue laws; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6053. By Mr. McFADDEN: Petition of Troy Grange, No. 180, of Troy, Pa., protesting against the reenactment of the so-called daylight saving law; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

6054. By Mr. MOONEY: Petition of Local No. 5, Licensed Tugman's Protective Association, of Cleveland, Ohio, favoring a duty on fish; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6055. By Mr. ROGERS: Petition of the Council of St. Jean Baptiste, No. 10, protesting against the passage of the Smith-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

6056. By Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota: Petition of the Harry Hardy Post, No. 47, of the American Legion, of Burnstad, N. Dak., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for better hospital facilities for disabled war veterans; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 25, 1921.

(Legislative day of Thursday, February 24, 1921.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, some time ago there appeared in one of the western farm papers, the Nebraska Farmer, an article entitled "How shall the packers be regulated?" It was inserted in the RECORD. Recently a reply has been made by Mr. Thomas E. Wilson, and in a spirit of fairness, that both sides may be represented, I ask that Mr. Wilson's reply be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. KENYON. I would like to inquire what it is a reply to.

Mr. FERNALD. It is in reply to an article inserted in the RECORD some time ago, as to how to regulate the packers. I think the Senator from Iowa suggested that it be inserted in the RECORD, and, without reading, I ask that this article be inserted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is in the habit of objecting to such matters going in the RECORD. I do not know whether he would object to this one or not. Possibly we ought to wait until he comes in. I shall object to it for the present, until I examine it and see what it is.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to a very excellent article prepared by the executive committee of the national committee for a department of education, of which Mr. Filene, of Boston, is chairman. I could, in my own time, read this article, but instead I ask leave to print it as a part of my remarks in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"CREATE A DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION."

FACTS ABOUT THE EDUCATIONAL BILL—THE SMITH-TOWNER BILL OF THE SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS.

I. Creates a department of education with a secretary in the President's Cabinet.

II. Provides Federal aid for education in the States, but prohibits Federal control.

(Prepared by national committee for a department of education. February, 1921.)

1. WHY SHOULD THERE BE A DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION WITH A SECRETARY IN THE PRESIDENT'S CABINET?

A. Education is of primary importance to the Nation, and should, therefore, receive primary recognition.

B. A department of education would make possible the more effective administration of many of the educational activities now distributed through several departments of the Federal Government.

C. We should make better provision for Federal leadership in educational research and development.

D. To accomplish a great national purpose there must be a national center from which shall radiate national influence.

E. A secretary of education would be in a position to participate in the preparation of the Federal budget and to recommend what should be appropriated for the promotion of education.

F. A secretary of education would assure our proper participation in the solution of international educational problems.

G. The above purposes can not be fully reached through either the present Bureau of Education or a Federal board for education.

2. WILL THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A FEDERAL DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION MEAN FEDERAL CONTROL OF EDUCATION IN THE STATES?

No; the bill says: "Courses of study, plans, and methods for carrying out the purposes and provisions of this act within a State shall be determined by the State and local educational authorities of said State, and this act shall not be construed to require uniformity of courses of study, plans, and methods in the several States in order to secure the benefits herein provided: And provided further, That all the educational facilities encouraged by the provisions of this act and accepted by a State shall be organized, supervised, and administered exclusively by the legally constituted State and local educational authorities of said State, and the secretary of education shall exercise no authority in relation thereto, except as herein provided, to insure that all funds apportioned to said State shall be used for the purposes for which they are appropriated by Congress."

The report (1201) of the House Committee on Education further says: "It can not be too strongly stated that this bill is to aid and encourage, and not to control. The bill instead of granting power to the Federal Government to control education within the States in the strongest possible provisions guards against it. The secretary of education is denied the right to establish standards or to exercise any power over the conduct of the schools. The only standards or conditions which must be met by the States in order to receive the benefits provided are clearly stated in the bill. All details with respect to courses of study, plans, and methods are left entirely to the States."

3. WILL THE BILL AFFECT PRIVATE AND PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS?

No. In order to receive an apportionment from the fund allotted to equalization, which is one-half the total appropriation, a State must see that instruction in the common-school branches in all schools, public and private, is in the English language, and that children between 7 and 14 years of age attend some school at least 24 weeks in the year. Further than this, Congress does not authorize and has no power under the Constitution to authorize any interference with private schools. In so far as State laws may require private schools to maintain the minimum standards of public schools, then any raising of the quality of the public schools will require a corresponding improvement in private schools, but this is purely a State matter.

4. FOR WHAT PURPOSES IS FEDERAL AID PROVIDED TO THE STATES BY THE BILL?

A. $7,500,000 for the removal of illiteracy.

B. $7,500,000 for Americanization.

C. $20,000,000 for physical education, including health education and sanitation.

D. $15,000,000 for the preparation of public-school teachers.

E. $50,000,000 for equalizing educational opportunities in the States.

It should be noted that these amounts are not appropriated by the bill; they are simply the maximum allotments authorized. It is very unlikely that the whole amount will ever be called for, because not every State will qualify under every section.

5. IS THE POLICY OF PROVIDING FEDERAL AID FOR THE PROMOTION OF STATE ACTIVITIES A NEW ONE?

No. The following precedents may be mentioned to indicate the acceptance of the principle that it is right and proper for the State to receive Federal aid in work of national importance:

A. The land act of 1785 set aside lot No. 16 in every township in the Northwest Territory for "the maintenance of public schools in the said township."

B. The ordinance of 1787 declared that "schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged."

C. As States were added to the Union Congress required them to set aside sections of land for school purposes.

D. In 1863 the Morrill Act established the "land-grant colleges" in each State and later acts have granted large annual appropriations.

E. In 1917 the Smith-Hughes Act established the Federal Board for Vocational Education which now distributes money to the States for vocational education and industrial rehabilitation.

F. Congress now distributes to the States about $100,000,000 a year to promote the building of roads.

6. WILL FEDERAL SUBSIDY MEAN FEDERAL CONTROL?

No; for allotments are made solely on the basis of population and similar factors named in the bill. A State needs only to meet the statutory requirements set up by the bill itself, the Secretary of Education being prohibited from exercising any further judgment in making allotments.

It will be observed that nowhere is power given the Secretary to establish standards, and the requirements for aid from the National Government are not made by him. All the standards and requirements are statutory and specifically noted in the bill, and can be changed only by Congress.

7. WHY SHOULD THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ENCOURAGE THE REMOVAL OF ILLITERACY.

A. The question of illiteracy in the Nation is both a national disgrace and a national menace.

B. The 1910 census showed 5,500,000 persons 10 years of age or over who could not read or write any language, and 3,500,000 more who could not speak, read, or write English.

C. Practically one-fourth of the men in the draft were illiterate. Since these men were chosen by lot, we must conclude that they represent the entire Nation fairly, and that the census reports are too optimistic. It is to be noted that in the Army illiteracy was determined by test, while the census figures were compiled by declaration only.

D. Secretary Lane estimated that the annual loss to the Nation from illiteracy alone at $826,000,000.

E. The Director of the Bureau of Mines states that of the 1,000,000 men engaged in mining in the United States 620,000 are foreigners and 460,000 can not speak English. He states that the removal of illiteracy among miners would annually save 1,000 lives and 150,000 injuries. One-half the industrial accidents are due to inability to read and understand danger warnings.

F. Illiteracy is neither sectional nor racial. It is national. It has been said that illiteracy is a southern problem. The facts do not warrant that conclusion. New York has 406,000 illiterates, Pennsylvania has 354,000, Illnois 168,000, and Massachusetts 141,000. Furthermore, illiteracy is decreasing faster in the South than in the North.

8. WHY SHOULD THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ENCOURAGE AMERICANIZATION?

A. The safety of the Nation rests in its citizens and the danger lies in the susceptibility of the ignorant to the plea of the agitator.

B. The problem is one of dealing with adults, not with children.

C. The persons to be reached are concentrated, to a large extent, in one-sixth of the States, but their influence is nation-wide.

9. WHY SHOULD THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ENCOURAGE EDUCATION?

A. The Provost Marshal General's report showed that nearly one-third of the men examined for military service were disqualified by reason of physical defects, 90 per cent of which could have been prevented by a knowledge of simple health rules.

B. The Nation as a whole is vitally interested in the development of a physically sound people for carrying on the affairs of home and of business.

C. In the call to military service the largest proportion of exemptions for physical defects is made in the States most neglectful of physical education. The States furthest advanced in this respect necessarily make the largest contributions to military service. The common belief that country children are more healthy is not borne out. We need to educate children in rural schools as well as in city schools in the fundamentals of health.

10. WHY SHOULD THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ENCOURAGE THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS?

A. Three hundred thousand persons now teaching in the United States have had no professional training whatever; thousands of schools are closed because teachers can not be obtained.

B. Large numbers of teachers move from State to State, which alone is enough to make this a national problem.

C. There is great need for the stimulation of teacher training in the several States.

11. WHY SHOULD THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT PROVIDE FUNDS FOR EQUALIZING EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES IN THE STATES?

A. The wealth of one State is $14,000 for each child of school age, while that of another State is only $2,000.

B. The greatest need for improvement in education is found where there is the least taxable wealth.

C. The most able and aggressive persons in rural districts gravitate toward the business centers. The wise conduct of industrial, commercial, and political affairs, centered in cities and sometimes in whole States, requires the proper education of those who, while born in the country, will handle these affairs in the city.

D. Wealth tends to become more concentrated than population.

E. The wealth concentrated in certain centers was not created there. The Federal income of $86,000,000 derived last year from the tax on the manufacture of cigarettes in North Carolina is properly returnable to the 48 States whose purchases make possible the cigarette industry. The same is true of manufactures in other States. It may be noted that the cigarette tax in this one State alone is nearly large enough to cover the entire appropriation of the educational bill.

12. SHOULD THOSE LIVING IN WEALTHIER STATES CONTRIBUTE TO THE EDUCATION OF CHILDREN IN POORER STATES?

A. The evidence is perfectly clear that the States individually can not furnish that equality of opportunity which is fundamental to our Government.

B. It is very much to the interest of the wealthy, industrial State to promote education in all the States and so make a better market for its goods. To fail to do this is to hamper the development of every State in the Union.

C. "Equal rights for all, special privileges for none."—Thomas Jefferson. "To all an unfettered start, and a fair chance in the race for life."—Abraham Lincoln. "A square deal for all."—Theodore Roosevelt.

13. DOES THE BILL PROVIDE FOR TAKING OVER THE VARIOUS EDUCATIONAL UNITS NOW IN OTHER DEPARTMENTS?

The department will include the Bureau of Education and such other educational agencies as Congress shall determine. This will be one of the things worked out by the Reorganization Commission just appointed by Congress.

14. WHAT PART OF THE MONEY APPROPRIATED TO THE STATES WILL BE USED FOR ADMINISTRATION OF THE ACT BY THE FEDERAL DEPARTMENTS?

Not one penny. Administration, including research, will be entirely covered by the $500,000 or such other amount as may be voted specifically for that purpose. Every cent appropriated by the bill for promotion of education in the States will be paid directly to the State treasurers.

15. HOW MAY THE STATES SPEND THEIR ALLOTMENTS?

In any way they see fit, provided they spend them wholly for the purposes for which they were allotted, i. e., illiteracy, teacher training, etc. The Secretary of Education is prohibited from exercising any control over the plans, means, or methods.

16. IN WHAT WAYS ARE THE STATES PROHIBITED FROM SPENDING ANY PORTION OF THE ALLOTMENTS UNDER THE BILL?

A. For the purchase or rental of land.

B. For debts or the interest thereon.

C. For the purchase, construction, rental, or repair of buildings.

D. For the purchase, rental, or replacement of equipment.

17. BY WHAT MEANS WILL THE STATES BE PREVENTED FROM WASTING THEIR ALLOTMENTS?

By the same means already in use in each State. The allotments go directly into the State treasury and must be appropriated and accounted for just as other State school funds are.

18. WHAT STATUTORY STANDARDS ARE SET UP IN THE BILL?

To receive any portion of the fund for equalization of educational opportunities ($50,000,000), a State must establish the following requirements and see that they are met:

A. A public-school opportunity of not less than 24 weeks.

B. Compulsory attendance at some school, public or private, for at least 24 weeks in the year, of all children between 7 and 14.

C. English the basic language of instruction in all schools, public and private, in the common branches.

19. WOULD ANY STATE BE BARRED FROM PARTICIPATION IF ITS OWN CONSTITUTION PREVENTED ITS MEETING THE THREE STANDARDS?

The bill says that in such a case the conditions are to be approximated as closely as the State constitution permits. No State would be barred, unless, although permitted by its own constitution, it refused to meet the three conditions by passing the proper laws. Most States have them.

20. WHAT MUST A STATE DO TO QUALIFY FOR ITS ALLOTMENT?

A. Meet the statutory requirements of the bill.

B. Appropriate for each purpose at least as much money as it expects to receive for that purpose, but not less than it so appropriated the year before. Of course, in this amount will be figured all appropriations for the same purpose by any city, town, county, or other subdivision maintaining public schools. The States are now spending more than ten times the total allotment, so that except in some cases for the special purposes, appropriations would not need to be increased to qualify for the total allotment to the State.

NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR A DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

JOHN HAYS HAMMOND.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have received a great number of telegrams to-day from citizens and newspapers of my State indorsing John Hays Hammond for appointment in the Cabinet of the President elect. I realize that it is a matter I have no influence in, but I have a very high regard for John Hays Hammond, as has practically every western man, and out of respect for the senders of these telegrams I ask leave to have printed just two of them in the RECORD. They are short.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the Senator read them.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will read them. The first is a telegram typical of those received from private citizens. I will simply use this one as an illustration:

CARSON, NEV., February 24, 1921.

KEY PITTMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Urge President Harding to select John Hays Hammond as a member of his Cabinet. His world-wide fame, his surpassing ability, and, more than all, his thorough knowledge of the needs of the Nation in this transition period from chaos to order and normality specially fit him for such a position. His selection would be a splendid recognition of the West and redound to the credit of the administration and be an honor to the Nation.

W. P. HARRINGTON,
Miss RUTH A. AVERILL,
A. L. CROSS,
JOS. A. PIERCY,
ROGER MATHEW,
LOUIS SPELLIER,
CLYDE GUMMOW,
Members Nevada State Legislature.

Here is one from a newspaper, which is similar to other newspaper telegrams:

CARSON, NEV., February 24, 1921.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Overwhelming sentiment for John Hays Hammond for place in Harding's Cabinet. His appointment would mean much for Nevada as well as the whole West, with whose interests you know he is in thorough accord. Urge his name to President. Hammond, with his world-wide reputation and high standing on this coast, would add great strength to the Cabinet.

T. D. VANDEWORT,
Editor and publisher Carson Appeal.

I will state that both Democrats and Republicans have their names appended to the telegrams.

RELIEF OF DISTRESS IN CHINA.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 260) appropriating $500,000 to convey cereals for the relief of China may be considered at this time. If it leads to debate, I will not pursue it. It is a very important matter, and if it is to be passed at all, it should be passed now and sent over to the House.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, this is a rather urgent measure, and if it will not lead to any discussion I shall not interfere with its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used for the transportation in vessels of either or both the Navy or the United States Shipping Board, which use is hereby authorized, of corn in bulk and other food products from the United States to China for the relief of their famine-stricken people: Provided, That the expenditure of this sum shall be under the supervision and direction of the President of the United States: Provided further, That in view of the fact that railroads and their employees are furnishing free transportation, farmers are donating corn and other cereals through the American Farm Bureau Federation, and other food products are being donated, and the American Committee for China Famine Fund is willing to bear any and all other expenses within the United States, no part of this sum shall be available for the purchase of said corn and other cereals, transportation, or for any other purposes within the United States not connected with the ocean transportation.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the situation in China may have been exaggerated, as some things are in newspaper reports, but there is no question that there are some 14,000,000 people in China who are now starving. It is running around 7,000 deaths a day. The farmers of this country have offered, through the American Farm Bureau Federation, to donate the corn and other food products. The railroads have offered to transport this foodstuff free to the coast. The brotherhoods and railroad employees have offered to furnish their labor free. The other expenses, the elevator charges, and matters of that kind, which will amount to some forty or fifty thousand dollars, are to be borne by the Chinese Relief Association.

The Navy has the boats, or they can be secured from the Emergency Fleet Corporation, to convey the corn and other cereals to China. The Chinese Relief Committee is an association with offices in New York, headed by Mr. Lamont, and the President of the United States addressed some 125 letters to different citizens of the United States, asking them to serve on that committee. They, coupled with the farmers, have been behind this work, and have already sent nearly a million dollars to China to be used there in purchasing foodstuffs.

That is the simple proposition, Mr. President; the Navy is to use its fleet of boats to transport this foodstuff to China. It may not cost this amount of money. The reservists will be called in for the Navy. They will get the amount of training they have to indulge in in any event. It is not only a piece of great humanity, it is a piece of great diplomacy, for China is one of the few friends we have left in the world. The men who have started and carried forward this movement have rendered a great service to humanity.

The Committee on Appropriations took up this question with the State Department, and I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD a letter received from the Secretary of State.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 23, 1921.

The Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Senate joint resolution 260, providing for the relief of famine sufferers in China.

The famine situation in north China has been a subject of careful investigation by American diplomatic and consular representatives in China, and the appeals for relief that have been issued have been based upon a knowledge of the results of that investigation. Reports indicate that a fairly large area, covering the northern part of Shantung Province, the northeastern part of Honan Province, the southern part of Shansi, and all of the Province of Chihli lying south and east of Peking, is suffering from a severe dearth of supplies of food, due to the failure of local crops because of lack of rain. This area is very densely populated, and all local reserves of grain were, as a result, quickly consumed by the people, so that at the present time they have neither supplies for food nor for seed purposes when the planting season returns.

At the present time organizations at Peking, Tientsin, and Tsinanfu, the capital of Shantung Province, are engaged in obtaining supplies of grain from Manchuria and other parts of China where the crops have been plentiful and are transporting these supplies to the regions affected by the famine. The Chinese Government and people are doing everything that they can to assist. The population of the area affected is not a rice-consuming population. Their main food is millet and corn.

In connection with the work which is being done in China, I might state for the information of the committee that the Chinese Government is collecting on surtaxes approximately $750,000 Mexican monthly. Additional surtaxes imposed on import and export dutites are soon to become effective and will furnish security for a loan which has been obtained from private foreign banks at Peking to the amount of $4,000,000 Mexican, which is to be devoted to famine relief. Free transportation is being granted to relief workers and supplies. Large contributions have been made by private Chinese families, among whom the Sheng family are reported to have contributed half a million, while President Hsu has subscribed $30,000 Mexican. To these sums should be added $500,000 United States currency contributed by the American Red Cross and $700,000 United States currency remitted by the American Committee for China Famine Fund. A recent report from Peking indicates that a total of $45,000,000 Mexican is necessary to complete the program of relief already laid out. The report states that besides unexpended balance of funds already collected, amounting to $3,000,000 Mexican, plus the estimated future contributions from other countries, amounting to $1,500,000 Mexican, plus the estimated result of a local campaign recently started in China, amounting to $1,000,000 Mexican, there is left the sum of approximately $35,000,000 Mexican to be raised for the purpose of buying food.

The reports indicate that preparations are already being made by the organizations now working in China to cope with any possible typhus or other epidemic which may follow this period of distress.

The above information has been received from the American minister at Peking; no official reports on this subject have reached the department through the Chinese Legation in Washington.

From the circumstances recited above it would appear to be very desirable to do what possibly can be done to meet the needs of the population in this famine-stricken area, and the department, for its part, would therefore welcome the passage of a resolution such as the one the committee has under consideration.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

BAINBRIDGE COLBY.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I was not able to attend the meeting of the Appropriations Committee yesterday, having been in conference on the emergency tariff bill, I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa whether the question of transportation after the corn is delivered was considered by the committee? Was there any information as to whether that would be taken care of?

Mr. KENYON. In China?

Mr. SMOOT. In China; that is, from the port of entry to the stricken districts.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; that was gone over. There is an all-American relief committee there, and they are the ones who will assist in the matter and help get the foodstuff to its destination.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator thinks it can be done?

Mr. KENYON. It can be done.

Mr. SMOOT. There were conflicting reports on that point, and I wanted to know whether that question had been considered.

Mr. KENYON. We had that before the committee, and the committee decided it could be done. The expenditure, of course, is limited to what the President may find necessary to spend. It may not require the amount of the appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee requests to strike out the preamble. It will be stricken out, without objection.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution for the relief of the famine-stricken people of China."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. H. Overhue, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15872) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922; that it had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 18, 19, 22, 23, 26, 32, 33, 34, and 36, and agreed to the same; that it had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 27 and 30 to the bill, and had agreed to each thereof with an amendment.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15441) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes; that it had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 7, 10, 12, 18, and 19 to the bill; that it had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 9, 13, 14, and 20, and had agreed to each thereof with an amendment.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15812) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922; had agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. MAGEE, and Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina were appointed managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

Joint resolution authorizing the legal heirs of certain officers of the United States Coast Guard who lost their lives when the Coast Guard cutter Tampa was destroyed in Bristol Channel September 26, 1918, to receive pay and allowances that would have accrued to said officers; and

H. J. Res. 465. Joint resolution for the appointment of one member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WOLCOTT presented memorials of Nan G. Walsh and Margaret A. Murphy, of Wilmington, Del., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. STERLING presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

A concurrent resolution memoralizing Congress and our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and the War Department, to use all honorable means to designate Fort Meade as a military hospital of the tenth public health district.

Whereas at the present time 16,000 disabled veterans of the World War are in dire need of hospital facilities and medical attention, and there are also a vast number of such veterans in need of supervised medical attention and opportunity to recuperate and convalesce under the most favorable health conditions; and

Whereas three separate inspections and examinations of Fort Meade were made during the year 1920 by eminent representatives of the Public Health Service, the last of which was made by Asst. Surg. Gen. Stimpson, of the Public Health Service, all of which reports strongly recommended the use of Fort Meade by the Public Health Service; and

Whereas the Public Health Service, by reason of those investigations and reports, endeavored to secure from the Secretary of War a transfer of said post for their purposes; and

Whereas South Dakota is situated in the tenth public health district, in which there is no central hospital, being limited entirely to surgical accommodations at Minneapolis, Minn.; and

Whereas it is now costing the Government $5,000 a month to maintain said post, without any tangible benefit to the Government; and

Whereas Fort Meade has the following outstanding characteristics and qualifications for such a hospital center:

It has its own water supply of the finest and purest water in the United States;

It is well equipped with $2,000,000 worth of modern buildings;

It has excellent railway facilities;

It has 1,800 square miles of Government land available for any purpose;

It is the geographical center of the tenth district of the Public Health Service; and

Whereas it is the healthiest post in the service of the United States Army, as shown by the records of the Surgeon General: Now, therefore, in the spirit of fairness to the men whose lives were offered to save our Government in its greatest peril, and in order to save the lives of those who are even now suffering for the lack of adequate hospital facilities: Be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, That we favor the designation of and earnestly urge the Congress of the United States and the War Department to take such steps as are necessary for the immediate use of Fort Meade, and we earnestly request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to employ their best efforts to that end. Be it further

Resolved, That an engrossed copy of this resolution be sent to the Congress of the United States and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress and to the Secretary of War by the secretary of the senate.

CARL GUNDERSON,
President of the Senate.
A. B. BLAKE,
Secretary of the Senate.
C. O. BERDAHL,
Speaker of the House.
WRIGHT TARBELL,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. STERLING presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

I, C. A. Burkhart, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the annexed bill, to wit, concurrent resolution, was duly passed by the seventeenth session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, approved by the governor, and that the same is now in full force and effect.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota at the city of Pierre February 21, 1921.

[SEAL.] C. A. BURKHART,
Secretary of State.

A concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to amend the transportation act, 1920, so as to eliminate therefrom the rule of rate making, and so as to preserve to the States control of intrastate affairs of common carriers.

Whereas by the provisions of section 15a of the transportation act, 1920, approved February 28, 1920, the Congress of the United States prescribed, "That during the period beginning March 1, 1920, the commission shall take as such fair return a sum equal to 5½ per cent of such aggregate value, but may, in its discretion, add thereto a sum not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent of such aggregate value to make provision, in whole or in part, for improvements, betterments, or equipment, which, according to the accounting system prescribed by the commission, are chargeable to capital account," and thereby enacted a rule of rate making, so called, to be observed by the Interstate Commerce Commission in exercising its power to prescribe just and reasonable interstates rates; and

Whereas the result of such rule of rate making, so called, is practically to guarantee to common carriers annual net earnings from operations and to remove the incentive for care and economy and expenditures for operations; and

Whereas the policy embodied in such rule of rate making is, in the opinion of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, detrimental to the public interests; and

Whereas by several provisions of the transportation act, 1920, approved February 28, 1920, the Congress of the United States vested broad powers in the Interstate Commerce Commission, which that commission is attempting to exercise with a view to controlling interstate commerce and the instrumentalities thereof and with a view to preventing discriminations against and burdens upon interstate commerce in such a way as to deprive the several States of their right to regulate, under the police powers, intrastate rates, services, and facilities, and the local affairs of common carriers: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota (the Senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of South Dakota hereby petitions and memorializes the Congress of the United States so to amend the transportation act, 1920, as to eliminate therefrom the rule of rate making, so called, and to so define and curtail the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission as to protect and preserve the powers of the several State commissions with relation to intrastate rates, services, and facilities, and the local affairs of common carriers within the States; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of South Dakota be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit a certified copy of this resolution to each United States Senator and each Representative in Congress of the State of South Dakota.

CARL GUNDERSON,
President of the Senate.
A. B. BLAKE,
Secretary of the Senate.
C. O. BERDAHL,
Speaker of the House.
WRIGHT TARBELL,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. STERLING presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, as follows:

A concurrent resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to enact national legislation to provide for Government review and approval of moving-picture film to be used in interstate commerce and showing to the public.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota (the Senate concurring):

Whereas there is a widespread agitation for a better supervision of moving pictures which are to be shown in places of public amusement; and

Whereas there is now no Government regulation for review and approval of such film to be transported in interstate commerce and shown to the public; and

Whereas State review and legislation interferes with and makes a burden on the local exhibitor instead of correcting the subject at the source of production: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we petition the Congress of the United States to enact such remedial legislation as will require the producers of all moving pictures calculated to be offered for transportation in interstate commerce and showing to the public to be reviewed by a legal board under authority of Congress to the end that all such films may have legal approval for public showing uniformly in public places of amusement within the States and Territories of the United States and not be subject to individual, local, or State restriction.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to send a copy of this memorial to each of the Representatives from the State of South Dakota in the Congress of the United States and to the presiding officers of the House and Senate of the United States Congress, and to each legislative assembly now convened and in session in the various States of the United States.

CARL GUNDERSON,
President of the Senate.
A. B. BLAKE,
Secretary of the Senate.
C. O. BERDAHL,
Speaker of the House.
WRIGHT TARBELL,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. STERLING presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

A concurrent resolution memorializing Congress and our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use all honorable means to secure the passage of the Rogers bill, known as H. R. 14961, for the establishment in the Interior Department of a bureau of veteran reestablishment, and for other purposes.

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring):

Whereas proper facilities for the care and treatment of war veterans suffering from disability or wounds incurred in the service have not been provided by the Federal Government out of the money appropriated by Congress for that purpose; and

Whereas many of such veterans are now being sent by the Government to local asylums, almshouses, and sanitariums operated for private gain, and which in many instances are unfit as places in which to furnish such care and treatment; and

Whereas the Rogers bill, known as H. R. 14961, now before Congress for consideration, provides for a consolidation of the several Government agencies dealing with such matters, and provides for the efficient administration of the funds appropriated by Congress for such purposes: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, That the Congress of the United States and our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and are hereby, urged to use all honorable means at their command to bring about the passage and approval of the said Rogers bill at the earliest possible date in order that such veterans may receive care and treatment in proper institutions through the consolidation of the several Government agencies dealing with such relief into the one bureau to be known as the bureau of veteran reestablishment as provided for in said Rogers bill. Be it further

Resolved, That an engrossed copy of this resolution be sent to the Congress of the United States and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress by the secretary of the senate.

President of the Senate.
A. B. BLAKE,
Secretary of the Senate.

Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. MYERS presented a memorial of the Legislature of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the following is a true and correct copy of an act entitled "A memorial to the President and to Congress of the United States for the setting aside of certain lands covered and known as 'The Gates of the Rocky Mountains' into a national monument and withdrawing the same from entry," enacted by the seventeenth session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by Joseph M. Dixon, governor of said State, on the 21st day of February, 1921.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 21st day of February, A. D. 1921.

[SEAL.] C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

A substitute for house joint memorial No. 3 introduced by committee on Federal relations.

A memorial to the President and to Congress of the United States for the setting aside of certain lands covered and known as "The Gates of the Rocky Mountains" into a national monument and withdrawing the same from entry.

Be it resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana that the following memorial be adopted: Your memorialists, members of the Seventeenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, in regular session assembled, the senate and house concurring, respectfully represent:

Whereas within the boundaries of sections 18, 19, 30, and 31 of township 13 north of range 2 west, and sections 10, 11, 12, 13, 24, 25, and 35 of township 13 north of range 3 west, and the north one-half of section 1, township 12 north of range 3 west, of Montana's principal meridian, are contained the towering rocks with the Missouri River flowing between, and forming a famous and historical canyon named by the explorers, Lewis and Clark, as, "The Gates of the Rocky Mountains"; and

Whereas the same presents a distinctive and magnificent example of western scenery which should be preserved and protected in its present state unto the future ages; and

Whereas the withdrawing of the same from entry and settlement would be no interference with the agricultural or other productive activities in the vicinity: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Seventeenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, in regular session assembled, the senate concurring, That we do hereby petition the President of the United States to cause the said "Gates of the Rocky Mountains" to be withdrawn from entry and settlement and set aside as a national monument, and that the Congress of the United States take such action as will cause the same to become a perpetual national monument and be preserved unto the future ages for the benefit of all the people of our land; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Montana forward a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of the United States Senate, to the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each United States Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Montana.

PERCY F. DODDS,
Speaker of the House pro tempore.
NELSON STORY, Jr.,
President of the Senate.

Approved February 21, 1921.

JOSEPH M. DIXON, Governor.

Filed for record February 21, 1921, at 11.50 o'clock a. m.

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution of the military committee of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, of Cleveland, Ohio, favoring legislation creating a bureau of veteran reestablishment in the Interior Department, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of Local Union No. 3298 of Farmers' Union, of Judsonia, Ark., favoring legislation to prevent gambling in grain products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BALL presented memorials of Nan G. Walsh and Margaret A. Murphy, of Wilmington, Del., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution adopted at the Alum Creek Quarterly Meeting of the Friends' Church, of Columbus, Ohio, favoring the enactment of the so-called Jones-Miller bill, prohibiting the export of opiates, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. POINDEXTER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 816) thereon.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2120) for the relief of certain officers in the United States Army, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 817) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WOLCOTT:

A bill (S. 5037) to enlarge, extend, remodel, etc., public building at Dover, Del.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland:

A bill (S. 5038) to amend and reenact subdivision (a) of section 209 of the transportation act, 1920; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HENDERSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed, as follows:

On page 17, line 15, after the numbers "1920," substitute a comma for the period and add the following: "nor to prohibit the enlistment in addition thereto of Flying Cadets to the number now authorized by law."

CHRISTIAN PEOPLES OF THRACE, CONSTANTINOPLE, AND ANATOLIA.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 463), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas the treaty of Sevres, which settled the terms of peace with the Turks, made territorial adjustments in the interest of the Christian populations of eastern Europe and Asia Minor, and particularly extended the boundaries of Greece to include Thrace, Smyrna, and the Ægean Islands, thus restoring in part the ancient Greek national territories; and

Whereas the Government and people of the United States have always taken a friendly interest in the Greek people and in the restoration of their ancient liberties and national territories; and

Whereas it is possible for Turks and non-Christian peoples to fully enjoy personal and religious liberty and security under Greek law and sovereignty, and it is impossible for Greeks or other Christians to enjoy personal or religious liberty or security under Turkish domination; and

Whereas the Christian and non-Christian nations are so intermingled in the regions of Thrace, Constantinople, and Anatolia that territorial boundaries can not be arranged to strictly follow ethnic or national lines; and

Whereas the treaty of Sevres made territorial dispositions which properly protected the rights of the Christian peoples and made due provision to secure the personal and religious liberty of the Turkish and non-Christian population; and

Whereas the Turks are demanding the restoration of their régime in Thrace, Constantinople, and Smyrna, and for this purpose are asking that the treaty of Sevres be revised in their interest: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that there be no revision of the treaty of Sevres which will in anywise diminish or restrict the territories awarded to Greece, or which will diminish or restrict the rights and liberties of the Christian peoples within the former Turkish Empire, and that the Senate expresses the hope that the supreme council of the allies and the council of the League of Nations will give paramount consideration to the rights, liberties, and interests of the Christian peoples of Thrace, Constantinople, and Anatolia, and will not permit any restoration of intolerable Turkish dominion over them, but that the liberties achieved for them by the victory of the Allies over the Turks and incorporated in the treaty of Sevres will be entirely established and perpetuated.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. TOWNSEND submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15441) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 6, 8, 16, and 17.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 11, 15, and 21, and agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 7, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 18, 19, and 20.

CHARLES B. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

MARTIN B. MADDEN,
CHAS. F. OGDEN,
E. E. HOLLAND,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask to have the action of the House of Representatives read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 24, 1921.

Resolved, That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 7, 10, 12, 18, and 19 of the bill (H. R. 15441) entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes," and agrees to the same.

That the House recedes from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 9, and agrees to the same with the following amendment: Strike out all of the matter inserted by said amendment commencing with the word "Provided," in line 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That postal employees and substitute postal employees who served in the military, marine, or naval service of the United States during the World War and have not reached the maximum grade of salary shall receive credit for all time served in the military, marine, or naval service, on the basis of one day's credit of eight hours in the Postal Service for each day served in the military, marine, or naval service, and be promoted to the grade to which such postal employee or substitute postal employee would have progressed had his original appointment as substitute been to grade one. The provisions herein shall be effective as of date of passage of the original act of June 5, 1920."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 13, and agrees to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by the said amendment insert the following: ": Provided further, That the Postmaster General may contract with any individual, firm, or corporation for the transportation of mail by airplane between such points as he may deem advisable and designate, in case such transportation service is furnished at a cost not greater than the actual cost of the same service by rail, and shall pay therefor out of the appropriation for inland transportation by railroad routes."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 14, and agrees to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,250,000."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8, after "proper," insert ": Provided, That the said commission shall not expend a greater sum than $150,000 during the fiscal year 1922."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments to the Senate amendments numbered 9, 13, 14, and 20.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does that end it?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That ends it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is passed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15872) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8, 20, and 35.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 15, 21, and 24, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$379,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$403,600"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "$5,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$18,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,874,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,909,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,400,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments: Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 18, 19, 22, 23, 26, 27, 30, 32, 33, 34, and 36.

CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN JACOB ROGERS,
J. A. ELSTON,
JNO. H. SMALL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. As I understood from the reading of the report, it is stated that the Senate has receded from certain amendments. What are those amendments?

Mr. LODGE. I have not a copy of the bill at hand, but I will say to the Senator that we receded from the amendment in relation to the Ellen M. Stone ransom fund. That is one of the amendments in which I know the Senator is interested. The House, however, simply would not accept it. On amendment No. 8 we receded. That amendment involved merely an increase in the appropriation for clerks at embassies and legations. Amendment No. 20 involved an increase in the appropriation for the international joint commissions. Amendment No. 35 related to the Ellen M. Stone ransom fund, as I remember.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator what was done with respect to the amendment proposing an increase in the allowance for clerk hire in the Consular Service?

Mr. LODGE. We compromised on that. I can give the Senator all the figures, if he desires them.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not particular as to that; I will look into the matter later. I do not intend to interpose any objection——

Mr. LODGE. There is a message from the House in connection with the conference report, although it will not show explicitly some of the compromises which have been reached.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not intend to interpose any objection, because I think I realize some of the difficulties which confronted the Senator and the other conferees.

Mr. LODGE. It is an extremely complicated matter to get through a conference report under the conditions imposed by the present rules of the House of Representatives. In the simpler language of an older day, I should say that a complete agreement has been reached. The conference report shows there were 36 amendments, including 3 trifling amendments, put on by the Senate. They consisted for the most part of original House provisions which we restored, but 22 of them in disagreement were taken back to the House of Representatives, and after four hours that body agreed to all the conferees had done except as to 1 small amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator further what was done with respect to the amendment relating to the purchase of embassies?

Mr. LODGE. The House receded from its disagreement to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill, which the Secretary will read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 24, 1921.

Resolved, That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 18, 19, 22, 23, 26, 32, 33, 34, and 36 to the bill (H. R. 15872) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922," and agrees to the same.

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out line 4 of the matter inserted by said amendment and all of line 5 of such matter up to and including the word "paragraph" and in lieu thereof insert the following: "suitable buildings, or buildings and grounds, for embassy, legation, and consular purposes, separate or combined, in any city specified in connection with the foregoing appropriation of $300,000."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 30, and agrees to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$250,000."

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 27 and 30.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That winds the matter up?

Mr. LODGE. That makes a complete agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. So the Chair understands; and the bill is finally passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of House bill 15935, the unfinished business, and I ask that the bill may be read.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15935) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, as follows:

For the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interests of commerce and navigation, $15,000,000.

For examinations, surveys, and contingencies for rivers and harbors for which there may be no special appropriation, $250,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended for any preliminary examination, survey, project, or estimate not authorized by law.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. On page 2, line 4, I move to strike out "$15,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$33,000,000."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harris	McNary	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Harrison	Moses	Smoot
Calder	Heflin	Myers	Spencer
Capper	Henderson	Nelson	Stanley
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	New	Sterling
Culberson	Kellogg	Overman	Sutherland
Cummins	Kendrick	Owen	Thomas
Curtis	Kenyon	Phipps	Townsend
Dial	Keyes	Pittman	Trammell
Dillingham	King	Poindexter	Underwood
Elkins	Kirby	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Fernald	Knox	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Fletcher	La Follette	Robinson	Walsh, Mont.
Gay	Lenroot	Sheppard	Willis
Gerry	Lodge	Simmons	Wolcott
Gooding	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.
Gronna	McKellar	Smith, Ga.
Hale	McLean	Smith, Md.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I had hoped that some member of the committee who had voted in favor of recommending the amount carried in the bill would say something to justify the very small appropriation which has been recommended by the Committee on Commerce for river and harbor improvements for the next 18 months, but it seems that no member of the committee is willing to defend the action of the committee or to attempt to justify the $15,000,000 proposed to be appropriated in a lump sum to carry on river and harbor improvements until July, 1922.

The amendment which I have offered proposes to strike out $15,000,000 and to substitute $33,000,000. Some one may wonder why I have asked that the sum of $33,000,000 be substituted for $15,000,000. The answer is very distinctly and succinctly stated in the last paragraph of a letter written by Maj. Gen. Lansing H. Beach to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], on February 5, 1921. The Senator from Washington propounded to Gen. Beach the following specific question:

> What, in your judgment, is the lowest possible sum that will meet the needs of our commerce during the coming fiscal year? If a greater sum than $15,000,000 is required, state the minimum sum you think we will need, and give the reasons therefor, and state what work should be done that can not be done with $15,000,000 and the amount already on hand.

Of course, $15,000,000 was the amount that had been appropriated by the House for river and harbor improvements during the coming 18 months. Here is the answer of Gen. Beach, and I sincerely hope that those Senators in whose States rivers and harbors are located will listen to the answer of Gen. Beach, given in reply to the question of the chairman of the committee, and if that answer can justify a vote against the amendment which I have proposed, then Senators may answer to their constituents for their action.

The answer of Gen. Beach is as follows:

> My opinion as to the total amount which should be provided is stated in a letter dated January 29, 1921, to Hon. John H. Small—

I shall read that letter later—> in reply to specific questions asked by him, a copy of which letter and reply was furnished to you. While the river and harbor appropriation bill was under consideration by the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee during January, Gen. Taylor worked with the committee for about two weeks, and during that time every item of the estimates was given searching investigation.

That was in connection with a recommendation of $57,000,000 for the next 18 months for river and harbor improvements, and anyone who will take the time to read the testimony of Gen. Taylor before the House Rivers and Harbors Committee will be forced to the conclusion that Gen. Taylor justified every recommendation made by the Engineer's Office for the whole sum of $57,000,000, but the letter goes further. Gen. Beach says:

> As a result of this careful consideration I am satisfied that the minimum amount which should be appropriated is $33,000,000. This allows only for the prosecution of the work urgently necessary and at a very moderate rate.

So I can not understand the reason which actuated the Committee on Commerce in reducing the amount of $33,000,000, which was suggested by Gen. Beach as the very smallest possible amount that was needed and that should be allowed "for the prosecution of the work urgently necessary and at a very moderate rate"; yet we find that the amount which was considered necessary by the engineers has been reduced from $33,000,000 to $15,000,000. There is not a project in the whole United States that will not suffer and upon which there will be done from two to four times less work with the reduced appropriation of $15,000,000 than would be done if the $57,000,000 appropriation originally recommended by the department to the House Rivers and Harbors Committee were allowed.

If I am mistaken in the suggestion, I hope the Senator from Washington will correct me. I also trust he will listen to me on this proposition, because no one attempts to justify it, and I desire to elicit some answer from members of the committee touching this matter. I am interested in it because there are harbors in my State which have been filled up for the past six years because of inadequate appropriations. I can see that the commerce of the country is greatly affected by lack of proper provision being made for the maintenance and care of river and harbor improvements; I can see that the niggardly policy that has been pursued by the Congress in failing to appropriate adequate sums is affecting commerce, and in my opinion it is a species of economy, or pretended economy, that works wastefulness instead of actual economy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What was the answer of the engineer as to the amount required? I did not hear the answer that he gave to the question.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator from Washington that this was in answer to the question that was propounded by the chairman of the Commerce Committee of the Senate, as follows:

> What, in your judgment—

Says the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to Gen. Beach—> is the lowest possible sum that will meet the needs of our commerce during the coming fiscal year, and if a greater sum than $15,000,000 is required state the minimum sum you think we will need and give the reasons therefor and state what work should be done that can not be done with $15,000,000 and the amount already on hand?

The last clause of the answer is:

> As a result of this careful consideration, I am satisfied that the minimum amount which should be appropriated is $33,000,000. This allows only for the prosecution of the work urgently necessary and at a very moderate rate.

A Member of the Senate who is not fortunate enough to be on the great Commerce Committee of the Senate is in a very disadvantageous position. There are no printed reports of hearings before that committee. There are no data on which such a Member can base the actions of the committee, and so we are just groping in darkness so far as our actions are concerned. I have read, however, the hearings before the House Rivers and Harbors Committee; I have read the communications and recommendations of the War Department to the Congress of the United States, and I know what the action of the Congress has been for the past few years in failing to provide adequate appropriations for river and harbor improvements.

I need only call the attention of the Senate to the fact that last year the War Department recommended an appropriation of $43,000,000 to carry on the river and harbor work for the then coming year, and that the House of Representatives reduced that amount to a lump sum of $12,000,000, and it got to the Senate and the Senate discussed and considered the matter. The Senate Committee on Commerce recommended that that sum be increased $8,000,000, raising the $12,000,000 to a lump sum of $20,000,000. An amendment was adopted on the floor of the Senate making it $24,000,000. It passed by a fairly large majority; it went back into conference, and by some hypnotic influence exercised by the House conferees over the Senate conferees the amount finally appropriated was $12,000,000. So the only reason I know or can conceive of for the action of the Senate Commerce Committee this time in recommending the appropriation of only $15,000,000 when the War Department recommended $57,000,000 in the first instance, and reduced it only to $33,000,000 to take care of the immediate needs and emergencies that might arise on the rivers and harbors of the country, is that the House had appropriated $15,000,000, that they had forced the Senate conferees last year to come to their way of thinking, notwithstanding the action of the Senate in increasing the amount from $12,000,000 to $24,000,000 last year, and that they realized that it was impossible to increase the amount this year, and they took the judgment of the House on this proposition.

I know what whole-hearted and sincere interest the members of the Commerce Committee of the Senate have in river and harbor improvement. I know how hard they have fought for years in this body for appropriations to carry on this great work upon the part of the Government, and their judgment may be right. They may think it is impossible to get any more; that the bill might die in this Congress if the amount should be increased, and their action may have been prompted because of that. I hope that is their reason, because I should dislike very much to think that the men who are on that committee, who have such interest in river and harbor improvement, and who have exercised their influence for so long a time in behalf of large and reasonable and adequate appropriations to carry on river and harbor work, have lessened in their ardor and enthusiasm for river and harbor improvement in the United States.

I find this state of facts to exist, also: Last year, when we appropriated only $12,000,000 for river and harbor work, it was for a period of eight months. Bear that in mind, Senators, that the last river and harbor appropriation bill provided appropriations for only eight months. This year we are making appropriations until July, 1922, and the action of the House and the action of the Senate is based on the fact that this appropriation is for 18 or 19 months. If I am mistaken about that I should like to have the Senator from Washington correct me on that proposition.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I shall express myself on the matter when the Senator gets through, unless he desires an answer right now.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator from Washington that I made the statement that the last river and harbor bill provided appropriations for only eight months, whereas in this bill, unless an appropriation bill is passed at the extra session of Congress, we must provide appropriations until July, 1922.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The last bill was an annual appropriation bill, of course, based on the theory that we would pass a river and harbor bill before the 4th of March.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This bill runs, of course, until June 30, 1922, with the probability as well as the possibility that we will pass another bill many months before that time.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. The chairman of the committee does not think that there will be any river and harbor bill during the extra session of Congress?

Mr. JONES of Washington. In my judgment there will be a legislative river and harbor bill in the coming extra session of Congress, and if any particular necessity exists there will be an appropriation passed early in the session beginning in December, long before the expiration of the fiscal year.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, in December; but I mean in the extra session. That legislative bill will take care of preliminary surveys, and things like that?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Preliminary surveys and modifications of projects, and it will provide for new projects, and probably will also make available a lot of money that is now appropriated for different projects that have been lying idle for years and can be very well taken from those projects and made available for others. That can be taken care of in the extra session, and I have not any doubt but that in the regular session a regular river and harbor bill will be passed several months before the 30th of June, 1922.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but this bill is framed on the theory that this money is to run the Government for river and harbor improvement until July, 1922.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, technically that is the legislative situation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, aside from the fact that in the river and harbor appropriation bill last year we were providing for river and harbor improvements for eight months, and appropriated $12,000,000, this year we are appropriating $15,000,000, which must run until July, 1922. On the facts presented it is 18 or 19 months from the time these estimates were made, which was in December last year.

It was argued last year that one of the reasons why this small amount was appropriated was because of the large unexpended balance on hand, and it was cited to us that there was some $37,000,000—around $60,000,000—then on hand that could be used, and that was why the amount was reduced to the $12,000,000 figure. Of course, the fact was also disclosed that the unexpended balances that were on hand were for certain projects, and that the money had been allotted to carry on certain projects under certain conditions, and so forth. We find that on December 31 of last year there was only $41,658,334 on hand. We are appropriating for 18 or 19 months, until July, 1922, only $15,000,000, with $41,658,334 on hand. On December 31, 1920, last year, we appropriated for eight months $12,000,000, with practically $60,000,000 unexpended; but of this $41,000,000 that the Engineer Department says was on hand December 31, 1920, $17,648,263 had already been contracted for.

The balance was available, but it had been allotted to certain projects for maintenance along certain rivers and certain harbors throughout the country. On December 31, 1920, the remarkable fact existed that there was unallotted from the 1920 appropriation, to run until the present bill might become a law, only $1,633,000. That is all the engineers had on December 31, 1920, out of the $12,000,000 appropriation that was passed last year for river and harbor improvements to take care of emergencies and everything—$1,633,650. So it can not be argued this year that there is a large unexpended balance on hand. The facts are that for years and years there has always been on hand, unexpended on contracts where conditions had not been met, an amount that exceeded the $41,658,000 that was on hand December 31, 1920, because it was stated by the War Department, in the consideration of the bill last year, that the amount then on hand unexpended was no greater than the amount usually carried as unexpended year by year. That money can not be used in every instance.

There are conditions imposed on certain contracts in the country. They say, for illustration, "We appropriate $500,000 for a channel 23 feet deep, provided you will build a wharf half a mile long and a quarter of a mile wide, or provided that local interests will put up $100,000 a year for five years." Conditions are imposed in that way, and the amount is appropriated and allotted on the theory that those conditions must be complied with. During the war there were many of those conditions not complied with because of the peculiar and abnormal conditions that prevailed throughout the country. So I say it is an unfair argument to state that there is a large amount on hand unexpended and that that should be added to the appropriation now being carried year by year.

What has been the history of river and harbor legislation heretofore? Let me read from the report of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, Mr. DEMPSEY, and I think it is incorporated in the report of the Senate Committee on Commerce. They named the expenditure and tried to justify in part their action because of the expenditure of the War Department year by year for river and harbor improvement. Here is what they said:

The annual expenditures for works of river and harbor improvement, from 1896 to 1920, inclusive, have been as follows:

Then they cite the amounts on down the line through the years. In 1896 they expended only $14,745,000. Then they go on down through the years, including the years of the war, and show the amounts expended. They show that in 1914 there was expended in round numbers, $39,000,000; in 1915, $37,000,000; in 1916, $28,000,000; in 1917, $23,000,000; in 1918, $20,000,000; in 1919, $21,000,000; in 1920, $33,000,000. Then they take the average from 1896 down to 1920 of the expenditures during those years for river and harbor improvement and they say the average is $22,662,962. They get that average by adding all of the expenditures for river and harbor improvements from 1896 to 1920 and dividing that result by the number of years, when the chairman of the committee which made the report knows that the Congress of the United States did not begin a consistent policy of river and harbor improvement through annual appropriation bills until some years after 1896; I think it was only about 1910. Back in 1898, I think it was, or at any rate a few years before 1900, they would pass a river and harbor bill sometimes only once in two years and sometimes only once in three years.

Everyone knows that the argument was made against river and harbor appropriations being provided according to the recommendations of the War Department during the recent war because it was said we should economize during the war so we could provide money for the Army, for the Navy, and for food and clothing for the soldiers and sailors. During the year 1918 only $20,360,000 was expended. They could not expend above that amount because labor was too high and material was too high. The contracts could not be entered into for river and harbor improvement work, and so the amounts appropriated were low, and yet the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House state, and it is quoted in the report of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, that $22,662,962 is the average expenditure for river and harbor improvement from 1896 to 1920. If Senators will take from that list of expenditures year by year, the years during the war when curtailment was made in the expenditure of money because, as I have stated, of the high price of material and the high cost of labor, and take from it also those years that are included in the report before a definite and fixed policy of river and harbor improvement was entered upon by the Government, when in some cases an appropriation for river and harbor work was made only once in three years, and in other cases only once in two years, they will find that the average expenditure year by year was $30,000,000.

Take the last normal year of 1914 by way of illustration. That was when our policy had become fixed and definite, and we were beginning work along definite lines upon the rivers and harbors of the country, when the people had come to understand that our commerce must be maintained, that the rivers must be improved, that the harbors must be dredged in order that our merchant marine might enter and our commerce find its place in the markets of the world. We find in that year that we expended $39,817,000, and yet the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, indorsed by the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, say that we must not this year appropriate more than $15,000,000 for 18 months' work, until July, 1922, to take care of the rivers and harbors of the land, and that notwithstanding the fact that last year we gave the niggardly and measly sum of only $12,000,000 for river and harbor improvement for the entire year.

If any member of the committee, if the chairman of the committee even, can justify that action, I should be delighted to hear from him. It can not be justified, except, as I said, they just thought it would be impossible to increase the amount even though they desired to do it and though it was necessary to do it, but they would not do it in order that they might be assured of passing the legislation during the closing hours of this session of the Congress. I sincerely hope that is true. Nothing would make my heart bleed more than to think that the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], the chairman of the committee, who has always fought for reasonable appropriations for rivers and harbors, had grown cold toward the proposition, lukewarm toward river and harbor improvement, turned his back upon his friends and those who have always fought side by side with him here in obtaining reasonable appropriations for rivers and harbors.

I know that the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] have been pioneers in the work of river and harbor improvement. Their voices have rung in this Chamber for years in urging the Congress to take care of the great commerce that comes into our harbors and rolls over our rivers throughout the country. They have presided over river and harbor congresses; they have at their own expense attended conventions and associations all over the country. I know that their action on this occasion, their desire to have the $15,000,000 appropriation, is based solely upon their belief that they could not get any more during this session of Congress.

But we can not allow the mystic, hypnotic influence of the House to prevail over us in withholding appropriations that are needed to carry on river and harbor improvement. I love the Members of the House, I love the associations over there, but in river and harbor appropriations the majority of the House are not in sympathy with the sentiment of the country for reasonable and adequate appropriations for rivers and harbors. They are not leaders who can be followed by men who believe in reasonable and adequate appropriations to maintain our commerce and river and harbor improvement. For my part, I shall not follow the House if they in their judgment see fit to appropriate only $15,000,000, when they have been told the contrary by the experts of the War Department, when the facts justify more from every angle, when the facts stare them in the face in proof absolutely to the contrary of their action, and yet they reduce the amount to $15,000,000.

Under those circumstances, when I know the amount appropriated should be more, I shall not only not follow them, but I shall combat them. If I thought the judgment of the Senate Committee on Commerce was wrong in the matter of the amount proposed to be appropriated, I could not afford to go down to the people in my State who are interested in maintaining the improvement of the great rivers and great harbors and justify my course by saying I have some very dear friends on the Committee on Commerce who believe that $15,000,000 is the most that they should recommend to be appropriated. They know that a Senator of the United States has a vote, that he has the right to speak, and that he has the right to exercise his judgment and determine his own course of action, and that he should do it; and so every Senator here to-day will have the right to vote on the amendment which I have proposed.

If he votes against it, then he can go back to Walla Walla, or some other place in Washington; to Michigan, up to Minnesota, over to Boston, to Philadelphia, to Minneapolis, to Portland, down into Florida and Louisiana and Texas and everywhere else, and explain to the people there why his judgment dictated to him to vote against the amendment, and for only $15,000,000.

But it can not be justified by the facts. Let us exercise our right as Senators. Let us follow our judgment, and let us have an amount which will reasonably maintain these harbors and these rivers for the next 18 months, and then if the House sees fit not to accept the increase we put on, let them answer to their constituents. But in the discharge of a duty, when we know that the facts warrant an increase, let us not be influenced to vote against it simply because we want to be with the House; because we do not want it to go to conference, and we can get out of a fight; that we can save a controversy; that we can put it over a day or two sooner than we would if it should go to conference. I am willing to see it go to conference. There, if it has to die, let the crisis be met. We have followed this niggardly, this unwise policy of refusing to provide adequately to protect these rivers and harbors, for some years now. There is not a harbor in the United States that is not filling up. There are too many dredge boats lying idle, rusting; there are too many rivers the banks of which have caved in, which have not been improved according to the great policy inaugurated some years ago to build up our commerce. Let us take the responsibility upon our shoulders. If the House does not want to accept it, and they want it to go to conference and let it die, then the fault will be with them; it will not be with us.

There is coming an extra session of Congress. I know what is going to happen to the harbors in my State, and Senators here need not be fooled as to what will happen to the rivers and harbors in their States. This is what will happen: The War Department says they need $57,000,000. You are giving them by this bill $15,000,000. In other words, for every $4 they need, you are giving them $1, and they can do one-fourth of the work on the harbor in your State or the river in your State, that the War Department says they need. The harbor and the river will suffer to that extent.

I am not willing to do it. I have seen these harbors fill up during the last six or seven years because of inadequate appropriations, and it is high time we started to do something to maintain the commerce we have expended millions and billions of dollars to build up. We appropriated three billion and a half to get a merchant marine. For what purpose? Pray tell me why we need ships, if you are going to let the harbors fill up, and they can not come in. It is an unwise policy. It looks as if everybody can get what he wants for other projects; every interest can be cared for, except the rivers and harbors of the country, which God Almighty gave us, and which we should improve.

Let a railroad measure come in, and everybody grabs it enthusiastically, and Senators run off with it. They do not care how much the amount may be. But a river and harbor bill has to be cut down to one-fourth of what is asked.

I am not for that. I want to see the railroads taken care of. I want to see the rates made reasonable, but I want at the same time to see the roadways of the country, the dirt roads, provided for, and the harbors and rivers cleared out, so that the great carriers of our commerce can sail over them, and you can not do it by voting for this bill reported by the Committee on Commerce.

I have some interesting documents here. They do not justify or excuse the action of the Senate Commerce Committee in reporting this $15,000,000 bill. Listen, Senators, to this letter which the chairman of the committee was so kind as to give to me. I could not get it at the War Department; I could not find it in the hearings, because they do not hold any hearings. I could not find it as a printed document, because they do not have them printed. I know it is not because the committee does not want anybody who is not on the committee to know what they are doing, in order to criticize their action, because the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] was kind to me. I heard that such a letter had been written in this matter, and I asked him about it, and he gladly turned it over to me. Let me read it.

After the House had put over this niggardly bill, this measly appropriation of $15,000,000, one-fourth of what the War Department said they needed, the Senator from Washington wanted to know what the War Department thought about it, and so, doubtless at the instance of the Commerce Committee, he wrote a letter to Gen. Beach. Here is one of the questions he asked him:

> How much of the money provided in the last river and harbor act is still available for allotment?

The answer of Gen. Beach to that question is:

There still remains available for allotment from the funds provided by the last river and harbor act $1,633,650.

It is an outrage, Senators, that only $1,633,000 remains unallotted out of the last river and habor act on December 1, which might have to run over the 4th of March. If some serious condition should develop suddenly which needed attention, what would you do? You have no money left over, and it is due to the action of the Congress in failing to provide adequate appropriations. Everyone who votes for these measly amounts, and against increasing the amount to a reasonable basis, is responsible for the condition stated there. December 1, $1,633,650 of the amount that was appropriated last year is on hand now, not allotted.

Mr. President, if I misstate anything, if I give the wrong construction about any of these propositions, I do hope—indeed, I pray—that some member of the Senate Commerce Committee will call be to taw, because I do not want to mislead anyone. I want to give the facts to the Senate. Further, Gen. Beach said:

This balance would have been allotted, and probably expended by this date, had it not been for the fact that it was regarded absolutely essential to maintain a small working balance applicable for unexpected emergencies which might occur. This balance would probably have been no larger than its present size had the appropriation in 1920 been fifteen million or twenty million.

Indeed, if it had been fifty million it would have been about the same amount, probably. You have to hold a little bit back. But the War Department will be forced to spend every nickel without holding anything back, because if they do not there will be Members of the House and Members of the Senate rising in their places and saying: "Oh, we have an unexpended balance up there," and take that as an excuse for not increasing the amount according to the recommendation of the War Department.

The Senator from Washington asked another question—and these are very pertinent questions he propounded to the general. The Senator from Washington asked Gen. Beach:

Has any apparent injury occurred to commerce that can be traced to our failure to appropriate more than $12,000,000 in the last act; and if so, where did it occur?

That is a pertinent question. Here is the answer, quote a long answer, but he answered him:

I am not able to say that any apparent injury has occurred to commerce on account of the failure to appropriate more than $12,000,000 in the last act. Numerous complaints have been received with reference to shoaling, but I have been able generally to allot funds sufficient for the removal of such shoals as were evidently causing serious obstruction to navigation. There has, however, been a great falling off in the rate of prosecution of some of the projects—

Listen to me, the senior Senator from Ohio; listen to me, the junior Senator from Ohio; listen to me, the junior Senator from Pennsylvania. Here is what Gen. Beach said:

There has, however, been a great falling off in the rate of prosecution of some of the projects, such as the improvements of the channels in New York Harbor—

I do not see at this time the distinguished Senators from New York. I shall tell them about it when they come into the Senate. I want their attention called to it, so that there can be no excuse for a vote against the amendment I have offered.

There has, however, been a great falling off in the rate of prosecution of some of the projects, such as the improvements of the channels in New York Harbor—

The other day a delegation from New York, headed by the mayor of New York City, came to Washington in the interest of river improvements. I do not know what assurances they got. They probably asked for bread, but they would get a stone if their Senators vote for the bill that is recommended by the Commerce Committee. But may I say to the senior Senator from Ohio that he does not confine it to New York City? May I say to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania that he does not confine it to New York City? He says:

There has, however, been a great falling off in the rate of prosecution of some of the projects, such as the improvements of the channels in New York Harbor, the Delaware River—

That great stream which needs improvement. Gen. Taylor told me no longer ago than yesterday that if this bill passes in this form, for two years improvements would stop on the harbors and the rivers of the country; that about all they could do with that amount would be to maintain their present condition. In other words, those localities which are striving, and have been striving so long to get an increase from a 17-foot depth to a 20-foot depth, must wait two years longer, with the amount that is recommended by the Senate Commerce Committee, the niggardly, measly sum of $15,000,000.

He did not stop with the Delaware River. He said:

There has, however, been a great falling off in the rate of prosecution of some of the projects, such as the improvement of the channels in New York Harbor, the Delaware River, Southwest Pass—

Down near my State—

Southwest Pass, and Ohio River.

Gen. Taylor says no more work will be done; that the work there will be delayed two years unless this appropriation is raised from the $15,000,000 provided for. I am wondering what the people along the banks of the great Delaware, what the folks up in Ohio and Indiana and Kentucky and Pennsylvania will say when they come to read that the work on the Ohio River and the Delaware River will be delayed for two years if this bill passes in its present form.

I can not believe that Senators will carry back to their constituents the sad news that prospective commerce on the great Ohio, on the Delaware, and in the big harbor of New York is to be delayed two years. But that is not all of this letter. It continues:

for which projects a sum larger than the balance now on hand would be required in order to permit of an increase in the rate of the progress of the work commensurate with the needs of the projects.

No funds were allotted to several projects where further improvement is desirable, as, for instance—

Listen to me, Senators from Washington. I hope the Senators from Washington will not turn a deaf ear to what Gen. Beach says in his letter to one of the Senators from that State touching one of the great projects in that State in the far Northwest—

No funds were allotted to several projects where further improvement is desirable, as, for instance, Grays Harbor, Wash., where a seagoing hopper dredge for the work on the bar is greatly needed.

While no specific cases of injury have occurred, this is believed to be due to the fact that the money available was applied to those cases most needing action, and the amount appropriated was sufficient to cover only the emergency cases which arose during the past year.

That is, no injury took place, but there was no progress in improvements. There was delay, of course; only the emergency cases were they able to take care of.

Gen. Beach further says:

Deterioration to works for protection of navigation and the silting of dredged channels is a gradual process; one, however, to which the old proverb of a stitch in time saving nine is fully applicable. There are cases of deterioration of breakwaters which have received no attention, and the damage has not yet become serious. A heavy storm might do great damage should these defects not be repaired at an early date. To fail to provide sufficient money for their protection would be penny-wise and pound-foolish.

So says the general who has in charge all the river and harbor improvement work. Here is the other question that was propounded to Gen. Beach by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce. It is a pertinent inquiry:

Do you think any special injury will occur to commerce during the coming year with an appropriation of only $15,000,000; and if so, give your specific reasons therefor?

Now, let us see what Gen. Beach answers to that. Why did the chairman of the committee ask these questions if the answers to them would have no influence upon the committee? There is not a single answer to any question which was propounded by the chairman of the committee and which was responded to by Gen. Beach that is favorable to the action of the committee in failing to increase the amount proposed to be appropriated by the other House.

I called attention while the Senator from New York was temporarily out of the Chamber to the grave condition that would ensue to the harbor of New York City, as Gen. Beach says, if this appropriation should remain at $15,000,000 and the amount that is carried in my amendment should not be appropriated. This letter deserves the closest analysis by Senators who are interested in the improvement of the rivers and harbors in their States. I take it, however, that certainly the Commerce Committee of the Senate does not lean upon the letter which was written by Gen. Beach to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce in justification of the action of that committee in appropriating merely $15,000,000 for the coming 18 months to improve the rivers and harbors of the country.

Said the Senator from Washington to Gen. Beach:

Do you think any special injury will occur to commerce during the coming year with an appropriation of only $15,000,000; and, if so, give your specific reasons therefor?

Here is the answer of Gen. Beach:

I am very confident that with an appropriation of only $15,000,000 injury will be done to commerce during the coming year.

And yet with that succinct, that brief, that pointed answer in response to the question propounded by the letter of the chairman of the committee to Gen. Beach, the committee disregards what Gen. Beach says and answers him that "we care not." I know they did not think that, but I do think that their action is susceptible to that construction. When the question was put to Gen. Beach, as the Senator from Washington put it to him in this letter, and Gen. Beach answers back, saying, "I am very confident that with an appropriation of only $15,000,000 injury will be done to commerce during the coming year," some people who do not know these Senators as well as we know them might put the construction on the action of the committee that they did not care whether they injured commerce during the coming year or not; but certainly they were warned, the result was foretold to them that with merely $15,000,000 of appropriations commerce during the coming year would be injured. I am still wondering why the question was put to Gen. Beach. Certainly if he answered in the affirmative, if he answered that they could not get along with $15,000,000 and that commerce would be injured by such a small appropriation, they did not expect to increase the amount, because they did not increase it. If Gen. Beach had answered back and said, "Yes, every river and every harbor in the United States will be affected by it; commerce will be affected by it," I do not think the answer could have been any stronger than the one he made, "that with an appropriation of only $15,000,000, injury will be done to commerce during the coming year."

Gen. Beach further said:

The reason that no injury has been done to commerce during the past year has been due to the fact that there was on hand at the time of the passage of the last act a large unexpended balance, which has been used in addition to the appropriation of $12,000,000 for the prosecution of necessary work.

That explains why greater injury was not done to the rivers and harbors of the country in consequence of the small appropriation of $12,000,000 made last year, there having been a large unexpended balance on hand, amounting last year, I think, to about $60,000,000.

Let us see how much the engineers expended during the last six months. I have here a statement of the expenditures from June 1, 1920, to December 31, 1920, month by month. In June, 1920, they expended $3,426,990; and then follow the figures for July, August, September, October, November, and December, totaling for those months $25,626,572. At that rate, over $40,000,000 would be expended in 12 months. They have just reached the point where they can spend some of the money which was appropriated by past Congresses, and which was lying unused, awaiting the time until conditions should be improved, until the cost of labor might be reduced and the cost of materials might be decreased. So, notwithstanding the fact that Congress appropriated only $12,000,000 last year, they have expended during the seven months of June, July, August, September, October, November, and December $25,626,572, or at the rate of over $40,000,000 in 12 months. At that rate how long would this measly little $15,000,000 appropriation last which it is proposed that we shall appropriate for 18 months, or until July, 1922? At the rate the engineers have been expending money during the months I have indicated, sometimes running as high as $4,484,423, as was the case in November, in 18 months they would expend in the neighborhood of $70,000,000. Yet we are asked here to accept the beneficent, the magnificent, sum of $15,000,000 to carry on this great work for the next 18 months.

The letter goes further:

It will be seen that the total expenditures during these seven months have exceeded the appropriation made by the act of June 5, 1920, by $13,626,572.14. During these months, as stated above, the work on many projects has not been prosecuted as rapidly as it should have been, and should an appropriation of not more than $15,000,000 be now made it would be necessary to very greatly reduce the rate of progress which has been maintained during the past seven months.

Yet in the face of that warning from the Engineer Department we are requested here to vote to sanction the $15,000,000 appropriation recommended by the Committee on Commerce.

He says further:

During these months, as stated above, the work on many projects has not been prosecuted as rapidly as it should have been, and should an appropriation of not more than $15,000,000 be now made it would be necessary to very greatly reduce the rate of progress which has been maintained during the past seven months. In fact, I anticipate that the $15,000,000 would provide very little more than is necessary for maintenance of existing projects and would leave little for the prosecution of further improvements.

I am wondering if Senators know the meaning of that phrase and what it means to your constituents in the great city of New York, where now they are clamoring for the improvement of the harbor; I understand that a delegation from that city was down here not long ago. May I ask the Senator from New York whether a delegation headed by Mayor Hylan was not down here the other day about the New York project?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Mississippi, I will state that there was such a delegation. They were anxious to have improvements made to Jamaica Bay, and I am hopeful that at the next session we can have that done.

Mr. HARRISON. I am hopeful that it can be done this year. In the case of a great city like New York, with its teeming millions, with commerce from all over the country flowing into it, we ought to begin the improvement immediately, without delay. In the extra session of Congress there are going to be so many speeches made on this treaty proposition, and so many conflicting views on the tariff, that I am afraid we are going to be able to discuss nothing else. The Senator from Utah does not think we are going to have another river and harbor bill at the extra session of Congress. The chairman of the committee says he does not think we will. No one thinks we will. If we are going to do anything for the next 18 months for New York City, and the Ohio River, and the streams and harbors of Indiana, and the Missouri River, and up in Maine, and over in Oregon, and in Michigan, and in New Hampshire, and other States we must begin now to do it. It should not be delayed 18 months, as it is liable to be. "Now is the accepted time," as the Senator from North Carolina says.

In fact, I anticipate that the $15,000,000 would provide very little more than is necessary for maintenance of existing projects and would leave little for the prosecution of further improvements.

Everything must stop. There must be no more improvements, but we must just maintain the present condition. If a harbor has a depth of 17 feet and ships are lying at anchor 20 miles off drawing 20 feet, they must wait two years before they can get a ray of hope that the Congress of the United States is going to begin to appropriate money to increase the depth. All of these improvements must stop. We must just try to maintain the present conditions. We have been doing that too long already.

Gen. Beach says further:

I can not too strongly urge upon you the necessity for pushing work on certain of the improvements, particularly the channels in New York Harbor. By this I mean the channels in the Hudson River along the New Jersey front, and in the upper bay opposite the Tompkinsville anchorage, where they are of insufficient width and depth, and accidents have occurred.

Gen. Beach, Chief of the Board of Army Engineers, vitally interested in the great harbor of New York and in the harbor along the New Jersey shore, is pointing out to the Senate that it is necessary, in order to get this improvement, that this amount shall be increased. He is specifically calling the attention of the Congress to this great improvement. We can not afford to turn a deaf ear to him. It should be provided, and 18 months must not elapse before that work is started.

But Gen. Beach does not stop at New York Harbor. He says:

I can not too strongly urge upon you the necessity for pushing work upon certain of the improvements, particularly * * * New York Harbor, * * * Delaware River.

I again call the attention of the Senators from Pennsylvania to the fact that Gen. Beach says "particularly the improvement on Delaware River," and that if this appropriation remains at $15,000,000 the Delaware River can not be taken care of. It is impossible to take care of it. That great improvement will be handicapped and the work there curtailed.

On Delaware River from Philadelphia to the sea.

That work, from Philadelphia to the sea on the Delaware River, says Gen. Beach, should be provided for, and the $15,000,000 provided in this appropriation bill will not be sufficient to carry on that improvement.

But he does not stop there:

Savannah Harbor, Ga.

That work must be stopped if the appropriation is held down to merely $15,000,000.

Jacksonville, Fla.

The work there must be stopped. No improvements can be made, but merely present conditions maintained if the bill should pass as recommended by the Commerce Committee.

Mobile, Ala.

The improvement there will be curtailed.

The Passes at the mouth of the Mississippi River.

That great improvement, about which at one time diplomats sat around the conference table and nations almost went to war—the Passes at the mouth of the Mississippi River—says Gen. Beach, the improvements there will be held up for 18 months with the measly, niggardly appropriation of $15,000,000 that is provided for in this bill.

Los Angeles, Calif.

I do not see at this time the Senators from California; but the War Department, through the Chief of the Board of Army Engineers, points out that that great harbor in that Mecca for motion-picture stars will be greatly curtailed and the improvement will be held up for two years with the little appropriation of $15,000,000 carried in this bill.

I see, in this letter—

Columbia River, Oreg. and Wash.

The attention of the Senators from Washington and Oregon is especially called to the fact that Gen. Beach says that the improvements on the Columbia River in the States of Washington and Oregon will be held up with the little, inadequate appropriation of $15,000,000 provided for and suggested by the Senate Commerce Committee to be indorsed by the Senate of the United States.

Grays Harbor, Wash.

I have no doubt that when the eyes of the Senator from Washington, in reading this letter from the Chief of the Board of Army Engineers, fell upon the fact that Grays Harbor, Wash., would not be provided for with the inadequate, unreasonable, inexcusable, unjustifiable appropriation that the Committee on Commerce have recommended here, it immediately excited his curiosity and his interest. I notice, in this letter that the Senator from Washington has been so kind as to give to me, that he has underscored "Grays Harbor, Wash." It should be underscored. If I were chairman of a committee such as the Committee on Commerce, and in answer to a question that I had propounded the Chief of the Board of Army Engineers should write back to me that the improvement at Gulfport Harbor, Miss., would stop for 18 months, it would excite my curiosity, it would stir every fiber in me, and I would not only underscore it with a black pencil but I would get out a red pencil and mark it as well.

Ship channel on the Great Lakes, from Duluth to Buffalo.

Let me call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota and the Senators from New York to this matter. I see sitting before me the distinguished and affable and splendid Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I wonder if he has read this letter, and if the fact has been called to his attention that the improvement of the great ship channel on the Great Lakes, from Duluth to Buffalo, will stop. That big improvement going on near Detroit, the Livingston Channel, not far from Detroit—that great improvement that the splendid city of Detroit, that thriving center of the automobile industry, where the chambers of commerce and the boards of trade and the associations and the progressive citizens not only of Detroit but of that whole country are interested—the Livingston Channel improvement will be held up for 18 months if the measly sum of $15,000,000 recommended by the Committee on Commerce is provided.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MOSES. Am I to understand from the Senator that this sum is so small that he spurns it?

Mr. HARRISON. I almost spurn it, when I see that the commerce of this country is affected by the action of the Senate, it is such a measly sum that it is almost a species of waste. I do not know whether they have any river and harbor work up in New Hampshire, at Portsmouth.

Mr. MOSES. Not a dollar, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRISON. Not a dollar goes there? That is why the Senator is not at all interested in it, then. He used to be. There was a time when the Senators from New Hampshire were interested in the river and harbor bill. There was a time when the Senator from New Hampshire would vote for a river and harbor appropriation, and work before the committee to see reasonable appropriations made for Portsmouth, or perhaps for some river up there.

Mr. MOSES. No; we never were so lucky. New Hampshire has always been unlucky in that respect.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator how deep the harbor is at Portsmouth?

Mr. MOSES. About 40 feet.

Mr. HARRISON. Has the Government never appropriated any money for it?

Mr. MOSES. Never but once, I think.

Mr. HARRISON. How long ago was that?

Mr. MOSES. About 12 or 15 years ago.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall come back to New Hampshire in a moment, as soon as I find some data.

Mr. MOSES. I wish to cooperate with the Senator from Mississippi if his object is to get some money into New Hampshire.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator does not get anything in the bill for his State?

Mr. MOSES. Not a dollar.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, that is a pity.

Mr. THOMAS. Neither does Colorado.

Mr. SMOOT. Nor does Utah.

Mr. HARRISON. There are other States that will not get anything. No State will get more than about one-fourth of the amount it really deserves.

Mr. SMOOT. Mississippi will get the biggest part.

Mr. HARRISON. Mississippi will get about one-fourth the amount it should obtain for the great harbors at Gulfport and Pascagoula and for the rivers down there.

But I have not finished reading the letter:

Ship channel on the Great Lakes—

I do not know whether the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] heard it when I read the last item, wherein Gen. Beach said the improvement would necessarily stop with the inadequate appropriation of $15,000,000. I see the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] is now in his seat. I read again from Gen. Beach's letter:

Ship channel on the Great Lakes from Duluth to Buffalo; and various harbors on the Great Lakes where further improvement or extensive maintenance work is required, without considering at all the many navigable rivers in the United States.

The permanent structures protecting many of the harbors on the Great Lakes have deteriorated, as the lack of sufficient appropriations during several years past has prevented their rebuilding, until now several of them have reached a stage of dilapidation where further neglect is certain to cause injury to the harbors and greatly added expense to the United States for the reconstruction of the works.

The other question propounded by the Senator from Washington:

What, in your judgment, is the lowest possible sum that will meet the needs of our commerce during the coming fiscal year, and if a greater sum than the $15,000,000 is required, state the minimum sum you think we will need and give the reasons therefor?

The latter part of the response answers the question when he said that—

As a result of this careful consideration, I am satisfied that the minimum amount which should be appropriated is $33,000,000. This allows only for the prosecution of the work urgently necessary and at a very moderate rate.

Mr. President, this is not all. I have a letter that was written by Gen. Beach to Congressman SMALL, former chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, now ranking minority member of that committee. I wish to place it in the RECORD, because all the facts therein should be known to Senators before they vote on this very important proposition. I dislike very much to offer the amendment. I always like to get along in a peaceable way. I dislike this kind of controversy, but when the material interests of the country are at stake I am, like almost any man, anxious to see that the harbors in my own State shall be cared for, and particularly when I know they are certain to be embarrassed and handicapped and injured by this small appropriation. Then I can not sit still and, without a vigorous protest, see this small amount appropriated for such great work.

In the letter from Gen. Beach to Mr. SMALL—and I shall incorporate the whole letter—he made this statement:

The statement that there was on hand an unexpended balance of $47,149,006 on the 1st of December, 1920, is correct. Information regarding the balances was given in a letter addressed to Senator JONES under date of December 27, 1920, a copy of which is herewith.

4. As further corroboration of the reasonableness of the estimate submitted in my annual report—

That was $57,000,000—

it may be stated that the actual expenditures for the six months, July to December, 1920, inclusive, amounted to $22,199,581.77, or an average of almost exactly $3,700,000 per month. It may be safely assumed that the river and harbor bill following the pending bill will not become a law prior to the 1st of July, 1922. There is, therefore, a period of 19 months to be provided for, from the 1st of December, 1920, to the 1st of July, 1922.

Seventy million three hundred thousand dollars, said Gen. Beach, will be required until July, 1922, and yet we are handed an appropriation of $15,000,000 by the Committee on Commerce.

At the same rate of expenditures as have prevailed in the last six months, $70,300,000 will be required for the work until the 1st of July, 1922. If every dollar appropriated could be expended at that time a further appropriation at this time of $23,000,000 would be sufficient.

If every dollar could be expended, $23,000,000 would be necessary.

I ask to incorporate the whole letter in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, January 29, 1921.

Subject: Estimates for river and harbor work.

Hon. JOHN H. SMALL,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SMALL:

1. Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of January 28, quoting certain statements made by you relative to the estimates for river and harbor work and asking that I give you a statement as to the correctness of your position.

2. In reply I beg to say that the statements made by you that the estimates submitted to Congress are made after taking into consideration balances on hand, and that the available balances, with certain minor exceptions, are to the credit of certain specific projects and can not be diverted to other projects except by authority of Congress, are perfectly correct. In the paragraph "Proposed operations," which forms a part of the annual report for each improvement, will be found a statement of the use which it is proposed to make of the funds on hand and the funds for which estimates are submitted. An examination of these paragraphs will plainly show upon what the estimate is based in each case, and the reasonableness of such estimate can be arrived at by a reading of the report.

3. The statement that there was on hand an unexpended balance of $47,149,006 on the 1st of December, 1920, is correct. Information regarding the balances was given in a letter addressed to Senator JONES under date of December 27, 1920, a copy of which is herewith.

4. As further corroboration of the reasonableness of the estimate submitted in my annual report it may be stated that the actual expenditures for the six months July to December, 1920, inclusive, amounted to $22,199,581.77, or an average of almost exactly $3,700,000 per month. It may be safely assumed that the river and harbor bill following the pending bill will not become a law prior to the 1st of July, 1922. There is, therefore, a period of 19 months to be provided for, from the 1st of December, 1920, to the 1st of July, 1922. At the same rate of expenditures as have prevailed in the last six months, $70,300,000 will be required for the work until the 1st of July, 1922. If every dollar appropriated could be expended at that time, a further appropriation at this time of $23,000,000 would be sufficient, but, for various reasons, it is impossible to expend every dollar. Among these reasons may be mentioned the fact that the work under contract could not all be completed at an exact date. There was, for example, on the 1st of December, 1920, outstanding contracts and liabilities of $19,548,080. This is probably about an average amount outstanding on any given date and would not likely be much reduced the 1st of July, 1922, if work proceeds at a reasonable rate. If this is added to the $23,000,000, it brings the amount which must be appropriated to continue work even at the present rate to $42,700,000. There is also necessarily more or less money which can not be expended on account of local conditions precedent to the commencement of the work not being fulfilled, impracticability of making contracts or doing work at certain times on account of shortage of plant, and for other reasons.

5. In the foregoing it has been assumed that work would be continued only at the rate which it has been in the past six months, but unfortunately even in the past six months the funds have not been sufficient to carry on all work as rapidly as it ought to have been carried on, and in a number of cases work of maintenance which has been actually needed has not been done for lack of funds or other reasons, and some much-needed improvement work has not been undertaken.

Very truly, yours,

LANSING H. BEACH,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

Mr. HARRISON. Those are the facts in the matter. Realizing the necessity for river and harbor improvement, realizing the inadequacy of the amount suggested by the House and indorsed by the Senate Committee on Commerce, knowing that we have to go for 18 months with only a $15,000,000 appropriation, knowing and realizing what we have been up against for the past few years in the way of high labor costs and high material costs, failure to improve and carry on the work of improvement in the rivers and harbors throughout the country, it does seem to me that there should be a stop put to that kind of policy and that we should now in the dawn of a new era appropriate at least a sufficient amount to carry on the necessary work as stated by Gen. Beach with reference to the rivers and harbors of the country.

Last year we appropriated, I do not recall the exact amount, but I think $350,000,000 for the Army—$350,000,000!

Mr. LENROOT. In addition to that appropriation the War Department expended $54,000,000 more than was appropriated. If the Senator's party had not done that it might have been possible to increase somewhat the amount appropriated in this bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad the Senator from Wisconsin can reconcile his feelings and his conscience and offer the excuse to his constituents that because the War Department spent $54,000,000 more than it should have spent for something else pertaining to the Army he feels justified in voting for the expenditure of only $15,000,000 for the rivers and harbors of the country when they recommended $57,000,000 for the work.

Mr. LENROOT. If the party to which the Senator belongs had not wasted the money of the taxpayers and spent it like drunken sailors, it would not have been necessary to hold the appropriation in the pending bill down to its present amount.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, yes; the Senator wants to inject some politics. I dislike to talk politics. I know that the Senator has gotten into the habit of trying to criticize this and that, picking flaws about everything, overlooking the big policies touching our domestic and foreign affairs in order to find some little speck against some member of the present administration, so that he can not see the great problems now confronting the Nation. I think the members of the Senator's own party answered, and answered well, such unwarranted and unjustifiable criticism as he and others have made against the administration in power. The administration has done pretty well. It has made mistakes. It was expected that it should make mistakes.

No party charged with the great responsibilities that have been placed upon the shoulders of the men in the various executive offices during the past four years could have run the Government without making mistakes. The Senator's own party made mistakes during the Spanish-American War. All parties make mistakes during war times. Mistakes were made during this war by Republicans in the administration as well as Democrats in the administration. Such charges can not be hurled at any one party. Gen. Dawes before the committee of the House sufficiently stamped such criticisms as the Senator now suggests.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I made no reference to expenditures during the war. I referred to the expenditure of the present year—two years after the war was over.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know just what the Senator is talking about. He is talking about the War Department expending $54,000,000 while I am talking about river and harbor improvement.

Mr. LENROOT. The only reference I made to expenditures was the specific item of exceeding by $54,000,000 the appropriations made by Congress for the support of the Army for the present year. I then stated that if this administration, not speaking of the period during the war, but since the war, had exercised any degree of economy it would not have been necessary to hold the pending bill down to the amount that it is necessary now to hold it.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know how the Senator voted, but some of us over on this side tried to keep down the large Army. I do not think the Senator was one of those who tried to place it at 200,000; I believe he voted to reduce it to 150,000. I am glad to know the Senator possessed that virtue. There were some who tried to reduce expenditures. There is no one who believes in waste, extravagance, useless expenditure. Mistakes are always found, and the Senator finds more than anybody in the world, because he has always got his eye peeled for them. He is to be congratulated on it; and when the Senator's party gets in control after the 4th of March in the Government offices he is going to find mistakes. Does the Senator think his party will not make mistakes?

Mr. LENROOT. I am hopeful that the party will not make any such horrible mistakes as are being made daily by the Senator's party now in power in the administrative part of the Government.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator makes a blanket charge about $54,000,000.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the Senator know that the administrative side of the Government to-day is asking for $350,000,000 more than the Senate is willing to give them for the support of the Army?

Mr. HARRISON. As the Senator knows, his party has been in control in the House and in the Senate for the past two years and that the estimates are high, that they should have been high, that many of them are high because the last Congress did not make adequate appropriations to carry out some of the recommendations of many of the departments. I voted to keep those appropriations down. I voted for the strictest kind of economy in the Army. When the Army appropriation bill comes up I am going to vote to reduce the amount that the Committee on Military Affairs have recommended. I am going to do the same with reference to the Navy. I have done it ever since I have been in Congress. The Senator's stricutures do not apply to me. They should not apply to any one, because they are not specific. I do not know what the Senator is hinting at at all.

Mr. LENROOT. I was not applying my stricture to the Senator from Mississippi. I was applying it to the administrative officers of the Government, who happen to belong to his party.

Mr. HARRISON. The biggest mistake my party made during the years it has been in control was to put in too many of the Senator's party, who made a great many of the mistakes, and blamed them on our fellows.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the Secretary of War a Republican?

Mr. HARRISON. The Secretary of War is a splendid Democrat, and a mighty good man. The Assistant Secretary of War, I think, was a Republican, and I think he had about two other in there who were Republicans.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is mistaken on that. He was a Democrat, but felt compelled to turn Republican.

Mr. HARRISON. That was before he came under the mystic influence of the Senator from New York, who got him wrong. The Chief of Staff is a Republican, and I think the Senator is wrong about the Assistant Secretary of War. But I think Senators on the other side will take advantage of some of the mistakes we made along that line, and I judge, from the smiles on the faces of some of my friends over on the other side, that they are not going to put many Democrats in those high places, so that if they should make mistakes, they would be blamed on Republicans. But your crowd will make enough mistakes, and if the Senator from Wisconsin will be as alert in the future as he has been in the past, and help us to point out some of the mistakes, we can probably save much for the Government of the United States. Just join with us.

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. HARRISON. I apply that to the Senator from Utah, too.

Mr. SMOOT. I will do it.

Mr. HARRISON. I will be with you.

Mr. SMOOT. I am afraid I will never get the Senator's vote, though.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; the Senator will. He will get my vote. I vote with the Senator a great deal, except when he seeks to put a burden on the backs of the American people by placing a high tariff on wool, and sugar, and things of that kind. When he stands for economy, I am with him. I do not know whether I can stay with him on this fortifications bill or not, because he has fallen under the spell of extravagance in that bill. Last year I think we appropriated $8,000,000 for fortifications, and the Senator has brought in a report for fortifications for over $18,000,000, ten million increase.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRISON. I may be mistaken, but I have the report here of the Senator, and I can do no better than read it.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1922.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 16100:

The Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16100) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, reports the same to the Senate with amendments, and presents herewith information relating thereto:

Amount of regular and supplemental estimates for 1922	$35,676,533.66
Amount of House bill	8,038,017.00
Bill as reported to Senate	No change.
Unexpended balances covered into the Treasury by House bill	233,555,760.00
Additional unexpended balances covered into the Treasury as recommended by Senate committee	17,251,868.28

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has reported it, the fortifications appropriation bill, and wants action on it by the Senate, not adding $17,000,000, but we are putting unexpended balances of $17,000,000, more than was put in by the House, back into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. That is what you claimed credit for during the last Congress, that you had saved the taxpayers in reducing the expenditures so much, and now you come in and take that money and put it back into the Treasury at this time, when it is the departments here that saved it, which did not spend it. It is unexpended and we get no credit for it. Yet last year you took credit for saving that amount.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator would not make that statement if he knew the situation as it is.

Mr. HARRISON. The great trouble is that nobody ever knows the situation just as the Senator from Utah does.

Mr. SMOOT. I will tell the Senator one thing, that when the Senator hears the Senator from Utah make a statement he will find that it is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, one moment. In the discussion of the Agricultural appropriation bill the other day the Senator from Utah stated that an item was carried in the sundry civil bill that we were trying to appropriate for in the Agricultural bill, and he finally admitted that it was not carried specifically in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President, the Senator from Utah did not admit it, but the Senator from Utah the next morning put a letter in the RECORD from the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Alexander, in which he stated that it was a duplication of work, and for that work an appropriation was carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill, just as the Senator from Utah had stated.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought the Senator was clearly convinced the other day that he was wrong on that proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I was not, and I am not wrong.

Mr. HARRISON. All right; go ahead.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, those appropriations were made away back in 1916, 1917, and 1918. They were made at a time when it was not a question of how much money we were going to appropriate; it was just a question of how much the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War asked for.

Mr. OVERMAN. It was during the war.

Mr. SMOOT. I have said on this floor time and time again that I did not care what the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War demanded of Congress by way of appropriations when we were in war—that if they said it was absolutely necessary I was going to vote for the appropriation—and I think every Senator here will bear me out that I did. But, Mr. President, with all the extravagances, and with all the waste of public money, those amounts were so mammoth that it was impossible to spend the money we appropriated. So, as I said some time ago, I determined that the unexpended balances of appropriations made by Congress, not for that year, not for the following year, but until expended, should be put back into the Treasury of the United States, and that is what the fortifications appropriation bill does. It is not an appropriation that was made for this year, it is not an appropriation that was made for last year; it covers appropriations that were made after we went into the war, and they even began in 1916, and those appropriations were made, not for any particular time, but they were to remain to the credit of the War Department or the Navy Department until expended. Now, in that bill, we simply say that not a dollar of the unexpended balance of those appropriations for the War Department or the Navy Department shall hereafter be spent, and we repeal the law and put the money back into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. I congratulate the Senator from Utah on admitting that the departments here saved that amount of money, for the expenditure of which they had been charged with extravagance by the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President, the Senator is wrong there. They did not save the money. It was absolutely impossible for them to expend it; we gave them so much.

Mr. HARRISON. Why did you give them so much, and then charge us with extravagance?

Mr. SMOOT. We gave it just because of the fact that the Secretary of War said it was absolutely necessary in order to win the war, and if he had asked for a billion more, or two billion more, I would have voted for it.

Mr. HARRISON. And in the spirit of economy he saved it, and did not spend it. Now you are covering it back into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; we gave him so much money that he could not find ways to spend it, and the wicked waste was not sufficient to take it all.

Mr. HARRISON. That is where the definition of waste comes in from the Senator, and the Senator charged us with extravagance. They appropriate so much money, and now the Senator is fussing at the department for saving the money you appropriated.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not fussing with them at all; and if the Senator wanted to know just what I mean by public waste, I could stand on this floor for the next 12 hours and bring cases to his attention, and to the Senate's attention, which were next to a criminal waste of public money. Take the Air Service, for instance. The Senator knows about that.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I want to discuss river and harbor problems. When the Senator gets through with his reorganization of all this Government work, which I hope to cooperate with him in, we can fix this thing right. There will not be any reason then to complain any more. There will not be any overlapping of jurisdiction or any useless expenditure of money. We will have the thing working in perfect harmony and unity.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is a member of that commission, and I look forward with the greatest delight to his assistance and his valued recommendations as to the reorganization of the departments of our Government, with a view to cutting out every duplication of work, and if the Senator had studied it as much as I have——

Mr. HARRISON. I have not. I do not see how the Senator finds so much time to study it.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator knew how late I went to bed, he would know.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator should go to bed earlier. Then he would not be in such a bad temper sometimes.

Mr. SMOOT. I was very glad to hear the Senator say that he is going to assist in that work.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to follow the Senator's lead.

Mr. SMOOT. Mind you, you have to work at night; and, mind you, this thing can not be done in three months or four months or five months or six months. If the reorganization of our Government departments is completed and the duplication of work taken out, it means a steady, hard grind for the next year and a half.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to get it finished in two years, because at the next election we will come into control of the Senate, and Senators on the other side may change their sentiments.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have been talking about reorganization for the last 10 years, and I expect we will all be dead before it is realized.

Mr. SMOOT. That was the Senator's party.

Mr. OVERMAN. Before we came in they were talking about it.

Mr. HARRISON. I was diverted from the main channel of my thought. When I was interrupted by the Senator from Wisconsin, I had started out by calling the attention of the Senate to the fact that last year we appropriated practically $350,000,000 for the Army, and $550,000,000 for the Navy; and several millions for fortifications; I do not know what it was, but quite a large amount. We only appropriated at that time $12,000,000 for rivers and harbors. This year I do not know whether the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate will reduce the amount in the Army appropriation bill much or not; I hope so. Anyway, it will be around $250,000,000, I should imagine, and for the Navy it will be approximately four hundred or five hundred millions.

It does seem to me, Senators, that when we are expending that amount of money to maintain our Army, to be utilized in times of war, and to maintain a large Navy, to rival the navy of any other world power, we can certainly afford to expend at least an amount of money for river and harbor improvements that it would cost to construct, say, one battleship, or to pay for a little while for one regiment of soldiers. I do not know what a battleship costs now. When I first came to Congress, 10 years ago, I think it cost about eight or nine or ten million dollars. They have been climbing in cost so much that I imagine now they cost around twenty million, or maybe more than that. Perhaps the Senator from Florida can tell me.

Mr. TRAMMELL. About twenty million.

Mr. HARRISON. If you allow one rock or bed of sand to be formed in one harbor in this country, you might lose a great naval battle, in which all these battleships must be engaged. A little appropriation to clean out the harbors of the country, in the event we should get into war again, might save millions and millions of dollars against a destruction of battleships, and the loss of the Navy, and thousands and thousands of soldiers.

Mr. President, I have said about all I desire to say on this subject. The question is up to each individual Senator as to whether or not he will vote against the recommendation of the War Department, and vote only $1 to the project in his district, whether it is river or harbor improvement, and not $4, as recommended for adequate and proper improvement.

I hope that the amendment which I have offered providing for an increase of the appropriation to $33,000,000 will prevail. We ought to appropriate $57,000,000, as was recommended by the War Department. The $33,000,000 which I propose will not do the work, but, as stated in the letter to the chairman of the committee, and also by Gen. Taylor before the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors, $33,000,000 is the least sum that should be provided to do the necessary and emergency work.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I shall not take very much time to discuss this matter. The temptation to proceed along certain lines is very great, but I shall not do so. I know that the Senator from Mississippi has enjoyed himself very much for the last hour or two, and I also have enjoyed his address very much.

The situation that confronts us is rather a simple one, Mr. President. Last year the engineers reported and recommended that we should appropriate at least $24,000,000; they said they could not possibly get along with less than that sum; that commerce would be very greatly injured unless that amount was appropriated. The Congress did not agree with them in that respect and appropriated only $12,000,000. In the letter which I wrote to the department seeking information I asked a question which I will quote exactly. It is as follows:

> Has any apparent injury occurred to commerce that can be traced to our failure to appropriate more than $12,000,000 in the last act; and if so, where did it occur?

The answer is:

> I am not able to say that any apparent injury has occurred to commerce on account of the failure to appropriate more than $12,000,000 in the last act.

Mr. President, if they were mistaken in their judgment last year, the committee thought there might be a possibility of their being mistaken in their judgment this year. When they say that $33,000,000 is the minimum that can be gotten along with without injury to commerce, we have no doubt they are honest in their judgment in that respect, just as they were honest in their judgment that they gave us last year; but they were mistaken last year, and it is possible they may be mistaken this year. We rather think that they are.

It has been suggested that the department has asked for an appropriation of $57,000,000. They did, Mr. President, but what was the theory upon which that estimate was based? I find in the Book of Estimates at the close of the estimates for rivers and harbors a statement made which I think it is well to read it into the RECORD to show the basis upon which the ordinary estimates of the Government are made. This is the note:

> The foregoing estimates, amounting to $10,982,950, are for works which Congress has provided may be carried on under the continuing-contract system.

That is, the estimate that would be carried and was carried on the sundry civil bill, and it is not included in the estimate of $57,000,000.

> The sundry civil act approved June 4, 1897, provides that "Hereafter the Secretary of War shall annually submit estimates in detail for river and harbor improvements required for the ensuing fiscal year to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be included and carried into the sum total of the Book of Estimates." It is the view of the President that under that statute it is the duty of the department not to recommend projects or expenditures, but to give the Congress detailed information as to the sums which it would be necessary to expend if the projects already authorized are to be carried forward without loss or delay. In accordance with that view, the above estimates for the respective works for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, are submitted under two heads, namely, for works which Congress has provided may be carried on under the continuing-contract system and for projects that have been adopted by Congress for which appropriations will be required for their prosecution, completion, or maintenance if they are to be carried forward without loss or delay.

Of course, nobody contends that the river and harbor works which Congress has heretofore approved and made appropriations for can be carried on as rapidly and as expeditiously with the amount of money proposed to be appropriated as they could be if we had appropriated a larger amount of money, although, judging the future by the experience of the past, we might even come to that conclusion, for, with an abundance of money on hand, the river and harbor works have not been carried on as expeditiously as it seems they might have been carried on. Of course, we have had exceptional conditions; everybody knows that. One of the reasons given by the engineers why projects in many cases have not been carried on more rapidly has been that contracts could not be made upon reasonable terms for the carrying on of the work; and no one can complain of or criticize the engineers for not letting contracts at unreasonable rates.

Mr. President, what is now the situation? The situation is this: On the 31st of December there was on hand for the river and harbor projects of the country that have heretofore been adopted by Congress, and for which appropriations have been made, the sum of $41,658,334.33. Out of the lump sum appropriation of last year, as the Senator from Mississippi has said, there were $1,633,650 unallotted; in other words, we had on hand $43,291,984.33. The Senator argues that there are only $1,633,650 of the $12,000,000 of the last act unexpended; that is, that would be the impression. I do not think the Senator intended to convey that impression. I do not know how much of that money has not been spent, but $1,663,650 is the amount that has not been allotted. The remainder of it has been allotted to various projects. Probably the expenditure is under way, or probably it is being held with reference to those particular projects to meet any emergency that may hereafter arise.

I will say that I have not secured definite information as to just how much of that particular money has actually been expended, but we have a statement from the engineers in reference to the condition of this $41,658,334.33, and that statement appears in the report of the committee, as follows:

> Of this amount on December 31, 1920, there was obligated by outstanding contracts and liabilities $17,648,153.42.

That was the amount that was actually obligated, but it had not been spent, the work had not been done, and that money is still available during the ensuing months to go on with work that is under way. Of that $41,658,334.33, $24,010,170.91 was unobligated; there was no liability against it at all; it was simply standing to the credit of various projects throughout the country, subject to expenditure any time that the engineers find it profitable or desirable to use it. So, Mr. President, we will have, with the $15,000,000 proposed to be appropriated in the pending bill from the 1st of January of this year, over $58,000,000 available for river and harbor work during, technically, as the Senator from Mississippi has stated, the 18 months to July 1, 1922, or really 15 months from now until the end of the fiscal year 1922; but the regular session of Congress will meet in December of this year, and I am satisfied that probably long before June 30, 1922, a river and harbor bill will be passed. The fact must not be overlooked that every river and harbor bill always provides that the moneys appropriated in the bill shall be immediately available, so that from the time of the passage of the bill the money provided for in it will be available.

There is another fact that I do not want to have overlooked, and it should not be overlooked, in considering these matters. The largest annual expenditure that the Government has made for river and harbor improvement since 1896 was made in 1914, when we spent $40,244,104.45, and the next largest in any one year was the next year, 1915, when we spent $37,707,459.72; and, mark you, Mr. President, the next highest annual expenditure for river and harbor improvements was in the year 1920, with half of that year under the lump-sum appropriation of $12,000,000, when we spent $33,777,234.78.

So, if we spend the money during the next 18 months at the rate it was spent last year, we will be spending money faster than we have ever spent it during any year in the history of the Republic, except the two years 1914 and 1915, and with the $15,000,000 proposed now to be appropriated and the funds on hand we will have money enough to do that thing. So, looking at it even from that standpoint, it can not be shown that there is any undue neglect of river and harbor improvements.

It is true that during the last three or four years there has been considerable neglect of our river and harbor improvements; and I agree with the Senator from Mississippi that we really ought to have more money for river and harbor improvements; but the fact, I think, ought to be taken into consideration by the friends of river and harbor improvements that we can not expect to secure through Congress the appropriations for river and harbor improvements that we really ought to have until the unexpended balance is brought down a little bit. If we are confronted every time that we bring up a river and harbor bill in Congress with a balance on hand of $40,000,000 or $50,000,000, it does not need any argument to convince anybody that we can not get a proper bill. So I believe—and I believe this very strongly—that the increase of this appropriation, say, to $30,000,000 or $25,000,000 would ultimately be really against proper river and harbor development. If the engineers come to the Congress next year and show to us that, with a judicious expenditure in the preceding years, the balance for river and harbor improvements amounts to only five or ten million dollars, then Congress will make appropriations and will make proper provision for the projects that ought to be cared for.

Mr. President, I think we ought to bring about a considerable change in our system of making appropriations for river and harbor improvements. We have in the report a detailed statement from the engineers of the amount of money on hand for every project throughout the country that Congress has approved and appropriated for. There are nearly 500 of these different projects with varying sums on hand. The amount of money on hand for many of these projects has been on hand for years; in other words, we have millions of dollars of money tied up in various projects throughout the country that has been tied up for years and is not being used. There is no benefit coming from it, and if we will overhaul this state of affairs, in my judgment, we can take money away from projects that have been lying idle for years and which probably will continue to lie idle and make it available for other projects where it will be used to advantage.

These projects will not suffer—not in the least. They are getting no benefit from this money that is on hand; and so it is the purpose of our committee in the next session of Congress, when we have a regular river and harbor bill, to take up that situation and meet it in the way that we think is proper.

Mr. President, looking at this matter from the standpoint of whether or not this $15,000,000 is really sufficient to take care properly of the needs of the commerce of our harbors and rivers during the coming year, I believe that this $15,000,000 will do it. It probably will not do all that we should like to have done. It probably will not do all that we really ought to have done; but, in my judgment, our commerce will not suffer any serious injury. It may be that some of our projects will not go along as fast as they ought to or as fast as we would like to have them go on; but, on the whole, commerce will be cared for at the end of the year with this amount of money as well as it is now.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, I am deeply interested in the improvement of rivers and harbors, and as a member of that committee I want to ask the chairman if the $15,000,000, which he now advocates as the proper sum to appropriate, contemplates the construction of any works on new projects?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It does not. It can not be used on new projects.

Mr. McNARY. Then the simple truth is that those communities, those ports that have projects that are feasible and are needed in order more properly to employ our merchant marine, will go neglected under an appropriation of $15,000,000?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They will go for another year, as they have been going for all the years of the past.

Mr. McNARY. Is it true, may I ask the chairman, that when the House sent over an appropriation in the sum of, I think, $12,000,000, that did not contemplate the improvement of any new projects?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. And the same practice obtains this year?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. Can the chairman advise the Senate when we will go back to the old practice, so thoroughly established, which has done so much to improve our rivers and harbors and ports, under which Congress will again have some authority to specify new projects?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was just coming to that, and about to touch on it. I thought I made it plain a while ago that I did not consider that this amount is all that we ordinarily would and should appropriate for these purposes, but under the present condition of things it is a reasonably satisfactory amount.

I do hope, also, that Senators will give consideration to the suggestion that it is really in the interest of proper river and harbor development that we should keep down these appropriations until the unexpended balance is down to a reasonably low amount, so that every time we come here with a river and harbor bill we shall not be confronted with the plea that there are forty or fifty millions on hand, and that is used as a very strong argument against really adequate appropriations.

Now, let us consider the legislative situation. We found this to be the case: We appointed a subcommittee to consider the matter and confer with the House Members; because while it is well for us to talk about acting upon our own responsibility, and while as a general thing I think we ought to act on our own responsibility, yet in order to accomplish results we must have coordination even between the two Houses. Last year we insisted on amending the bill so that it carried a large sum of money and passed it in that form. We went over to the House and had our conference, and I took particular pains myself to put on the conference committee a majority of Senators who were in favor of the action of the Senate under all circumstances, and we held out until the last hour and the last minute of the session. We held out until it was announced on the next day that the river and harbor bill had in fact failed, and we had to recede in order to get anything. We do not accomplish anything by going up against a situation like that at a session like this, which must close at a certain hour; so our committee decided that we would confer and that we ought to confer with the responsible leaders in the House of Representatives and find out what their policy would be and what they had in mind, and this is the situation:

It was pointed out that to place amendments on this bill would very seriously endanger its passage. Under the new procedure in the House, the Appropriations Committee can provide only for things that are authorized by law. Practically all the amendments that the Senate had in mind putting on the bill would have been items of new legislation, or they would be legislation under the rule of the House. Separate votes would be demanded, and all that sort of thing, and the leaders there felt very strongly that the adding of any amendments to this bill would seriously endanger its passage. Then we found that the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House had reported what might be termed a legislative river and harbor bill, a bill providing for the modification of certain projects, a bill providing for additional surveys. I do not think that bill provided for any strictly new projects. It was not expected that that bill would have even any consideration in the House, much less any chance of passage. So we conferred with the leaders there as to what would likely be done in a legislative way toward getting new projects and new authorizations, and so forth, and, if that was contemplated, when it would be done. I was assured that early in the extra session of Congress which we know is going to be called a legislative bill would be taken up, and that legislative bill would deal with projects that should be modified, that it would provide for surveys, and that it would also provide for new projects—they said they thought it ought to provide for new projects—and we were assured that that legislation would be taken up early in the extra session.

With those assurances, with that situation confronting us, the committee decided that in the interest of river and harbor development, in the interest of economy, and to insure legislaton, it would be wise to report this bill without any amendment whatever; and I have now stated briefly practically all the various considerations that influenced the committee in taking the action that it did.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think he would rest the position of the committee in reporting this so-called modest sum upon stronger ground if he put it purely upon the proposition that in view of the fact that there are forty odd millions of dollars unexpended, and in view of the fact that the Treasury now is faced with a deficit of $2,000,000,000, this is all in justice that ought to have been appropriated at this session?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I put it on that ground and on the other ground, too. I simply add one ground to the other. I think that ground is substantial and justifies the action of the committee, but I take it we are further justified from the other situation.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator is not urging support of this bill upon the theory that within a short time and at the special session we will have another river and harbor bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not at all, except that I think it is very proper that we should consider the question as to whether we will put legislative provisions in this bill, or whether we will wait for the future. I do not believe there would be any serious controversy about the proposition that there are new projects of river and harbor improvement in this country that ought to be undertaken, that in the interest of commerce should be undertaken. Under the rules of another body these can not be provided for in the way that we are appropriating now. Of course we could put them on this bill; they would not be subject to a point of order under our rules; but it is not necessary for me to tell the Senators what the situation would be in conference under those circumstances. Senators have had too much experience in conference matters to make it necessary for me to say anything about that. The only way in which these new improvements can be inaugurated or authorized so that an appropriation can be made is to have this legislative bill passed, and I think it is only fair and reasonable that before Senators neglect the opportunity to put upon this bill new projects which would be clearly in order under the rules of the Senate they should have some assurance or information as to what will likely be the future program, so I do not think that is unreasonable at all. I think it is entirely proper; and remember that the legislative bill to which I have referred would not be a bill appropriating money, but simply a bill authorizing new projects whenever Congress should deem it wise to make the appropriations for them.

Mr. President, there is one other situation that I think I briefly referred to a while ago, but I am going to call more particular attention to it now.

The committee also felt that in the case of these projects, 500 of them, scattered all over the country, for which millions of dollars have been appropriated from time to time in the past but not expended and apparently not needed, this money could be made available for proper river and harbor expenditures during the next 18 months by a provision in this legislative bill, framed and passed after we had full opportunity to consider carefully the various projects and pick out the amounts of money that will not be needed in connection with those particular projects, and make those same amounts of money, without any new appropriation, available for these various projects. I am satisfied that there are five or ten or even fifteen million dollars of that money in that situation.

Mr. President, I think that is all that I will say.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. How can it be ascertained, until the work is completed, whether or not the money heretofore appropriated for a particular project which has not yet been finished will be needed?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think we will find a great many projects throughout the country where the works authorized by Congress have actually been completed, but there are large sums of money for maintenance that have not been necessary.

Mr. SIMMONS. I would not disagree with the Senator if the work has already been completed; but where the work has not been completed, we can not tell until it is completed whether or not the money will be needed. Of course, the engineers might make an estimate that in all probability the work could be completed without the expenditure of the full amount of the appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have in mind largely this, and I refer to projects in my own State: I examined the items in this list from my own State, and I found there half a dozen items for which several thousand dollars was available. It has been available for a good long while, and yet I know that the conditions there are such that this money will not be spent there, it will not be needed there, or, if it is needed or if it is spent, it will be spent in the way of maintenance, and that can be taken care of out of a fund for maintenance; and I assume that there are projects in other States in the same situation as my own. Take one project in my State. There is $89,000, I think, available for maintenance. It has been available, I think, for two or three years. It will not injure that project to take that money away from there now, unless, of course, if the engineer should say to us, "We will need that money in the coming year," then we would not take it.

I would, of course, expect to get information from the engineers as to the need for the money and the probable need for its expenditure in the next year or two, and if they said, "We are satisfied conditions are such that we will need the money," of course we would not divert it. But that must be looked into very carefully. The eight or nine thousand dollars for the project in my State could be put into this fund, and then whenever maintenance is necessary out of a fund I think we ought to provide for that maintenance.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has the project been completed?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is still not exactly completed. This is the real situation: We appropriate the money upon a condition; that is, we provide that when a locality does certain things then we will maintain the project. The locality has not finished its work, and yet we have been appropriating for maintenance.

Mr. SIMMONS. The probabilities are the locality will not comply with the conditions?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, yes; the locality will comply, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. SIMMONS. That makes it clear, because the money might be returned back into the Treasury or appropriated so it could be used for some other project. But that is not the main question that I rose for the purpose of asking the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT rose.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire to interrupt?

Mr. LENROOT. I merely desire to call attention to the fact that there is over a million dollars now available of the nature of which the Senator speaks, running back as far as 1910, when appropriations were made upon the condition that the localities do certain things which they have failed to do.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think there are many cases of that sort where some considerable amount of the money could be salvaged in the way the Senator mentions and probably turned back into the Treasury or applied to some other project. But that would require new legislation.

What I rose for the purpose of inquiring about specially was the Senator's statement with regard to the unexpended balance now appropriated. I do not know that I clearly understood the statement of the Senator. I wish to ask if it is not a fact that the whole unexpended balance of forty-odd million dollars represents money that has heretofore been appropriated for specific projects?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is probably true unless there may be part of it out of the allotment of last year; but I think probably all of the $41,000,000 has been appropriated for specific projects.

Mr. SIMMONS. Not a dollar of that money can be expended for any project except and to the extent of the appropriation for the particular project.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true under the situation as it now exists.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator said, as I understood him, that of the $41,000,000 there was still $24,000,000 that had not been contracted for.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Or obligated in any way.

Mr. SIMMONS. Or in any way obligated?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true.

Mr. SIMMONS. That amount does not help in any way the work on projects that have been approved and for which there is no appropriation outstanding.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true. They would not be considered as new projects unless we have appropriated for something.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I refer to projects that have been approved and work upon which has been begun, but the appropriations have been exhausted or are very nearly exhausted. The unused sum of $24,000,000 appropriated for other projects but not used, contracted, or obligated, as stated by the Senator, can not be used for approved projects the appropriations for which are exhausted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true.

Mr. SIMMONS. With reference to those particular projects, we must either appropriate more money or the work upon them must stop. Is not that true?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; except that I wish to call the Senator's attention to this fact——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Right in connection with that I wish to call the Senator's attention to this fact: I asked the department for a statement of all the projects that the Congress had approved for which appropriations had been made, and I have them set forth in the report. Glancing over it hurriedly I do not see a single project that does not have some money on hand.

Mr. SIMMONS. Probably most of them have a small amount on hand, but a very inadequate amount in most cases.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It may be and it may not be. There is no showing by the engineers.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is, I think, in most cases inadequate, if the Senator will examine them. The appropriations on hand are very inadequate for continued prosecution of the work upon an economical basis.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think, in those projects where there is such a small amount on hand, that there is no great need for money. For instance, out in my own State—and I judge other States very much by that—there is Olympia Harbor, which has an unexpended balance of $2,645.10. There was just $200 spent on that last year. That is all that was necessary. What is needed there is a new project, for Congress to adopt a new project. Here is Tacoma Harbor, with an unexpended balance of $2,496. I do not think there was a dollar spent on that last year.

Mr. SIMMONS. What I desire to get from the Senator, if he has it, is this information: There are certain projects for which money has been appropriated and not expended; enough is left to complete the project, or to at least continue the work on the project for the next fiscal year. There are certain other projects for which the money appropriated is insufficient to conduct work on the project for the next fiscal year. There are certain other projects for which money has been appropriated, and the appropriated funds have been exhausted or reduced to an unworkable margin. Has the Senator segregated these groups or class of cases from those for which the unexpended appropriation is sufficient to continue the work on them for the ensuing year? Can the Senator tell us what amount would be necessary to carry on the work on those projects where the appropriation is inadequate for the next fiscal year?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not segregated those different projects. That would require a great deal of investigation and a great deal of time, and we have not had the time nor opportunity to do it. I am satisfied that $15,000,000 will be sufficient to maintain the new work, at any rate, because it probably will not carry it on, but it will maintain harbor conditions in that condition in which they now are and serve the commerce we have now. At the specially large ports of the country they have tremendous sums of money on hand to carry on the work. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] referred to New York, and I think they have several million dollars on hand there. He referred to the construction of locks and dams on the Ohio River. They have practically $5,000,000 on hand there. They spent only $5,000,000 last year.

Mr. SIMMONS. The $5,000,000 unexpended appropriation for the Ohio River project, though it may not be needed for that river, can not be expended for others, and does not help projects that have not sufficient money left over to continue work on them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I appreciate that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is not that true?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The $15,000,000 is supposed to take care of that.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what I understand. The $15,000,000 lump sum is supposed to take care of the cases to which I am referring; but does not the Senator understand that when the bureau of the War Department having this matter in charge estimates that $33,000,000 is required to carry on the work for the next year it means that $33,000,000 is necessary to carry on the work on the projects, for which the present appropriation is inadequate, in order that the work begun on them may go on continuously?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is their judgment, but they were mistaken last year.

Mr. SIMMONS. If that is their judgment, then it does not seem to me that the fact that there is $24,000,000 appropriated, that has not been expended and that has not been contracted for, at all meets the situation or is influential in determining what should be our action in the premises, because that $24,000,000 can not in any condition be used for the purpose of carrying on the work on those projects where the appropriation is exhausted or very near exhausted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That may not appeal to the Senator; but the Senator does know that it is a powerful argument in the hands of those who desire to defeat the purpose of the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. I know it appeals to the judgment of those who do not understand the river and harbor situation. I know it is easy enough to ask why should we be appropriating more money when there is $24,000,000 in the Treasury that has heretofore been appropriated for projects, and which is unexpended and uncontracted for and unobligated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I must say that I do not know.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am trying to make answer to that. I say the answer to that is that that applies only to particular projects.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But will the Senator answer this question: Why is it that they have not spent it and used it for the purposes for which Congress provided it?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not able to answer why they have not done it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Neither am I.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think if they have not done it because the money is not needed or because it has been determined that the project should not be further developed, then we ought to cover that money by legislation into the Treasury. However, that is another question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know it is another question.

Mr. SIMMONS. The proposition I am trying to present is that these large unused appropriations do not relieve the needs of those projects for which there is not a sufficient amount appropriated or in any way available.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But if they will not spend the money for projects for which it is available, what hope have we that they will spend new money that we may appropriate, even for additional projects?

Mr. SIMMONS. I assume, when the department comes to Congress and asks for $33,000,000 for those projects that have been begun and with reference to which they have no sufficient money to carry on the work, that the department means by that to say that the money is asked for immediate use on the projects estimated for.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It has not meant that in the past.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have been a member of the Committee on Commerce for a long time and I know, as the Senator knows, that to provide continuous prosecution of certain great projects like that of the Ohio River project, with its complicated system of locks and dams, large sums were appropriated and, probably, large authorizations made, but on account of the war the work did not go forward as rapidly as was anticipated, leaving large unexpended balances.

But those appropriations were made with a view to the completion of the projects, and those projects are still being prosecuted. That unexpended money is in the Treasury—it has not been drawn out. It is a mere appropriation. If it is never drawn out the Government will not suffer. But it is not available for any other project.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; and not available for any other purpose.

Mr. SIMMONS. What I am trying to impress upon the Senator at this time—and I am sure the Senator realizes it—is that these vast appropriations which have been unexpended for these big projects, like the one on the Ohio River, do not help out the situation with reference to the smaller projects which are now suffering because there is not sufficient money to carry on the work, and we ought to consider this matter, not from the standpoint of these unexpended appropriations, but from the standpoint of the needs of the other projects which have been approved as worthy objects for the expenditure of public money.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from North Carolina takes a too narrow view of it. The appropriations which have been made, and which are unexpended, for the Ohio River, or New York Harbor, or for the Mississippi River, stand to the credit of those works, and because they are available, less money will be needed in those projects, because they have the money on hand, and they do not require so much out of this bulk appropriation.

Mr. SIMMONS. These projects are not, I think, included in the estimates.

Mr. NELSON. The fact is that some of these projects have so much money on hand that it is all they can expend for the next year. They can work only about so fast, and if they have the money available to do that work, it does not come out of this lump-sum appropriation. It is relieved to that extent.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that perfectly, Mr. President. But I want to say to the Senator that no part of this $33,000,000 estimated for by the department, as I understand it, was for these schemes for which an adequate amount of money has already been appropriated, and a large amount of which is unexpended. As I understand, it is only to cover cases where the appropriation available at the present time is inadequate and insufficient to carry the work for another year. Am I not correct about that, I ask the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They do not specify the particular projects they would apply this thirty-three million to, but they simply make the general statement that in their judgment the $33,000,000 is the minimum necessary to maintain the harbors and rivers of the country in such shape as to bring about no injury to commerce.

Mr. SIMMONS. Did they not send us a statement showing the amount they thought would be necessary for the various projects?

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I read, they sent a general estimate at the opening of the Congress.

Mr. SIMMONS. What is the amount of that?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is $57,000,000. But I read the note to these appropriations. It has been construed that these are not estimates in the nature of recommendations at all, but simply the estimate of the department as to the amount of money necessary to carry on the project without delay or loss; that is all. Then they finally reduced that to $33,000,000 as a minimum, without specifying the particular projects they wanted to spend the money on.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is as I understood it. I understood that in their estimates as the amount of money that was needed for all the projects, they fixed the figure at fifty-odd million dollars.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; $57,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. But under pressure, when they were asked to say how much would be necessary in order that river and harbor work might go on, they said it would be necessary, if this work was to go on, that we should appropriate at least $33,000,000; and they did not refer, then, to works that have already a large sum to their credit, but to works with inadequate appropriations.

I take it that means that if we appropriate a lesser sum than that, some of the projects which have been authorized by Congress heretofore as worthy of governmental development will have to be abandoned, temporarily at least. I am not making any controversy with the chairman of the committee. I realize the situation he found himself in. I realize as well as he does that if we are to adequately provide for the continuance of work upon worthy projects in this country we should appropriate more than $15,000,000. But, Mr. President, I also realize what I think the Senator from Washington, the chairman of the committee, does, and what I believe every member of the Committee on Commerce realizes, that in the situation which now confronts us, it is not a question of how much is needed for the prosecution of this great work, but it is a question of how much we can get under present legislative conditions.

I believe, just as much as the Senator from Mississippi believes, that the petty lump-sum policy we have followed during the last three or four years with reference to river and harbor improvement is a very short-sighted policy. I believe in the years to come we will see that it is not only short-sighted but indefensible, not to say inexcusable. I regret very much that it has to be continued another year. I had hoped, when last year we appropriated a lump sum flagrantly insufficient—even insignificant as compared with the amount needed—that this year we might have a reasonably adequate river and harbor bill, and that this great work, more needed at this time, in my judgment, than at any time in our history, would be vigorously prosecuted in the interest of commerce and of the transportation requirements of the country.

The Senator's party in the other House have determined upon this policy for at least another year, and they have sent us a bill, notified us through the chairman of their committee on rivers and harbors, and probably through a subcommittee of that committee, that they will not submit to any increase in the amount carried in their bill. They have notified us that if we amend this bill in any particular whatever we will have no river and harbor legislation at this session of the Congress.

I do not know whether they are in earnest about that or not, but I do know the time is very short, Mr. President, in which we have to act, and I do know that they have impressed the chairman and the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, who conferred with them on this behalf, with their seriousness and determination in this matter.

The situation as thus presented was thrashed out very thoroughly in our committee, and while many members of the committee did not approve of this policy, as I did not, and felt that this appropriation was flagrantly inadequate, I believe that all finally agreed that in the situation in which we found ourselves, it was better to accept something than to get nothing, and I think in view of these circumstances there was unanimous consent in the committee that we would permit the House in this particular case to coerce us against offering any amendments to this bill and in accepting it just as they had written it. I hope we will not again be put in that attitude with reference to this or any other legislation. I trust that when this matter is taken up for consideration and action by Congress again we will take it up in time, so that we may have an opportunity to fight these questions out, if there is a disagreement between the two Houses, to the end that one branch of the Congress shall not have to submit to the dictation of the other branch.

Mr. President, I do not think this $15,000,000 will be sufficient to do any construction work, or, if any, only a very limited amount of additional construction work. It may, and probably will, be sufficient for purposes of maintenance; but, Mr. President, the continuation of the necessary expenditures, in order to maintain the works we have already finished, or to keep those works which are in a state of prosecution from deterioration, is a very important matter, and if $15,000,000 serves no other purpose than to enable us to protect and maintain against deterioration the river and harbor works we have already done it will serve a good purpose, and I think we will be justified, in the circumstances, in conforming to the conditions the other House has imposed upon us, in order to get enough money for this purpose, though nothing, or practically nothing, can be had for further improvement and construction.

It would be a crime to fail to provide for the maintenance of the improvements and development already made and accomplished.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I join the Senator in the hope that in the very near future we can act upon these bills in a way different from that in which we are really forced to act now. I think we ought soon to adopt a general policy with reference to these matters, and I hope we will soon do so, and I want to say that I shall do all I can to have this taken up as early as possible in the next Congress, and I want to take it up in such a way that the Senate can express its real judgment and desire in regard to these matters, and express its real judgment as to what ought to be done, and then I shall join very strongly with the Senator in insisting upon a full and free conference with the other House with reference to the differences between the two Houses.

For myself, I now say that I will not go upon a conference with the other House on the differences on a bill of this kind under the conditions imposed by the rules they have now, which do not permit a full and free conference, and which shackle the conferees of the one House, while the conferees of the other House are free.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Senator to say that he will not go as one of the conferees with the other House under the peculiar rules they have now prevailing in the House, which prevent free conferences?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will not go unless they expressly give their conferees authority to enter a full and free conference.

Mr. HARRISON. Has that influenced the Senator in his action in voting out a $15,000,000 appropriation bill this time?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not at all.

Mr. HARRISON. It has had nothing to do with this bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not at this time. That is simply a notification, as far as I am concerned, as to the attitude I propose to take in the future with reference to conferences on a bill of this character.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator means he is not going to submit to this sort of dictation any longer?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will not, if I can help it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am glad to hear the Senator say that.

Mr. SMOOT. As the Senator knows, in the past the House has had free conferences. Under the rules of the House today, if the Senate has three conferees, the House has 435 conferees. The Senate can not put anything into a bill in the way of an amendment upon which the conferees may agree, but the amendment has got to go back to the House of Representatives and the House has to vote upon it. Then, after they have voted upon it, the matter goes to conference.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Utah means that is the case under the present rules of the House?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the condition under the present rules of the House; in other words, the Senate enters into a conference with three conferees, but those conferees find themselves confronted by a conference with the House of Representatives, which has a membership of 435.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the conferees on the part of the Senate yield, it is all right; but if they do not, then the matter goes back to the House?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In other words, the House conferees can not yield. That is not a full and free conference. As I have said, I do not propose to go into a conference of that kind.

Now, Mr. President, I want to put into the RECORD some data that I think will be very valuable for future reference. I called on the department for information with reference to the number of harbors that we have of a certain depth—of 25 feet to 30 feet, 30 feet to 35 feet, and 35 feet to 40 feet, and so forth—and I have those data here. I ask that they may be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, February 17, 1921.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate.

Subject: Information regarding merchant vessels, etc.

MY DEAR SENATOR: 1. In reply to your inquiry of February 11 I take pleasure in handing you herewith a memorandum prepared by the chief statistician of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, together with the inclosures referred to in the memorandum.

2. You will observe that an attempt has been made to answer all the questions which were put in your inquiry of February 11. Considerable of the information given in Mr. Ritter's memorandum will without doubt be duplicated in such replies as may be made by the Shipping Board and the Department of Commerce, but I am nevertheless forwarding the entire memorandum in the hope that it may be serviceable to you.

Very truly, yours,

LANSING H. BEACH,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE BOARD OF ENGINEERS FOR RIVERS AND HARBORS,
February 14, 1921.

MEMORANDUM RELATIVE TO DRAFTS OF AMERICAN MERCHANT VESSELS.

Neither Lloyd's Register nor the List of Merchant Vessels of the United States, published by the Department of Commerce, gives information relative to the draft of vessels, and it is impossible to determine the draft from a statement of the tonnage and dimensions of a given vessel. In actual practice, it is found that the drafts of vessels built from identical plans vary somewhat.

The importance of accurate information relative to the drafts of vessels is fully appreciated by the board, and provisions for securing this data with reference to our ports has been made in the new plan for collecting commercial statistics recently recommended by this office and approved by the Chief of Engineers. The port facilities commission of the Shipping Board in 1918–19 made a study of the dimensions and drafts of vessels constructed during quinquennial periods between 1889 and 1918, and the tables and graphs showing the results of this study are inclosed herewith. The information was obtained by direct correspondence with a large number of vessel owners and operators, but replies were not secured in all cases and can not therefore be used to state definitely the number of vessels of each foot of draft.

There is inclosed herewith a table showing the dimensions and draft of the 10 largest vessels constructed during each 5-year period between 1889 and 1918. Based upon the studies of the port facilities commission and further investigations made by this office since taking over the work of that commission, the following table has been prepared showing the tonnage and drafts of American merchant steam vessels, with the number of vessels in each of several specified classes as indicated by Lloyd's Register. The drafts given are necessarily approximate in view of the absence of complete data on the subject, but are, nevertheless, believed to be very close to the actual.

New York		10,080	30.4
Philadelphia		10,232	30.4

The following answers specifically the questions propounded by Senator JONES:

1. Merchant vessels other than American of 40 feet draft or more, 1.
2. Number of American-flag merchant vessels having a draft of 35 feet or more but under 40 feet, 1.
3. Number of American-flag merchant vessels having a draft of 30 feet or more but under 35 feet, 9.
4. Number of American-flag merchant vessels having a draft of 25 feet or more but under 30 feet (6,000 to 15,000 gross tons), 793.
5. Number of American-flag merchant vessels having a draft of 20 feet or more but under 25 feet (2,000 to 6,000 gross tons), 2,196.
6. Number of American-flag merchant vessels having a draft of 15 feet or more but under 20 feet (1,000 to 2,000 gross tons), 277.
7. Names of harbors in the United States on the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts having corresponding depths. The following gives the names of harbors having depths of 15 feet and over on June 30, 1920, in the deepest channels of the inner harbor. Depths are referred to a plane of mean low water on the Atlantic coast, mean low Gulf on the Gulf coast, and mean lower low water on the Pacific coast. In a number of cases the existing projects for improvement provide for greater depth than those herein shown as available.

United States Shipping Board Port and Harbor Facilities Commission, May 15, 1919.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I find a table in the report of the Commissioner of Navigation giving the shipping of the world over a certain tonnage, the number of ships, and classifying them up to 25,000 tons and over. The report does not give the draft of those ships, but in the data furnished by the War Department they give me the draft of ships over a certain tonnage, and I have used that as a basis for giving the draft of the ships. I want to have put in the RECORD the table which is found on page 133 of the report of the Commissioner of Navigation for June 30, 1920.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The table referred to is as follows:

The number of steamers, according to certain divisions of gross tonnage, owned in the world—distinguishing the principal maritime countries—as recorded in Lloyd's Register, 1920-21.

NOTES.—A considerable number of vessels, which are not yet completed, appear in this table.

Steamers of less than 100 tons gross, and sailing vessels of less than 100 tons, are not included.

Vessels trading on the Caspian Sea, and wood vessels trading on the Great Lakes of North America, are not included.

In the absence of satisfactory information, the records of numerous small sailing vessels (belonging chiefly to Greece, Turkey, and southern Russia) are omitted from this table.

Japanese sailing vessels are not recorded in Lloyd's Register, and therefore do not appear in this table.

The figures for Russia exclude vessels registered at Esthonian ports.

Late enemy vessels captured or requisitioned by other countries prior to the date of the armistice are included in the figures given for such countries.

Ex-Austro-Hungarian vessels, ex-German steamers, and new steamers recently built in Germany, which have been provisionally allocated to the allied countries since the date of the armistice and appear in Lloyd's Register with a record of the new flag, are included in the figures shown for such countries. New vessels built and owned in the Trieste district (Venezia Giulia) are recorded in Lloyd's Register and are included in the figures for Italy.

Under the heading of "No flag recorded" are included all vessels entered in Lloyd's Register with record of flag, viz:

(a) Ex-German steamers of 1,600 tons gross and above, the allocation of which is not yet known, and a number of ex-Austro-Hungarian vessels inserted in Lloyd's Register as being registered at Fiume or ports south of Fiume.

(b) Vessels registered at Danzig, Memel, Apenrade, and the northern part of Schleswig, and vessels owned in Montenegro and Albania.

(c) Some other vessels regarding which no definite information has been received up to the time of going to press.

Sailing vessels which were under the German flag in 1914 and were not captured prior to the armistice are still recorded as German in Lloyd's Register and in this table.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish now to give some data which do not appear in the reports which I have just inserted in the RECORD. Beginning with ships of 1,000 tons and under 1,500 tons, ships of 1,000 tons to 1,500 tons, and from 1,500 tons to 2,000 tons draw 18 feet of water; that is, they require a depth of water of 18 feet. Ships of 2,000 tons and under 3,000 tons require a depth of 21 feet; of 3,000 tons and under 4,000 tons a depth of 22½ feet; of 4,000 tons and under 5,000 tons, 24 feet; of 5,000 tons and under 6,000 tons, 25½ feet; of 6,000 tons and under 8,000 tons, 27 feet; of 8,000 tons and under 10,000 tons, 28½ feet.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator does that refer to ships which are loaded?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That refers to the draft of the ships when loaded.

Ships of 10,000 tons and under 15,000 tons require a depth of 30 feet; of 15,000 tons and under 20,000 tons a depth of 32 feet; of 20,000 and under 25,000 tons a depth of 34 feet; of 25,000 tons and above from 34 feet to 41.3 feet. It may be interesting to know that the report shows that there were in the world on June 30, 1920, only 9 ships of that draft. I have submitted data giving the number of the other drafts.

I want to state that these depths are figured out by the War Department as nearly as they can be figured. They are probably not absolutely correct, but they are approximately correct.

Mr. POMERENE obtained the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Washington gave the tonnage of various ships. Does he refer to gross tons, net tons, or dead-weight tons?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I mean gross tons.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, in view of the especial reference which my friend, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], made to the Ohio River appropriation, I desire to submit a few observations. I am very much in favor of the completion of that project at the earliest moment possible; but I realize the necessity, under present financial conditions, of exercising the utmost economy consistent with reasonable development of water transportation.

I have not been entirely in sympathy with the scheme of river and harbor improvements which has prevailed during the period that I have been a Member of the Senate. It seems to me that we would pursue a wiser policy if we were to take up certain important projects and complete them at the earliest moment possible. If I could have my way, I would first care for the harbors; I would, secondly, care for the Mississippi River, not only because of its commerce but because of the fact that it overflows to the great detriment of an immense and valuable section of the country; and, thirdly, I would take care of the Ohio River. I say this because there is a question in the minds of a great many people as to whether or not river transportation is going to prove as valuable in the future as it did years ago, this, in part, because of the location of the manufacturing plants in industrial centers; but I have enough confidence in the value of river transportation to consent, and consent freely, to the improvement of rivers so that we can demonstrate whether or not the theory is correct.

But I rose to call special attention to the condition in connection with the Ohio River improvement. I find upon examination of the testimony which was taken before the House committee that the average annual appropriation for the Ohio River project during the last five years has been $4,091,000. That improvement is, I believe, about three-fifths or more completed. Am I correct in that, I will ask the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. RANSDELL. It has been completed to about that extent.

Mr. POMERENE. The chairman of the committee has referred to the large amount of money which remains unexpended and which has already been appropriated. That balance on December 31, 1920, was $41,658,334.33. As against this sum, on that date there were outstanding liabilities and pledges under contract $17,648,163.42, leaving a balance available on that date for further improvements of $24,010,170.91.

When I refer specifically to conditions in Ohio, I find that there is a large unexpended balance for harbor improvements at Toledo, Sandusky, Huron Harbor, Lorain Harbor, Cleveland Harbor, Conneaut Harbor, Port Clinton Harbor, Vermilion Harbor, Fairport Harbor, and Ashtabula Harbor. I have here in the report of the committee the balance unexpended on December 31, 1920, the outstanding liabilities and pledged under contract, and the balance available for each of those projects on that date. I ask that it may be incorporated in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Name of work.	Balance unexpended.	Outstanding liabilities and pledged under contract.	Balance available.
Toledo Harbor, Ohio	$17,228.51	$1,730.68	$15,497.83
Sandusky Harbor, Ohio	179,298.36	119,975.64	59,322.72
Huron Harbor, Ohio	4,346.46	51.12	4,295.34
Lorain Harbor, Ohio	55,798.81	13,715.27	42,083.54
Cleveland Harbor, Ohio	136,747.71	354.77	136,392.94
Conneaut Harbor, Ohio	29,518.90	25,074.81	4,444.09
Port Clinton Harbor, Ohio	500.50	.....	500.50
Vermilion Harbor, Ohio	2,802.68	.....	2,802.68
Fairport Harbor, Ohio	238,754.04	.....	238,754.04
Ashtabula Harbor, Ohio	98,148.45	.....	98,148.45

Mr. POMERENE. Suffice it to say that on December 31, 1920, for these several harbor projects there was a balance unexpended of $763,144.42. On the same date there were outstanding liabilities and pledged under contract for these improvements $160,902.29, leaving a balance available for the improvement of these harbors for the current year of $602,242.13. So these harbors are pretty well cared for.

Now, a word as to the Ohio River project. I secured the figures which I am about to quote within an hour from the War Department. On December 31, 1920, there was unexpended of amounts already appropriated for the Ohio River $4,945,901.16. Against this sum on that date there were outstanding liabilities of $2,913,742.52, leaving a balance available for new work of $2,032,158.64. Last year there was appropriated in a lump sum $12,000,000 for river and harbor improvements. Of that amount $1,373,000 was allotted to the Ohio River project. Under the pending bill $15,000,000 are proposed to be appropriated, and, if the Ohio River project is to get the same proportion out of this fund that it got last year out of the $12,000,000 fund, it would receive $1,716,250. That would leave available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, $3,748,408.64, or only $342,591.36 less than the average expenditures during the last five years for the Ohio River improvement.

Under these circumstances, it seems to me that the committee was justified in limiting this appropriation to the amount of $15,000,000. I feel particularly that this is true in view of what the chairman of the committee has described as the parliamentary situation. For these reasons, I shall vote against the amendment and vote to sustain the committee.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I have listened with great interest to the address just made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. I am glad to know that he expresses so much solicitude about this river as he has evinced.

I will say, Mr. President and Senators, that it is a great pity we have not finished the Ohio River improvement long ago.

Mr. POMERENE. And the Mississippi.

Mr. RANSDELL. And the Mississippi. I hope they can both be put under continuing contracts. As a matter of fact, we undertook to improve the Ohio River in 1876. That is a good many years ago, and we have been trying to improve it ever since. In 1910, 11 years ago, we adopted the 9-foot project under a plan to finish it in 10 years. The idea then was that we would appropriate $5,000,000 a year. We have not appropriated that sum regularly. I imagine we would have done so, however, had not the war intervened. I am not going to criticize Congress particularly about that.

I think it would be extremely wise, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio, if we could adopt and place under continuing contracts quite a number of the great harbor projects, the great canal projects, and the great river projects in this country. I should be delighted to see them treated in the same manner that we treated the Panama Canal. When we adopted that project we told the engineers to go ahead and finish it as fast as it could be done commensurate with good business principles. They went ahead and finished it in less than 10 years. Compare that, Senators, with the mighty Ohio River, a river that flows for a thousand miles from Pittsburgh to Cairo through the very heart of this continent, a river at whose head—the city of Pittsburgh—there is the greatest commerce within an area of 50 miles anywhere on earth; a commerce in volume, in tons, much greater than the combined commerce of the five greatest seaboard cities in the world; a commerce much of which should go down to the sea in boats through the Ohio and the Mississippi Rivers; and yet we have played with that great stream since 1876, and it is still far from completion.

If there be any project in the United States which should be placed under the continuing-contract system and rushed through, it is the Ohio River, and along with it, of course, should go the Mississippi River. That, Senators, is one of the things that I hope we will take up in a businesslike manner when we consider the legislative bill, which the chairman of the Commerce Committee assures us is to be taken up and passed in the early days of the extra session. Let me say that there are many legislative matters concerning river and harbor appropriations which should be taken up and considered in a very careful, painstaking manner, in a manner which we can not give during the closing days of the short session.

Mr. President and Senators, I was one of the members of the Commerce Committee who assisted in reporting out this bill. I voted, along with every other member of that committee, to report the House bill of $15,000,000. There was not a dissenting vote. Does that mean that we were satisfied with the bill? Does it mean that every member of the committee was satisfied with it? No, Senators; but it means that the members of that committee are fairly practical men, and they thought it would be better to take the $15,000,000 than to have no legislation whatsoever. We felt that if we amended the bill by adding a few million dollars—I do not know that we could have added very many—but suppose that we had added $5,000,000. Then amendments of various kinds would necessarily have been attached, a number of surveys would have been attached, new projects would have been attached, and legislative provisions of various kinds would have been attached.

When we got on the floor the bill undoubtedly would have been debated for two or three days. When finally passed and sent to the House, in my judgment, it would have been held up, and we would have been extremely lucky to secure the passage of any bill whatsoever. We could not have passed any measure without yielding in every single, solitary particular to the House of Representatives, as we did one year ago.

I do not like to be put in that attitude. I believe that material good can come to the rivers and harbors of this country from the inadequate appropriation of $15,000,000. I think it is a whole lot better to have that than to have nothing, especially in view of the fact that the Engineer Corps reports a balance on hand on the first of last month of something over $41,000,000.

Senators, the chairman of the Commerce Committee has told you that a large portion of this $41,000,000 has been practically lying dormant to the credit of its respective projects for a great many years. Let me submit this question for your consideration: We have been passing a series of lump-sum appropriation bills. I can not forget that one of the great Senators from my own side of the Chamber, the late beloved John H. Bankhead, moved the passage of a lump-sum river and harbor bill several years ago, and his motion prevailed. We passed a lump-sum rivers and harbors appropriation bill one year ago, and under that the Engineer Corps has been expending the money. As a matter of fact, Senators, do we not rely entirely on the engineers anyway? All the information we have about rivers and harbors comes from them. We accept their judgment. We follow their advice. We are giving them in this bill $15,000,000. Why not give them the right to do the best they can with the $41,000,000 now lying to the credit of the various projects, at least such portions of that $41,000,000 as are not pledged, or are not bound by contract in any way? And there are some $24,000,000 of that $41,000,000 unpledged, as shown by page 10 of the report attached to this bill.

The balance available and not tied up with any outstanding contracts or liabilities of any kind on the 31st of December last was $24,000,000. Let me repeat: If we are willing to trust the Chief of Engineers to expend, in prosecuting work on the various rivers and harbors of this country, the sum of $15,000,000, just as we trusted him last year to expend $12,000,000 and just as we trusted him several years ago to expend $20,000,000 in the way that would do the most good, why not authorize him—not now, but in the coming legislative rivers and harbors bill that we are to pass in the near future—to do the best he can with this $24,000,000?

I submit that for the very earnest consideration of the Senate. The amounts have been appropriated, I grant you, for specific projects. These amounts are now lying to the credit of specific projects; but I wish to remind you that not a dollar of these amounts is going to be expended unless the Engineers think it wise to expend it. Many of those amounts have been lying unexpended to the credit of the various projects for a great many years. Let us be practical. Let us treat this governmental matter as we would if it were a private proposition.

Suppose a private individual owned this great Nation of ours. Suppose that private person had to take care of all these waterways, had to provide for them, and had to the credit of a great many of these waterways $24,000,000. Would not he, as a wise man, move that money to and fro, from one to another, as the exigencies of the case seemed to demand? Beyond question a single individual would do that. Then, why not authorize the Engineer Corps to do the very thing that a wise business man would do in the conduct of his own affairs?

"Oh," you will say, "we are relinquishing our prerogatives as Members of Congress." Not at all, Senators. You have adopted those projects. You have said that those various projects are worthy of improvement. All that you would do under my suggestion is to say to the Chief of Engineers: "We withdraw the balances now lying to the credit of these respective projects. We place those balances in a lump sum and say to you, 'Do the best you can for all the river and harbor projects in this Nation that Congress has approved.'" He could not spend a cent except on an approved project, and he would not be obliged to spend a cent on any one particular approved project.

We have a rule that has prevailed ever since I have been in Congress that Congress will not consider making an appropriation for a project unless it meets the approval of the Engineers. We follow their advice in every project we adopt. It has no legislative status until they have advocated it. Finding ourselves, then, in that position, let us be practical men. When we come to pass this bill, let us give them that authority. I wish to throw this out as a suggestion.

Senators, I do not wish anyone to think that I am satisfied with the appropriation of $15,000,000 for the rivers and harbors of this great country.

I think it most unfortunate that so small an amount should be appropriated at this time, when transportation rates were never higher than now, when in my own State the railroads are raising the rates an average of 180 per cent over the already existing high rates to many points on rivers, when some rates have been raised as much as 500 per cent on certain commodities to points on waterways, points formerly served by boat, points which unfortunately are no longer served by boat, points where there has been for years potential water competition but not actual water competition, and the railroads have recently put up their rates.

Senators, if the rivers were used, if the waterways were used, if the people of America were getting the actual benefit of water transportation, I think river and harbor bills would be a great deal more popular than they are now. Unfortunately the boats have disappeared from our waterways to a very great extent. Unfortunately we do not use the waterways, and men who never see a boat and never hear of one find it very difficult to vote large sums for the improvement of our waterways.

We heard the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] say he would like to see big improvements especially for the harbors. Why is that? There has always been a liberal spirit toward harbors. They have been used. A great many ships enter the harbors along all our coasts. The harbors of the Great Lakes serve a truly colossal commerce. The harbors on the Atlantic, the Gulf, and the Pacific serve an ever-increasing and very valuable commerce. Of course, we are willing to appropriate money for harbors.

Let me say to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that I think he is mistaken when he states that the harbor improvement is suffering. I do not look for any serious injury to harbor improvement as a result of the $15,000,000 appropriation. Let me also call to his attention the fact that harbors are not competitors of railroads. They are terminals of railroads. They are part and parcel of railroad systems. They are cooperators with the railroads. The railroads enter the harbors and unload their freight at the wharves onto ships. The ships in turn enter the harbors and unload their freight onto the railroads. That has not been true of our rivers. They compete with the railways. We have been slow to make appropriations for the rivers and those that were improved have had their commerce driven away by improper and cutthroat competition on the part of the railroads.

Senators, it is most unfortunate, at this period in our history following the great World War, when there are at this moment over 3,000,000 people out of employment, that we can not follow the wise plan adopted by the great Napoleon following the wars in France, when he put into effect a big program of internal improvement of roads and rivers and canals, furnishing work for an immense number of the people of France. We ought to be furnishing work, if it be possible, for the idle people in America. We ought to be going forward with river and harbor improvement instead of backward. We ought to be pursuing a liberal policy instead of a niggardly one.

But the powers that be seem to have determined that we shall not pursue a liberal, broad, comprehensive policy. I for one believe it better to go ahead with a practical program which will give us some relief and which promises in the early days of the coming session a river and harbor legislative bill which in my judgment can be so drawn as to adopt a number of projects, probably continuing some of the present contracts, and to provide for setting aside in a lump sum a large percentage at least of the dormant $24,000,000 not now being used.

Senators, for these reasons I propose to vote against the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi and to sustain the Commerce Committee in its report.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, very briefly, I wish to state my position regarding the bill. It is unnecessary to review what has been presented by those who have participated in the discussion to-day, particularly those who are friends of waterway improvement.

I do not agree with the policy indicated in the making of a lump appropriation. I agree with the idea that we should go on with the work of taking care of navigable waterways of the country and that we should not confine our efforts now to the maintenance and the completion of projects already adopted. I know it is difficult in these days to provide funds for many purposes for which we need them, but this is no time to discontinue public works. As the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] has just said, now, when many men are out of employment, when there is real need for taking care of the industrial conditions in the country as far as we can, is the very time to do this kind of public work.

It is not because I have not full confidence in the Engineers, Mr. President, that I object to the plan of making the lump-sum appropriation. It is because of confidence in the Engineers that I rely and insist upon the other plan, namely, having them, when authorized by Congress, make examinations of the various projects proposed throughout the country, survey them, make estimates of cost and report on them, and then let Congress determine whether or not it is wise to adopt the projects recommended by the Engineers. We have not heretofore approved of a single project, or made appropriation for a single project, which has not been approved by the Engineers.

I do not believe there is any money spent for the Government, any money paid out of the Public Treasury, that is so carefully safeguarded as the money which we appropriate for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country. The situation, however, now is that we must determine whether we shall accept what many of us regard as an inadequate appropriation, what the Engineers themselves say is not sufficient to enable them to do the work that ought to be done during the coming year, and whether we shall accept it as the best that can be done, or whether we will jeopardize the whole measure by proposing amendments to the bill and having it go to conference, and then meet with the condition which obtains at the other end of the Capitol. There, as we all know, the rule has been changed. No longer does the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House provide any appropriation in the river and harbor bill. All appropriations are required to pass through one committee.

In the Senate we have a rule which excepts appropriations for river and harbor improvement from the requirement that all appropriation bills should be considered by the Committee on Appropriations.

As to the appropriation for river and harbor work, the rule has always been that that appropriation shall be embodied in a bill reported from the Committee on Commerce. The bill that we have before us is an appropriation bill. It is not really a river and harbor bill at all. It does not come from the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House. It passed through the Appropriations Committee of the House and is an appropriation bill pure and simple. If we should amend it in the Senate, it would carry provisions which would not be mere matters of appropriation, and in that event the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House would raise objection naturally to those provisions and contend that that is their field, that it is not a question merely of appropriation, that it is a question over which they have jurisdiction, and objection would be made to those amendments. We do not know how long those objections might be urged, and therefore, in view of the fact that only a few days remain of this session, that sort of thing, of course, might jeopardize the entire bill.

Consequently, although I do not agree with the policy or concede that the amount provided for is sufficient, and I hope we will get away from the policy of making lump-sum appropriations to take care of river and harbor improvements, and although I think there is real need for providing for new projects and for taking care of some of the projects we adopted on a different basis than merely leaving it to the Board of Engineers to determine what work they will do this year and what work they will put off until next year, I am constrained to think that the wisest course now is to pass the bill and agree to it precisely as it has come from the House.

In the first place, it might be said that with $15,000,000 for the next year and with the sums remaining available from previous appropriations, the Engineers will be provided with very nearly all they can economically use for one year. The amount which they have heretofore annually expended for river and harbor improvements since 1896 has averaged $22,662,962. Of course, some years they have spent more than that. In 1915, $37,710,459 was spent, and in 1914, $40,214,140 was spent, but the average expenditure annually since 1896 has been $22,662,962, so that with the $15,000,000 carried by the pending bill and with the available balance of $24,000,000, some of which, of course, can not be utilized because it is appropriated for special projects and can not be diverted, but some of which can be expended in the course of the next year, I take it that the Board of Engineers will have somewhere near their usual average expenditure of over $20,000,000 for the coming year. So that unquestionably a great deal can be accomplished through this appropriation.

The Senator from Mississippi called attention to certain matters this morning and urged that a great many important projects in his State were being neglected and could not be cared for.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I was not speaking locally this morning. I was speaking of the broad policy, and in the letter from Gen. Beach to the chairman of the committee he did not call attention to any projects in my State, but it was the larger projects I desired to talk about.

Mr. FLETCHER. I appreciate that also, but, of course, the Senator very properly—and I am not criticizing him at all—stressed the importance to the people of Mississippi of having their waterways, their rivers and harbors, properly improved and taken care of. But I will call his attention, if he has not observed it, to the fact that the different projects in his State seem to have already balances unexpended and balances available for expenditure, and a good many of them without any outstanding obligations against the original appropriation at all.

In the item for the Pascagoula River, Miss., there is an unexpended balance of $3,732.81, and that balance is now available.

Take the Wolf and Jordan Rivers, Miss. I did not know they had a river Jordan in Mississippi before, but there it is. There is an unexpended balance of $7,410.30, and that entire amount is still available, and there is no outstanding contract against it.

Take the East Pearl River, Miss. There is an unexpended balance of $7,340.07, and that amount is now available.

Take the Pascagoula Harbor, Miss. There is an unexpended balance of $24,744.45, and the balance available against it—there is no contract or obligation whatever—is $19,744.45. So that that work can go on under the previous appropriation. It is the same way with Gulfport Harbor and Ship Island Pass. There is an unexpended balance of $26,602. Against that there are outstanding liabilities and pledged under contract amounting to $19,857.59, leaving a balance available of $6,744.89.

With reference to South Pass, Miss., which the Senator mentioned, there is an unexpended balance in that item of $853,515.61, outstanding liabilities and pledged under contract, $748,245.06, leaving a balance available of $105,270.55. So that the work can go on. These contracts can proceed during this year, and there is a balance available for additional contracts to the amount of $105,270.55.

I merely mention this to illustrate that unquestionably there are items included under the head of "balance unexpended" which will enable the Engineers to carry on the work involving an expenditure of quite the average which they have undertaken in the past number of years, of over $22,000,000 in the coming year.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] mentioned the balance in the Ohio River item. For Ohio River locks and dams there is an unexpended balance of $4,945,901; outstanding liabilities and pledged under contract, $2,913,742; leaving a balance available of $2,032,158. That, of course, can be utilized without drawing upon the $15,000,000 carried by the bill. The Ohio general improvement item has a balance available of $160,515

So that I am quite convinced, Mr. President, that we are not doing a useless thing, by any means, when we pass this bill and accept its provisions as they came from the House. On the contrary, by proper management and control over these balances available, exercising the latitude which the law permits in that connection, and with the $15,000,000 carried by the bill, these great public works can be conducted not as extensively as they should be, perhaps not with that entire volume of work being carried on which otherwise could be carried on, but about as extensively as the work has been done in the last number of years.

The assurance that at the extra session of Congress the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House will act and will submit certain legislation looking to the adoption of other projects, perhaps, and other matters which ought to be taken care of in a regular river and harbor bill, justifies us now, I think, in taking care of the appropriation at this time, and looking for the next few months to enable us to legislate upon the broad question and stand firmly by a broad policy with reference to our rivers and harbors.

That, Mr. President, is a thing which the public desire, and I am quite sure that the action of the committee in reporting a bill on this subject indicates their purpose to pursue it, and I do not expect that we will have to wait longer than the extra session in order to undertake a proper legislative program in connection with rivers and harbors. I am sure at that time we will be able to find out of this unexpended balance of $41,658,334 very considerable sums which would never be used, carried as they are, because projects have been completed in many instances, and because work has been discontinued in various rivers. These sums have been assigned to particular work and can not be diverted, but we will be able to sift those all out and find in that grand total millions of dollars which we can apply to the new work and to the improvements which it is now desired shall be made.

Mr. President, I therefore am opposed to any amendment to this bill whatever, and I think we ought to pass it precisely as it came from the House and end this question here now.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I have a great deal of sympathy with the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I think the last thing we should economize in is river and harbor improvement. If we are going to build and develop a merchant marine, I feel that it is absolutely necessary that our harbors should be deepened and widened for that commerce; and recently having had some experience with sand banks and mud banks, I think I can speak feelingly on this subject.

I have in mind one project that has been presented to the Engineers of the department, and has been approved by them, and is now being delayed by lack of improvement. That is the great waterway which runs from Raritan Bay around Staten Island, known as Kill Van Kull, Staten Island Sound, and Arthur Kill, Raritan Bay, and continuing, forming the channel around Staten Island.

To show you what harbor improvement and deeping a channel may mean, I refer to the deepening of that channel in 1902 from 15 feet to a depth of 21 feet. The tonnage in 1902 was 14,000,000 tons, but in 1910 it had increased to 27,000,000 tons, and to-day over that waterway route there is nearly 40,000,000 tonnage carried in a year.

During the year the Shipping Board constructed cargo boats drawing 28 feet, many vessels designed to draw more than 27 feet of water were constructed at this point by the Shipping Board, and yet one of the channels at the outlet was only 21 feet deep.

The Engineers, following the request of the Staten Island Deeper Waterways Association, made a survey, and recommended that this channel be deepened to 30 feet for 400 feet in width, at a cost of $10,400,000 for the entire improvement, and that $3,000,000 be appropriated as the initial appropriation.

Remember, now, that this parallels New York Bay; that it takes care of practically all of the ocean-going tonnage furnished by those great industries—the Standard Oil Co., the Singer Sewing Machine Co., and those great fertilizer companies and machine shops scattered along that great water highway—and one of the great improvements is to widen the neck of the bottle, because if there is a congested traffic anywhere in this broad land it is right there in New York Harbor, where these great railway transportation lines converge, and, naturally, by reason of the harbor facilities being across New York Bay and restricted facilities on the New York side, most of these goods have to be lightered to the New York warehouses for transshipment across the ocean. Therefore that terminal facility is narrowed by reason of the fact of these restricted waterways.

I should like to ask the Senator from Washington what is going to happen to that project? Is it to be delayed? Is it to be indefinitely postponed or is it the policy of the Committee on Commerce to urge that those harbors and many other improvements along the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and many other improvements contemplated, shall be halted by the parsimonious policy of the House and this administration or is it their policy to go on and develop the commerce of this country?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, that is rather a broad question.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think the Senator will concede it is a very important and grave question at this time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think the answer ought to be evident—that is, that it will be the purpose of the Committee on Commerce to do everything that it can in a reasonable way to promote the commerce of the country and to make the facilities at the different ports available for the commerce that would naturally come to them.

In a general way, I recognize the situation to which the Senator from New Jersey has referred. I feel that the conditions at that point need attention, and ought to be attended to just as soon as is possible, and I hope in the next Congress, if not at the extra session then at the regular session, in the general legislative bill we expect to pass—that situation will be dealt with, and dealt with in a proper way.

I have not looked into the matter carefully, but I understand there is a joint commission of the two States of New York and New Jersey that is considering the port facilities there with a view, I take it, of making recommendations from their standpoint as to what ought to be done. I do not know that that commission has as yet reached a conclusion, but from what I know of the situation I feel that something should be done. Whether it should be done entirely by the National Government or in cooperation with the State of New York and the State of

New Jersey, or with the municipalities there, I am not now prepared to say, but something ought to be done to furnish better connections between the railroads which bring the products from the various parts of this country and the ships that come into the harbor there to take those products to the various ports of the world.

When I was at Newark a short time ago, as the Senator from New Jersey knows, it was stated there as a fact—and I have no reason to doubt it—that it costs just as much to get a carload of products across from New Jersey to New York where they can come in touch with the ships to carry those products to the ports of the world as it costs to get a carload from the city of Pittsburgh to Newark, N. J. It seems to me that such a condition of things like that ought to be met in some way and that better port facilities must be provided in that great port.

Let me say frankly that I should like to see those products of the country that are naturally tributary to certain ports go to those ports. I do not like to see the products of the country destined for shipment abroad artificially, apparently, centered in one great port. That expression does not indicate any antipathy to the port of New York, and when I speak of the port of New York I include Newark also, because it seems to me those harbors are all really one port and should be developed as one port.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is all part of one great project.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; it should be developed in that way, and that is the way I wish to see it developed. Notwithstanding that desire, however, I do want to see ample facilities, proper harbor facilities, developed there, so as to take care of the matter in the most expeditious and the cheapest way. A great proportion of the produce of the country must naturally go to that port for shipment, and will continue to go there. I wish to say to the Senator from New Jersey that, so far as I can, I shall do everything possible to aid in what may be deemed a proper and wise and fair way the development of the port facilities in the great ports of which he has spoken.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington another question before he takes his seat. I understand that in connection with the contemplated improvement of the Kill Van Kull and Staten Island Sound, the deepening of that channel to 30 feet and widening it to 400 feet, there are some $100,000 or $200,000 now in the hands of the Engineers which have been heretofore appropriated for those particular channels. Would it interfere with the passage of the pending bill if an amendment were introduced permitting the department to utilize those funds for that project which has been approved by the Engineers?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think it would.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have the Senator's answer.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	Lodge	Spencer
Ball	Harris	McKellar	Stanley
Calder	Harrison	McNary	Sterling
Capper	Heflin	Moses	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Swanson
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	New	Thomas
Dial	Kellogg	Overman	Townsend
Dillingham	Kendrick	Poindexter	Trammell
Elkins	Keyes	Ransdell	Underwood
Fletcher	King	Robinson	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	Kirby	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
Gay	Knox	Simmons	Williams
Gerry	La Follette	Smith, Md.	Willis
Gooding	Lenroot	Smoot

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are absent on business of the Senate in connection with the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

MILITARY NOMINATIONS.

Mr. ROBINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. I thank the Senator from Arkansas for yielding to me. I wish to address the Senate for a moment or two on the pending bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I did not understand the Senator desired to make an address.

Mr. CALDER. I will say to the Senator that I am compelled to leave in a few moments to attend a meeting of the Finance Committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. I myself will be obliged to leave in a few moments. I thought the Senator desired to submit some document.

Mr. President, some time ago the attention of the Senate was called to a number of military nominations respecting which no action whatever has as yet been taken by this body. The nominations which I now have in mind are promotions to the rank of major general, 11 in number; and promotions to the rank of brigadier general, 22 in number. The Army reorganization act directed the appointment of 11 majors general and 22 brigadiers general. It provided that selections for the rank of major general shall be made from a list of brigadiers general of the line and selections of brigadiers general shall be made from the list of colonels, with the further proviso that officers who had served for a period of 22 years in the Army of the United States might be accorded that grade. Pursuant to the express mandate of Congress recess appointments were made. Four were made about June 23, 1920, and the remainder about July 16, 1920. At the beginning of the present session the President sent these nominations to the Senate. In the ordinary course of procedure they would have been promptly disposed of. The Senate, however, up to this date has failed to hold a single executive session for the consideration of these nominations and has failed to take action respecting any one of them.

Promotions in the Army ought to be solely with regard to the best interests of the service and in fair recognition of the abilities and services of those promoted. I make the declaration now, after an investigation extending over a period of some weeks, that the law which Congress passed regulating the selection of officers for the ranks of major general and brigadier general has been strictly complied with in letter and in spirit.

A few days ago the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] published in the RECORD a list of these nominees for promotion in the Army, together with somewhat detailed statements of the records of the officers promoted. So far, the Senate has not only failed to act, it has not only failed to function in this particular, but no reason within my knowledge has been assigned for the extraordinary course that is now being pursued.

These officers, those who made the selections, and the people of the country are entitled to know the reasons for the failure of the Senate to act upon these nominations. When I consider the large number of officers who have rendered conspicuous service in recent years, I am not surprised that difficulty should have been experienced in making these selections; neither is it surprising that there should be omitted from the list officers who have contributed to the glory and to the success of our arms.

I have referred to the fact that under ordinary conditions these nominations would have been quickly disposed of; that they were made entirely independently of political considerations and without political influence. I shall not claim the time of the Senate to review in detail the records of all these officers for the services of every one in both lists fairly illustrate the gallantry and efficiency of them all. I am determined, however, that the Senate shall have an opportunity to consider this subject and to act upon it if it desires to do so before the end of the present session. A failure to take action respecting these nominations is in an important sense a stigma upon the officers.

It may be proper and fairly within the range of political expediency, under the circumstances that exist, to hold up nominations for political appointments. That practice has been indulged in heretofore; but never before in the history of the United States have military nominations been denied consideration and confirmation solely for political reasons. If political influences had dictated or contributed to the nominations, such an issue might not reflect discredit on the Senate of the United States; but since these nominations have been made in strict compliance with the laws passed by Congress, it is, to say the least, regrettable beyond my power of expression that the glory of our military service should be dimmed, that the gallantry and heroism of a number of its leaders should be discredited, by a failure of the Senate to discharge its constitutional function.

You may say that in declining to give consideration to these nominations there is no intention to reflect upon the nominees. Whatever may be the intention of those who persistently decline to permit a consideration of these nominations, the result is inevitable. Every officer who is rejected through a failure of the Senate to function is discredited in the eyes of those who expect the Senate of the United States, in the discharge of this high constitutional duty, to be governed by considerations of loyalty to the flag, loyalty to the Army, loyalty to the Government, and by those considerations alone.

Among the names sent by the President to the Senate in obedience to the mandate of Congress is that of John L. Hines, of West Virginia. Let me bring to the attention of Senators an epitome of his record, a partial statement of it, prepared from the records of the War Office.

John L. Hines went to France with Gen. Pershing as Assistant Adjutant General, commanded the Sixteenth Regiment, First Division, First Brigade, at Cantigny, when American troops first took the offensive in the war and won the first American victory. He commanded the Fourth Division, which made the attack in the Argonne, breaking the Hindenburg line, September 26, 1918, going beyond its objectives. His division stayed for 24 days in the line in the Argonne, the American Army record, and during the war sustained 13,000 casualties. His unit was in the heaviest fighting that any division was called upon to do. At Soissons he was given the distinguished service cross upon the field of battle for conspicuous gallantry, and was in the line on October 12, when he was given command of the Third Army Corps, commanding twice the number of men in the Union Army at Gettysburg.

France, Belgium, and Italy signally honored this great American soldier by decorating him. In obedience to the order of Congress he has been chosen as one of the 11 to receive the rank of major general. Throughout this entire session of Congress the Senate has refused even to consider his claim to this distinction.

Another illustration: Take the case of Maj. Gen. James W. McAndrews of Pennsylvania. That officer organized and commanded the schools at Langres, France, which turned out the officers for the American Expeditionary Forces. He relieved Maj. Gen. Harbord as Chief of Staff at Chaumont, and in that capacity served to the end of the war. He carried out the remarkable movement of the American troops around the salient of St. Mihiel into the Argonne, making that offensive possible, one of the great accomplishments of the war.

A few miles from Washington in a hospital Gen. McAndrews lies bedridden, suffering the results of exhaustion which he experienced by reason of his service. He, too, has been honored by every country associated with this Government in the conduct of that war, and it now remains for the Senate of the United States to do its duty and either confirm or reject his nomination.

I challenge the Senate to take a vote on the confirmation of these nominations. I challenge Senators who have used obstructive processes to prevent the nominations from being referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, to give a reason for that course that does not at the bottom sound in politics and petty politics at that.

Every name on the list is associated with service of vital importance to the success of our cause during the war. For instance, take that of Gen. Charles C. Menoher, another native Pennsylvanian. He commanded the Forty-second Division until almost the end of the war when he was given the Sixth Corps. This division, the celebrated Rainbow Division, glorious in the military annals of the Nation, sustained 14,000 casualties, conceded by all to have been one of the very best divisions in all the ranks of the Allies, commanded by as gallant a soldier as ever went to battle. The record is before the Senate which discloses the merit, the efficiency, and the courage of the other eight officers who have been nominated for promotion to the rank of major general.

I turn now for a moment to the list of names nominated for promotion to brigadier general. It happens that I am not personally or intimately acquainted with a single officer on either of the lists save one. I should be proud, however, as a citizen and as a Senator to contribute to the distinction which the Government is seeking to confer upon them in any way that may become known to me.

As illustrative of the service of those who have been named for brigadier general let me call attention to Dennis E. Nolan of New York. This officer went to France with Gen. Pershing. He was Chief of Intelligence of the American Expeditionary Forces, organizing and conducting the American military secret service which gathered information from the enemy and enemy sources, and with great ability combatted the highly specialized espionage system of the German general staff.

In September, 1918, when the Argonne offensive was launched and there was desperate need of officers he was assigned to command a brigade of the Twenty-eighth Infantry. He commanded it throughout that action, which was marked with some of the bloodiest fighting in the war, and was decorated with the distinguished service cross on the battle field for gallantry under fire. Why should the Senate refuse even to give consideration to the nomination of this brave soldier?

Robert C. Davis, of Pennsylvania, was adjutant general of Gen. Pershing throughout the trying period of the war. His alertness, his efficiency, his constant and fearless devotion to duty have earned the star of a brigadier general.

One other illustration: Ulysses G. McAlexander, lieutenant colonel and colonel of the Eighteenth Infantry, First Division, commanded the Thirty-eighth Infantry, Third Division, during its famous fight on the Marne, July 15, 1918, when it earned the name Rock of the Marne. Gen. Dickman reported after this fight, "No Germans between the Third Division and the river except dead ones." Honored and glorified in the eyes of all mankind, decorated time and again, decorated by France, Italy, England, and Belgium, his name is denied consideration by the Senate of the United States.

Yesterday morning's press, particularly the Washington Post, contained a statement in substance that this action on the part of the Senate in withholding consideration from all these names was prompted by the desire of some one to secure seniority for an officer not embraced within the list. I wonder if there is a Senator who, recognizing the gallantry and the valor, the sacrifices, and the services of these officers, is willing to do injustice to them in order that justice may be done to some one else, justice according to his own conclusion in the matter.

In the Army reorganization act Congress did not vest in the Senate of the United States the responsibility of making these selections. It vested that responsibility in the executive department of the Government. It could not have done otherwise. It did, however, define the manner, the method, and the means of the selection, and every requirement Congress saw fit to make has been complied with, both in letter and in spirit.

Some one had said that Gen. Pershing indirectly has exercised influence in the selection of the nominees. Let me in my humble way bear testimony to the worth and merit of Gen. Pershing. When our Government decided to engage in the war it selected him as commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Force. His previous services had fitted him for that great responsibility. He was not a politician. He was a soldier in every sense of the term. Pershing went to France, took charge of our soldiers there, and throughout the conflict he was in supreme command. The Government adopted and announced the policy of recognizing his authority in all matters that pertained to the conduct of our armies at the front. It sent him immediately any officer that he requested. It sent back home any officer whose services Pershing regarded more valuable in America than in the expeditionary force. This was wise action on the part of the Government. If those charged with responsibility—if the commander in chief had not done this, if he had failed to repose confidence in Gen. Pershing, our Army could not have achieved the success which crowned its efforts. The gallantry, heroism, splendid manhood of Gen. Pershing is illustrated by the fact that he has been a modest gentleman throughout the period which has elapsed since he came back home. He is comparable in disposition and ability in many respects to the commander of the Union troops during the Civil War—Gen. Grant.

The fact that in the selections made by a board of distinguished officers—and I speak now of the grade of brigadier general—only those were chosen for promotion who had displayed signal ability and unquestioned courage throughout their service is a further demonstration of the forceful character of Gen. Pershing, for probably he was consulted regarding the selection for promotion of officers who served directly under him.

Let some Senator tell the American people why the Senate should not have an opportunity to discuss and consider these nominations. If there is a name in that list which does not deserve the honor which this promotion associates with it, then let that name be rejected. Do not humiliate and stigmatize all these valiant officers because somewhere in the list is some one whom a Senator may deem unworthy. Manliness and courage as well as duty require that the Senate shall not shield itself from responsibility behind its rules of procedure. Let the Senate function.

These men did their duty with conspicuous ability when the success of our armies required their utmost exertion. Now that peace has come, why should not the Senate do its duty, even though it act reluctantly and after great delay? There are Senators here who have served throughout long periods, who have crowned themselves with honor and renown by faithful devotion to duty. Will those Senators, in order to advance the cause of a favorite, do injustice to men admitted to be worthy of the distinction tendered them in these nominations? There is not a Senator present who can not recall the name of some officer dear to him and whom he would like to see promoted. But, Senators, the American people do not want politics to control the selection of major generals and brigadier generals.

If it were not for the fact that in the early future the Executive Department of this Government is to pass into new hands there would not be a single objection to any of these nominations. The objection now is made en bloc, for the sole purpose—there can be no other—of attempting to induce the incoming President to send in a new list of nominations, to induce him to change this list by leaving off some name or names upon it and placing others there. When you analyze the proposition there can be nothing more said of it. Who wants to establish that sort of precedent?

It is said that the new President will revoke the Executive order of March 30, 1917, putting postmasters under the civil service and that hereafter all postmasters shall be appointed through political influence. He has the power to pursue that course. Let not the Senate of the United States declare to the country that military nominations are to be made in the same or in a similar way. It is fortunate that the greater number of our military officers know little of politics. It happens that a majority of the names on this list are of officers who, if they have any political sympathies or affiliations, are connected with a different political party from that to which I belong. It happens that no officer in that list is a native of the State which I feebly represent, in part, in this body. But I should count myself unworthy of my station here if that influenced me.

Let the Army of the United States be kept out of politics in so far as that end can be accomplished. Let officers be fighting men, ready and willing to earn their distinctions and their promotions in actual service, as these men have earned theirs. If it be known that a Senator or Senators of great influence in this body can send into humiliation and disgrace an officer who has glorified our flag in military service, we wreck the high standard of efficiency and courage which has been erected in the past and maintained in spite of politicians.

These nominations, made in conformity to the law of Congress, in recess, submitted to the Senate when it first assembled in December, are given no consideration whatever. The only way they can be considered, except by unanimous consent, is by the Senate proceeding to an executive session.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names.

Ashurst	Gooding	McCumber	Smith, S. C.
Ball	Gore	McKellar	Smoot
Beckham	Gronna	McLean	Spencer

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-four Senators have answered to the roll call. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. On this vote I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE.] I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and let my vote stand.

Mr. OWEN (after having voted in the affirmative). I learn that my pair has not voted, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. TRAMMELL (after having voted in the affirmative). I was not aware of the fact that my pair, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], was not present at the time I voted. He is absent. I therefore shall have to withdraw my vote, being unable to secure a transfer.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I understand my pair, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], has not voted. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I am compelled to withdraw my vote, as I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is not present.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Ashurst	Harrison	Pomerene	Stanley
Beckham	Heflin	Ransdell	Swanson

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

EMERGENCY TARIFF—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15275) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes. I ask that the report may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15275) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10, 23, and 24.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 19, 20, and 21, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "35"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert a comma and the following: "except rice cleaned for use in the manufacture of canned foods, on which the rate of duty shall be 1 cent per pound"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert a semicolon and the following: "olive, 40 cents per gallon in bulk, 50 cents per gallon in containers of less than 5 gallons"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"19. Sugars, tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscope not above 75 degrees, one and sixteen one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound, and for every additional degree shown by the polariscopic test, four one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound additional, and fractions of a degree in proportion; molasses testing not above 40 degrees, 24 per cent ad valorem; testing above 40 degrees and not above 56 degrees, 3½ cents per gallon; testing above 56 degrees, 7 cents per gallon; sugar drainings and sugar sweepings shall be subject to duty as molasses or sugar, as the case may be, according to polariscopic test."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"20. Butter, and substitutes therefor, 6 cents per pound."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"24. Wrapper tobacco, and filler tobacco when mixed or packed with more than 15 per cent of wrapper tobacco, and all leaf tobacco the product of two or more countries or dependencies when mixed or packed together, if unstemmed, $2.35 per pound; if stemmed, $3 per pound; filler tobacco not specially provided for in this section, if unstemmed, 35 cents per pound; if stemmed, 50 cents per pound.

"The term 'wrapper tobacco' as used in this section means that quality of leaf tobacco which has the requisite color, texture, and burn, and is of sufficient size for cigar wrappers, and the term 'filler tobacco' means all other leaf tobacco."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"25. Apples, 30 cents per bushel."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"26. Cherries in a raw state, preserved in brine or otherwise, 3 cents per pound."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"27. Olives, in solution, 25 cents per gallon; olives, not in solution, 3 cents per pound."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "16 and 18"; and the Senate agree to the same.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had to-day approved and signed the bill (S. 4582) to declare Bayou Cocodrie nonnavigable from its source to its junction with Bayou Chicot.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. H. Overhue, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to sundry amendments of the Senate to the bill and agreed to the same; that the House receded from its disagreement to certain sundry amendments of the Senate and agreed to the same with amendments; and that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 16, 21, 22, 28, 31, 32, 33, 54, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 60, 76, 78, 80, 81, 82, 87, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 132, 133, 134, 141, 142, 151, 152, 162, 163, 164, 165, and 166, and requested a further conference with the Senate thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 1300. An act for the relief of Alfred E. Lewis;

H. R. 15682. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922;

H. R. 1856. An act for the relief of Arthur J. Burdick;

H. R. 13402. An act for the purchase of land occupied by experiment vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif.;

H. R. 15662. An act to extend temporarily the time for filing applications for letters patent, for taking actions in the United States Patent Office with respect thereto, for the reviving and reinstatement of applications for letters patent, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 15872. An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE SYSTEMS (S. DOC. NO. 415).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Pursuant to the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to repeal the joint resolution entitled 'Joint resolution to authorize the President in time of war to supervise or take possession and assume control of any telegraph, telephone, marine cable, or radio system or systems or any part thereof, and to operate the same in such manner as may be needful or desirable for the duration of the war and to provide just compensation therefor, approved July 16, 1918, and for other purposes,' approved July 11, 1919, I am transmitting herewith a report made by Albert S. Burleson, Postmaster General of the United States, supplementing his report of October 31, 1919, and giving a final account and report of the financial operations of the telephone and telegraph systems by the United States during the period beginning August 1, 1918, and ending July 31, 1919, and of the expenditures from the appropriation in the act approved June 5, 1920, reading as follows:

"For payment of the deficit incurred in the operation of the telegraph and telephone systems during the period of Government control and to carry out the provisions of the joint resolution approved July 16, 1918, and the act approved July 11, 1919, with reference to just compensation to the owners of the telegraph and telephone systems for the supervision, possession, control, and operation of their properties by the United States during the period beginning midnight, July 31, 1918, and ending midnight, July 31, 1919, $14,000,000, to remain available until June 30, 1921."

PRAGUE, January 25, 1921.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington.

SIR: I have the honor to report on the conditions in the Czechoslovak Republic as requested in the department's circular telegram of January 7, 1921, 7 p. m.

I shall confine the major part of this report to the food situation as it affects the women and children. This is the vital need at the present time, and I shall only refer briefly to the need for clothing and medical assistance to fight the threatened typhus epidemic in Carpathian Russia, and the tuberculosis situation. Accurate information on these latter subjects is, however, not available at present.

Upon my arrival in Prague as the first American minister to the Czechoslovak Republic, I was informed by the acting Minister of Foreign Affairs that the American Relief Administration had literally saved the country from bolshevism. Since then I have been in close touch with this agency, even since it ceased to be a governmental organization, and continued its work as the European Children's Fund. As the organization was hastily got together after the armistice, there is much that could be said in criticism, especially at the beginning; on the whole, however, I believe the work has been carried on with due regard for American interests, and with the constant aim in view of withdrawing at the earliest opportunity and leaving the work to be continued by the Czechoslovak Republic and local agencies.

Independent investigators are frequently sent from the main office in London to check the work of the local organization, and much care is exercised in laying out the work. In addition, I have been in close touch with experienced men from other organizations, such as the American Red Cross and the Rockefeller Foundation, who have testified as to the necessity of feeding the children, and the benefits thus accomplished.

As stated above, the relief given by America to this country has been considered of prime importance. This relief is still being extended and the question is, shall the American people continue it, or shall it be stopped at once? If no assistance had ever been given, it might not be advisable, from the purely humanitarian point of view, to give it now, since the need here is less in comparison with the appalling conditions which exist in other countries. However, this country is justified in asking for the continuance of American relief measures, not only because of the necessity, but because Czechoslovakia is making valiant efforts to reestablish itself not only in this respect, but economically as well, and, in my opinion, it is making considerable progress in the right direction.

Since the initial United States Government credit in 1919 for flour purchases, this country has been able to secure flour in sufficient quantities to take care of the greater part of the industrial population. However, the distribution has been poor; outlying districts have suffered; and a large part of the population has been undernourished in consequence. This means that their productive ability has been considerably curtailed. (As evidence of this, the miners of Moravska Ostrava have agreed to work on Sundays if the Government will grant an advance of 10,000,000 crowns for additional food rations. The miners of the Falkenan district agreed to increase their output from 20 to 40 per cent provided certain extra rations were furnished them. This latter information was furnished me by a reliable American who negotiated an agreement with the miners on behalf of an American syndicate.)

The Government food policy is open to criticism in many respects. The situation has been reported on in detail in my weekly dispatch No. 396, of January 18, and in previous reports. Poor distribution and maladministration are largely responsible for shortages, especially in Carpathian Russia and Slovakia, where the entire transportation system and governmental machinery is being built up, with a lack of trained officials to draw upon. Prague, the capital, would have been without flour over Christmas if it had not been for a temporary loan of 1,700 cars from American relief stocks. Several similar instances can be cited where the emergency aid of American relief has prevented serious labor troubles in industrial centers due to failure of Government stocks.

The food shortage affects, in a general way, all the nonfarming population, which is more than one-half of the total. Acute want is felt in three particular districts, the mountainous region in northern Bohemia, the hilly districts of Trencin in Slovakia, and the territory of Carpathian Russia. The causes of the shortage are, in addition to the factors already mentioned, the reduction of the cultivable area due to diminution of live stock and of man power; the impoverishment of the soil due to lack of phosphates and nitrates, fertilizers essential to soil under cultivation for so many hundreds of years, and to fixing of maximum prices during the war; and the prohibition of free trade in grain, which discourages the farmers from endeavor. It is estimated that the crop production has decreased 40 per cent since 1914; the production in 1920 is 10 per cent below that of 1919. The farmers are feeding their own grain to pigs and cattle, since meat prices are not subject to control and therefore they can sell meat at better prices than they can get for grain. This factor contributes to a grain shortage which the Government is unable to deal with. I wish to call the department's attention to the fact that even should the Czech Government remove the fixed price on flour and allow it to be sold in the open market, the maldistribution would perhaps continue to an even greater degree, and the relief from America in the form of flour would still be necessary.

To tide the nonfarming population over the critical period, the State has kept down the price of grain requisitioned from the farmers to less than one-third or even one-fourth the price obtainable by clandestine sale. Home supplies are therefore inadequate. Forty-five thousand carloads must be imported this year from abroad, in addition to 90,100 carloads expected to be raised by the farmers of the country, not including Carpathian Russia. The food crisis at the present moment is due to the failure of the farmers to deliver enough grain and to insufficient imports from abroad. Only 12,531 carloads of flour and grain have so far reached this country from abroad; an amount somewhat larger than that has been purchased and is on the way, but much remains still to be bought. Negotiations are under way for the purchase in London of old Chinese flour from British Army stores on three months' credit.

The fall in the price of sugar, Czechoslovakia's mainstay, compels her to seek credits for the purchase of food for her people and raw materials for her industries, and she has difficulties in obtaining this credit. Despite this, however, the country as a whole is fairly well supplied with meat, bread, and sugar, although at prices beyond the reach of the mass of the population.

Direct benevolent help is needed in the three districts above mentioned. They are hilly, nonproductive countries, hard hit by the war in the matter of food. Slovakia and Carpathian Russia always furnished a large percentage of emigrants to America, and a larger number of Carpathian Russians now live in America than remain in the old country. There, as in Slovakia, a large part of the population used to go down for the spring and summer months to work in the rich Hungarian plain.

In Carpathian Russia the problem is further complicated by the evacuation of two-thirds of its richest part by the Rumanians, who had occupied it until six months ago. In this short time the whole Government machinery for taking over these districts has had to be built up, with but scant material to draw upon. Most of the old officials are loyal to the Magyar Government, and the local population is backward and illiterate. All rail and wagon communication to the eastern part of the country is obliged to pass through Rumanian territory, and this is an additional handicap.

The first of the districts mentioned, northern and northwestern Bohemia, largely populated by Germans, maintained itself by industries and trade, workmanship, and craftsmanship, with very little agriculture.

It would seem that if the Government could not regularly distribute its own food to the population that the work of the children's organization would also be affected. This is true; and trouble is continually cropping up. But the work of the American officials is to watch the situation, and, as the amount of food for children is small in comparison with the total need, the distribution is effected with fair efficiency. American help for the children of Czechoslovakia, which at its height furnished one good meal a day to half a million children, has now been reduced to feeding practically the above-mentioned districts. (The distribution in Slovakia is in the hands of Lady Paget's British mission, but the food comes from and is paid for by the American relief administration.)

Due to a shortage of funds, the number now fed is about 100,000, but it is hoped that this number can be doubled. This help is absolutely indispensable. In the districts where it is given the population was actually dying out in 1918. In entire districts the deaths outnumbered the births by almost three to one. (In the whole Republic death from consumption has doubled since 1913.) In some of the districts in question approximately 60 per cent of the children showed clinical signs of malnutrition. In northern Bohemia the problem is a heritage from Austria-Hungary. In some of the towns where the American Relief Administration is working two-thirds of the population was fed from public kitchens during the war. In these outlying districts distribution of food is further complicated by slow communication due to the lack of railway cars and equipment. Contraband prices of bread and nearly all kinds of food there are almost double those in Prague. The population can not afford the price of contraband food. More than half of the workmen in some of the districts have emigrated either to the mining districts or to Germany. Industries are working at one-fifth to one-third capacity. The American Relief Administration in one district has saved hundreds of children's lives from death of edema, and in the Republic hundreds of thousands of children have been saved from becoming crippled, dwarfed, consumptive, anemic human stock.

The American food for Czechoslovakia arrives at Hamburg, all expenses of transportation, preparation, and distribution after that are borne by Czechoslovakia. The American contribution since 1919 has amounted to $4,421,448.16 and the Czech contribution to $887,096.26. At the present depreciated exchange this may be considered as more than equal to the contribution from America. Over a million meals have been served at an approximate cost of 2 crowns per meal, including all the expenses. The overhead expenses are very small. From over 40 Americans at the beginning of 1919, the number has been reduced to 4 who exercise general supervision. There are in addition 155 local employees and physicians, whose salaries are paid by the Czechoslovak Government, and 10,000 volunteer workers. The overhead expenses for the American Relief Administration are 1 cent for 25 meals, and the overhead expenses for the American Relief Administration plus the Czechoslovak children's relief 1 cent for 12½ meals. Ninety-five per cent of the money goes into food, with 3 per cent for transportation and 2 per cent for overhead expenses.

The stamping out of epidemics by the Czechoslovak Red Cross, under the presidency of Dr. Alice Masaryk, has won praise from independent observers, Americans, and others. Prof. Gunn, of the Rockefeller Foundation, emphasizes the urgent need for child feeding and care of tuberculosis patients. After a careful study of the statistics, which he admits are inaccurate, Dr. Gunn states that the tuberculosis situation here is very bad, especially among children, as compared with the United States. He attributes a large percentage of this to undernourishment, and notes a great improvement in this direction, as well as in the infant mortality rates since the introduction of American child relief in 1919. He reports considerable progress by the Czechoslovak Red Cross in developing means for fighting this disease, but states that years of work are necessary before great progress can be made.

In conclusion, I would state that the resources of Czechoslovakia in agriculture, mining, and industries are of the best. Her population, particularly in Bohemia and Moravia, is composed of educated, trained, and efficient workmen, both on the farms and in the shops. The whole attitude of the people is characterized by a worthy ambition to be not only a self-supporting but a contributing factor, economically as well as otherwise, in Central Europe. Self-help is practiced in small and big things, and a sense of duty and discipline is strongly impressed on the national character, both of Czechs and Germans.

The Government has persisted, it would appear wisely on the whole, in saving the State from the shock of high prices of bread for the nonfarming population during the period when the country's industries and trade have not yet recovered their former markets. To do this it has been necessary to purchase grain abroad at market prices and sell to the population at prices which caused the Government a loss of nearly 2,000,000,000 crown a year.

Relief to the children in the districts where acute distress prevails is therefore both deserved and imperative. But it can not supplant the necessity of constructive economic relief to the country as a whole in the shape of long-term credits for the purchase of food and raw materials. The textile industry (cotton) supports a population of 2,000,000. If the misery in Czechslovakia is not so great as elsewhere in Europe, yet it should not be forgotten that the country on that very account is nearer to economic recovery and is separated by less than are other States from the day when it will become a contributing factor to the recovery of the rest of Europe. The desirability of speeding up this day is therefore a strong argument in favor of helping Czechoslovakia in both directions—of saving the children and of assisting the State by means of credits for raw materials and food. I personally can not too strongly emphasize the need for this latter constructive relief. Unless America does something along these lines we may look forward to an indefinite continuation of demands for American charitable help. There are some 400,000 orphans and widows as a result of the war, whose condition is such as to appeal to American sympathy. At various times I have personally visited the districts where relief is now being given and have seen barefooted children in the middle of winter walking around in the snow. In Carpathian Russia I have seen delegations of peasants, evidently in great want, just after harvest, asking for help to tide them over the winter and asking for medical aid to fight the typhus epidemic. I can testify as to the gratitude of the population and their admiration for America and everything American.

The work that is being done by American organizations here is on the whole constructive, and the Government, the Czecho-Slovak Red Cross, and private organizations are gradually taking over such work as is permanently necessary. In the work of the European children's fund the supervision of Americans is necessary as long as we supply the food. The committees organized by this relief represent all nationalities in the Republic, and Americans exercise a restraining influence on these elements. All reports show that these committees are now operating harmoniously, a fact which could not have been accomplished without American help.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

RICHARD CRANE.

AMERICAN MISSION,
Budapest, January 20, 1921.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington.

SIR: Pursuant to the department's instructions of the 7th instant and supplementary to my telegram No. 299 of the 18th instant, I have the honor to report that the conditions which continue to prevail in Budapest make the feeding of the undernourished children of the population a public necessity. Not only is it a benefit to the rising generation as well as a puissant aid in combating social unrest, but doubtless many lives have been saved thereby. Proof of its necessity is furnished by the poor crop of last year, due to numerous causes, both political and economic, which have necessitated a 30 per cent mixture of maize flour in the people's bread; the abnormally high cost of foodstuffs, which has not been offset by the increase in wages; the shortage of fuel, disorganization of transport, unemployment due to lack of raw materials, and the prohibitory cost of imports due to the low value of the crown.

Hungary is not, however, in a condition analogous to that which exists in Austria. Under more favorable circumstances sufficient food could be produced in Hungary to feed her population, although certain elements are now lacking for the proper nourishment of town-bred children, such as sugar, rice, lard, milk, and some flour, all of which are being imported by the American Relief Administration European Children's Fund.

A detailed account of the activities of that organization is given in a communication addressed to me by Mr. C. G. Bowden, their director for Hungary, under date of the 19th instant, which, together with its annexes, is inclosed herewith. While it would appear that the Hungarian Government is not directly occupied to any large extent in the relief of underfed children, it has contributed some 34,112,000 crowns toward the activities of the American Relief Administration European Children's Fund, as against 183,785,118 crowns (at 200 crowns to the dollar) expended by that organization, and 8,000,000 crowns each by the Hungarian League for the Protection of Children, under the presidency of Count Laszlo Széchenyi, the relief organization directed by ex-Prime Minister Charles Huszar, and the students' kitchen, making a total of 58,112,600 crowns from Hungarian sources.

In a city which is suffering from the moral and economic effects of the late war, the Rumanian occupation, and a short bolshevist régime, the obstacles encountered to the efficient organization and administration are, many of them, well-nigh insufferable. I am of the opinion, however, that the children's feeding fund has met with a high degree of success in overcoming these many difficulties and deserves the highest praise from both the American and the Hungarian public. With regard to the physical effects of their efforts, however, some interesting statistics appear on page 51 of their recently published report, a copy of which is herewith inclosed and from which it would appear that of 8,870 children fed over a period of seven months and of whom statistics had been kept, 52 per cent lost weight, 20.8 per cent showed no gain, while 27.2 per cent showed an average increase of 1½ kilos, about 3 pounds.

The reason for this striking result is obscure. What might have been the condition of these children if they had not profited by the intervention of the children's feeding organization? It would seem hardly probable that the parents of those who actually lost weight during the period in question had curtailed their food at their own tables and thus saved funds to be otherwise applied or the other members of the family provided with more food. Without a house-to-house inspection this could not be ascertained, an activity quite beyond the powers of those directing an organization engaged in feeding, at one time, 110,357 little ones. However striking these statistics may be, the general results must be judged in their broader aspect—the lesson in charity; the moral effect on the children and their parents; the probable physical deterioration of the children had no one come to their succor; the example of a well-planned organization; the establishment of a precedent for governmental participation in such activities; and the introduction of additional foodstuffs into a country suffering from shortage.

While the Hungarians are grateful for the assistance received they would naturally, as a high-spirited and self-reliant people, desire to assume the care of their own poor as soon as conditions would permit; but they would need the cooperation of foreign humanitarian societies to help them procure the necessary materials to enable them to do so effectively and expeditiously. After the demobilization of their troops and the institution of the scheme of administrative and other economies adopted by the Government, the financial status of Hungary will doubtless be so improved that outside aid in this regard can be dispensed with. Until those projects have become a reality, however, foreign charitable assistance will continue to be not only welcome but necessary.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

U. GRANT-SMITH.

AMERICAN MISSION, BUDAPEST.

(Inclosure No. 1, dispatch No. 607, dated Jan. 20, 1921.)

AMERICAN RELIEF ADMINISTRATION WAREHOUSES, (AMERIKAI SEGITŐ RAKTÁRAK),
Budapest, January 19, 1921.

To the AMERICAN COMMISSIONER.
Budapest.

DEAR SIR: With reference to the conversation which we have had in regard to the necessity for the continuation of child feeding in Hungary until the next harvest, I submit the following information:

I. ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.

a. Supply of foodstuffs. The 1920 crop in Hungary was far below the average. The reasons for this are:

1. The disturbances caused by the bolshevik régime.
2. The Rumanian occupation of rich agricultural sections during the season in 1919.
3. The confiscation by the Rumanians of large quantities of seed grains, agricultural machinery, and stock.
4. Unfavorable weather.

As a result of the insufficient yield this country did not have, as it had hoped, a surplus of foodstuffs to export, but, on the contrary, will be able by the most careful management to provide for the population the minimum required for existence until the next harvest. The bread flour is to be mixed with 30 per cent maize. The Government had the flour milled into two grades, one of the finest quality, the other of inferior. It was proposed to sell the first at 42 crowns a kilo, and an appeal was issued that all well-to-do people should buy it as a matter of patriotic duty in order that the Government might be able to sell the inferior grade at 3.50 crowns per kilo, recouping their losses on the profits of the higher grade flour. However, it has developed that very few people have been able to pay 42 crowns per kilo, with the result that most of this flour remains in the hands of the Government. It is possible that a certain quantity of this will be exported in exchange for other commodities.

With the exception of this white flour and a quantity of white beans, there is no surplus of foodstuffs in Hungary. The only valuable article of export is wine, of which the yield last year was excellent.

The American relief administration feeds only children who have been certified by doctors to be sick and undernourished. For the kitchens the following commodities are used: Cocoa, sugar, milk, rice, lard, flour, and beans.

Of these, all of the beans and part of the flour are furnished by the Hungarian Government. The other commodities which are unobtainable in Hungary are imported by the American relief administration.

b. Fuel shortage: The maximum capacity of the Hungarian mines can supply only half of the coal requirements of the country. Coal from the Hungarian mines is of very low calory value. Due to lack of transportation facilities, the unwillingness of the neighboring States to export coal into Hungary, and the depreciation of the Hungarian crown, which makes imported coal practically prohibitive in price, it is impossible to make up this deficit from imports.

Since Hungary lost 60 per cent of her woodlands by the peace treaty, the wood shortage is even greater than that of coal, and the price is very high.

The schools of Budapest have been closed since October 15 on account of lack of fuel. The majority of the inhabitants have no fuel for heating purposes, and many have not even sufficient for cooking.

c. Unemployment: Due to fuel shortages and lack of raw materials for the factories, the great majority of industrial workers are without employment.

d. Wages: The average wages of a skilled workman are from 400 to 600 crowns weekly; of an unskilled workman, 300 crowns. This amounts to from fifteen to twenty times the wages of 1914. (See Table I adjoined.)

e. Cost of foodstuffs: The average cost of foodstuffs is about fifty times as great as in 1914. A workman requires at least 300 crowns more than his weekly pay to buy foodstuffs necessary for his existence. (See Table II.)

f. The cost of clothing is one hundred to one hundred and fifty times as great as in 1914. (See Table III.)

g. Physical condition of the children. (See Table IV.) The loss in normal body weight of the children since prewar times is as follows:

Ages.	Loss in kilos.
3 to 4 years	1.5
4 to 5 years	2
6 to 9 years	2.5
9 to 10 years	2
10 to 14 years	1.5

Forty thousand children have rickets.

Forty thousand are tubercular and scrofulous. The number of tubercular children has doubled since prewar times.

More than 70,000, excluding the cases of illness, are seriously undernourished.

h. Moral condition of the children.

1. There are more than 50,000 young vagrants on the streets of Budapest.

2. Truancy from school has increased 30 to 40 per cent since prewar times.

3. In 1920, 50,000 juveniles were tried in the courts of Budapest, of whom 50 per cent were charged with vagrancy. Of these, 14 per cent were girls. There were many cases of prostitutes under 14 years of age. Ninety per cent of these young prostitutes were found to be venereal.

It is obvious that under such circumstances even the most adventurous political program which promised a betterment of social conditions would be welcomed by the people.

II. Contributions of the Hungarian Government and local organizations for the relief of the population:

Contribution of the Hungarian Government:	Crowns.
To work of American Relief Administration	34,112,000
Hungarian League for Protection of Children	8,000,000
Ex-Prime Minister Huszar Relief Action	8,000,000
Students' kitchens	8,000,000
Total	58,112,000

The above are the principal donations made by the Government to charitable organizations. In addition to this, the Government is to the best of its ability looking after the usual categories of State dependents and providing food and clothing to the numerous State employees at a loss. It should be noted that the Government contributed an enormous sum of money to our action, far more than it could afford under the circumstances.

It should be remarked that the comparatively small effort of the Hungarians in relief work among the poor is due more to lack of organizing ability and experience in this work than to lack of interest. The Government and the general public are much more inclined to the work of the American Relief Administration than to local organizations. They have confidence in our efficiency and our freedom from prejudice or favoritism. Our aim is to show them the way and to help them for a time, then to turn over our work to the local organizations which have benefited from the experience gained in working with us. We hope to leave a permanent child-welfare organization here when we go away. Of the personnel now carrying on child-feeding work, almost a thousand, only three are Americans, of whom two are volunteer workers.

3. Efficiency and economy of the administration.

a. Efficiency: Only children who have been carefully examined by a doctor and pronounced to be undernourished (according to the Dr. Pirquet system of weights and measurements) are given cards admitting them to the kitchens. The children partaking of the feeding are weighed at frequent intervals, and any child who has increased in weight so as to approach the normal is excluded to make place for another undernourished one. In this way it is insured that only the most needy children receive our meals.

Foodstuffs are distributed for a month at a time to each kitchen, based on the number of children fed and the ration per child per day. Our controllers examine the books and the supplies of each kitchen at frequent intervals to make sure that there is no discrepancy. Chemical analysis of the rations are often made to ascertain whether the required quantities of foodstuffs are contained. There is a standard menu for all kitchens. It is practically impossible for any misappropriation of our foodstuffs to be made. A few cases of petty thievery were found last year. The offenders were severely punished.

b. Economy. We submit a statement of our action up to August, 1920.

Total value American contributions.

Memorandum.

I beg to report, sir, that I have spoken to Mr. Charles Kocsán, an editor of the Christian Socialist paper Nep, who told me that very much of the materials, food, and supplies of the American humanitarian actions comes into wrong hands. A population of professional mendicants is bred, and the number of those who live on the food and supplies given by the committees is much bigger than believed. Many of those out of work live from "Schleichhandl"; that is to say, they go into the country, buy up food, sell it at a higher price in the city, instead of going to regular work, while the other members of their family wait for food or presents before the officers of these institutions.

An hour after the Christmas presents of the American Red Cross had been distributed by Capt. Pedlow, a perfect market was organized on the Teleki tér, where these articles were bought and sold.

He believes it would be much better to learn these people a useful trade and supply them with raw materials, the price of which would be refunded by the products, whereas they would get decent wages and could so make an honest living. An action of this kind was organized in the country—county of Vas—etc., and he would like to have the support of these organizations rather than for ill-chosen, unworthy individuals. Will submit data on the question.

Suggests distribution of support to be organized in future with the help of the Christian Social trades-unions, so that the workmen would be supported, who are out of work without their fault, and not the professional beggars.

MILITARY CONFIRMATIONS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the President of the United States has nominated to the Senate three officers for the grade of brigadier general in the Officers' Reserve Corps. I ask unanimous consent, as in open executive session, that these three nominations be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am authorized by the Committee on Military Affairs, which committee discussed the matter this morning in its regular meeting, to report back forthwith these three nominations to the Senate and ask consent for their immediate consideration as in open executive session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the nominations.

The READING CLERK. To be brigadier general, Richard Coke Marshall, jr., late brigadier general, United States Army, from February 4, 1921.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the Senate advise and consent to this nomination? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it; the nomination is confirmed, and the President will be notified.

The READING CLERK. To be brigadier general, John Henry Sherburne, late brigadier general, United States Army, from February 11, 1921.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the Senate advise and consent to this nomination? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it; the nomination is confirmed, and the President will be notified.

The READING CLERK. To be brigadier general, Brice Pursell Disque, late brigadier general, United States Army, from February 17, 1921.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the Senate advise and consent to this nomination? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it; the nomination is confirmed, and the President will be notified.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 10, 17, 18, 20, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 45, 46, 47, 48, 52, 54, 55, 56, 58, 59, 62, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 73, 79, 83, 84, 86, 96, 99, 100, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 113, 116, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 130, 131, 135, 140, 153, 154, 155, 156, 159, and 161.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 12, 19, 23, 40, 41, 51, 53, 57, 61, 63, 70, 71, 74, 75, 77, 85, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 97, 98, 112, 115, 117, 118, 119, 128, 129, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 157, 158, and 160, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "eleven"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$11,917.50"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,811,857.50"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 139: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 139, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$550,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 16, 21, 22, 28, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 42, 43, 44, 49, 50, 60, 72, 76, 78, 80, 81, 82, 87, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 111, 114, 120, 121, 127, 132, 133, 134, 136, 137, 138, 141, 142, 143, 149, 150, 151, 152, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, and 168.

F. E. WARREN,
REED SMOOT,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES W. GOOD,
WALTER W. MAGEE,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WARREN. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I did not object to the Senator making his report, but I do not understand that he has had unanimous consent to take up the report. I desire to ask, if this motion is agreed to, whether it displaces the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not understand that the Senator had moved to take it up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, no; we have been proceeding here by unanimous consent.

Mr. WARREN. It is a partial report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the Senator to let his motion go over until to-morrow morning. I desire to examine the report.

Mr. WARREN. I was merely about to say that as to two or three amendments the House has concurred with us, and has sent the others back to the conferees. There are some 40 matters still in disagreement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that of course I have not had a chance to examine the report. There are some matters in the report that are of very vital interest to the Senate and many of its Members. I do not suppose the Senator expects for a moment that he could get the report agreed to without some discussion and consideration of it, and the hour is late.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, the report must be laid over if there is objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am sure the Senator understands that I am not making a captious objection to the report. There are in it matters of vital interest to myself and my constituency and other Members on this side of the Chamber, and I desire to have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. WARREN. I think I ought to say before dropping the subject that some 65 matters went back to the House; that the House has sent back some forty-odd or 50 of those, insisting upon its disagreement, without taking any action other than that, which, I understand, takes out of the equation the matter of making points of order, and leaves them with the conferees to settle; and there are altogether three matters in which they have offered amendments to our amendments, to which I was instructed to agree. Other than that, of course, it all goes back for further consideration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that I do not desire to delay his report. There are matters touched on in the conference that I think will probably bring on some discussion.

Mr. WARREN. I will drop the matter now and simply give notice that I shall try to obtain consideration of this report at an early date, as the bill is a long one, and a good deal of work will be involved in the enrolling, and so forth.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15935) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, we are witnessing to-day more of the tragedy of Republican recklessness and incompetency. Last week the Republicans in this Chamber struck down an appropriation of $100,000,000 for carrying on the work of public-roads building in 43 States of the Union. That great constructive measure, stricken down, lies dead in this body at the hands of the Republican Party. To-day that party places its withering, blighting touch upon the great river and harbor projects of the country. These projects affect very vitally 105,000,000 people. The Government's engineers estimated that $57,000,000 were necessary to carry on this river and harbor work, and yet the committee, under the leadership of the Senator from Washington, its chairman, comes in here with about one-fourth of that amount—$15,000,000—just a little more than one-fourth of the amount necessary to do this work.

Mr. President, nobody charges that projects now under construction and some nearing completion are worthless, are not needed, or that the money is being wasted or extravagantly expended. A Member of the House from North Carolina, Mr. SMALL, former chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, submitted a substitute for the House bill which is before us to-day, and in his speech he challenged the opponents of real river and harbor improvement to point out a single item in his substitute that was not a worthy one, and nobody accepted the challenge.

What do you suppose, Senators, that the people at home will think of your work of destruction which strikes down river and harbor improvement in the United States? Why, the city of Berlin spent more money during the war for river and harbor projects than you permit the great Government of the United States to spend on all of her lines of water transportation.

Poor old cheese-paring, parsimonious Republican Party! You waste millions in useless expenditures and become economical when it comes to doing something of a substantial nature for the mass of the American people. You killed an appropriation that provided for building a great system of public roads leading from farm to factory and from rural districts to the towns and market places, and now, I repeat, you refuse to provide money sufficient to go on with the program of river and harbor improvement.

Floods may come, channels may fill up, but the Republican Party, under your leadership, refuses to provide the money necessary to meet such an emergency or to carry on the necessary work on river and harbor projects.

Mr. President, Congress in 1917, as was pointed out in the House by Representative McDUFFIE, of the Mobile district, pledged itself to construct a 30-foot channel at the port of Mobile, and here we are in 1921 and that work has not yet been completed. The transportation demands upon this port are increasing by leaps and bounds and the channel there must be made deep enough to carry the big seagoing vessels that seek this important port. This Mobile channel is part and parcel of the great waterway system of the country and I want to see Congress carry out its promise regarding it. What people and what interests do Republican Senators serve who advocate a do-nothing policy with regard to our rivers and harbors?

The Republican Party used to boast that it was a constructive party, but unless its Members here change their course it must be written down as a "destructive party." At the present time everything that it lays its hands upon seems to wither and die. Road construction in the rural districts, the market roads of the farmer—the connecting link between town and country—all this is stricken down.

Mr. President, it is fortunate that we have a great tribunal out yonder to which we can appeal and there is no way to keep us from carrying our cause to the judgment bar of the people. I have seen the Republican Party before its recent victory carry the country by a tremendous majority. I saw your candidate, Mr. Taft, elected in 1908 by a million majority, and four years later go out by unanimous consent. I saw you in that same year of 1908 carry the House and Senate, and in 1910 I saw the Democratic Party carry the House when only two years had elapsed since you recorded your great victory under the leadership of Mr. Taft. In the election of 1912 we carried the Senate and elected a Democratic President, and if you keep on the unwise and un-American way that you have started of opposing every constructive measure we will carry the House in the next congressional election and pluck some of your Members from this end of the Capitol.

From what I have seen here to-day I am convinced that you are prepared to place down by the mangled form of the defeated good-roads measure, the bruised and broken body of defeated river and harbor improvement legislation in the United States.

Great constructive measures are necessary. The business of the people must go on. But one by one, I am sorry to say, these great constructive measures receive a body blow at the hands of the Republican Party, and, Mr. President, the work of destruction goes swiftly on. When will this measly, parsimonious, cheeseparing, and miserable performance against the public good cease in the Congress of the United States?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I am always very much interested in the remarks of the Senator who has just taken his seat. I voted against the $100,000,000 appropriation for improving the roads because the Department of Agriculture, charged with the responsibility for that work, have all the money they can fairly use for the next 12 months for that purpose.

I voted against it also because in many of the States of the country we have paid our own money for good-road purposes. My own State has spent several hundred million dollars during the past 10 years. Some of us have felt that the time has arrived when a few of the States in the country which contribute most in Federal taxes should make protest against the expenditure of money for purposes for which the States themselves should bear the burden. New York last year paid more taxes into the Treasury of the United States than 38 States of the Union put together. While we are very glad to contribute a little to the improvement of roads in the Senator's State and to give our good share toward the expenses of the Government, we have felt that now was the time when the Nation was facing a deficit and to refrain from spending more than was absolutely necessary.

I represent the State which has the greatest harbor in the Nation, out of which harbor goes approximately 50 per cent of our foreign commerce. I propose to vote against the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] because I believe, in view of the fact that we had on the 1st of January last the sum of $40,000,000 unexpended balance in the river and harbor fund, that the amount called for in the bill is ample to meet the needs for river and harbor improvement this year in the ports of the country that require immediate attention.

The Senator referred to the harbor at Mobile, which I agree ought to be taken care of. Nothing should be left undone to provide for it. The Senator also referred to the filling in of some of the channels in the rivers and bays of the country. Perhaps it might be a good thing if some of them did fill up, if the drift from the hillsides and the tides in and out could close the channels and the Government thereby be prevented from contributing more to their improvement. I refer, of course, to many of the out-of-the-way places in the country upon which millions of dollars have been spent with little or no advantage to commerce.

I am strongly in favor of the proper development of our great harbors and our great rivers, but while I have at times voted for the improvement of useless rivers and creeks because in no other way could I obtain funds for the improvement of the important ones, I think the time has come for us to make lump-sum appropriations as we have in the pending bill, so that the engineering department of the Government may devote the people's money to the places where it will be really effective.

I shall insist that early next session a comprehensive measure be prepared which will provide authority for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the United States actually required to further the country's commerce. I have discussed this matter with many Members of the House and of the Senate Committee on Commerce, of which I am a member, and all agree that this shall be done.

For the harbor of New York we need legislation authorizing several definite improvements. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] has spoken of the development of the Kill Van Kull and of Newark Bay, and of the streams and bays adjoining the port of New York in his State, all of which are necessary. There are improvements of pressing importance in my own State in waters adjacent to the harbor that must be authorized, one of which is the widening and deepening of the channel of Jamaica Bay, but I shall join with the Senator from New Jersey and do all I can to help the matters he advocates for we have one great common port of New York that ought to be improved as one great entity.

There is another matter, and I address myself now particularly to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, to which he and the other members of that committee must give attention. I refer to the rates charged to-day by the Shipping Board for carrying freight up and down our coast. I discovered in our inquiry into the coal business last summer and fall, that it cost more to carry coal from Baltimore and Newport News to New York and New England by water than by rail. We have departed from the old method of carrying our coal from those ports to New York and New England because the rail rate is cheaper. If we are going to spend vast sums of money for the improvement of our rivers and harbors along the coast, we ought to know before we do it whether we can carry our freight on shipboard as cheaply as we can by rail. In the consideration of the development of our coast and harbors we must investigate this particular phase of the situation and see to it that the money expended for river and harbor improvement is not spent in vain.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator refers to coastwise shipping?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Shipping Board has full authority over rates and regulates them and controls them and raises or lowers them. It does not need any further legislation by Congress. It is a matter of administration.

Mr. CALDER. That is true; but last fall, when we were having difficulty in obtaining coal in New York and New England, I appealed to the Shipping Board to lower freight rates on the Shipping Board's idle vessels lying at Newport News so we might relieve the railroad difficulties and carry much of the coal by water, as had been done before the war.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator have in mind that Congress should fix the rates?

Mr. CALDER. No; but I think it is the business of the Committee on Commerce to inquire thoroughly into that phase of our Shipping Board business before we go into the expenditure of vast sums of money for further river and harbor improvements.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, may I say just a word in reply to the Senator from New York? He complains that the freight rates are higher on the waterways than on the railways.

The Senator does know, I am sure, that the fact that there is competition between these two lines of transportation makes the freight rates cheaper on the railway than they would be in the absence of the waterway. The purpose and the object he should have in mind is to have transportation by rail and by waterway both, so that in competition with each other we will get the best possible rates. I am sure that we must have low rates on the railroads, otherwise the waterways would get the traffic if the railroads did not make a cheaper rate than the waterways.

Mr. CALDER. Last summer we had our freight rates doubled on the railroads. I do not see how that justifies the Senator's statement.

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not hear the Senator's statement.

Mr. CALDER. I said that last year the Interstate Commerce Commission almost doubled our rail rates, and with increased rail rates it was still possible to ship coal from the mines to New England by rail cheaper than from Newport News by water.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does not the Senator think the rate that now obtains by rail is cheaper than it would be if they did not have any way to ship the coal by water at all?

Mr. CALDER. Ordinarily it would, but in fixing the water rate the Shipping Board has evidently considered as the leading factor the cost of the vessel, which is almost three times what they could be built for to-day, so that while rail rates have nearly doubled water rates have until very recently been three times what they were before the war.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course this controversy about railroad rates is quite interesting. We have found that the rates were increased after the legislation enacted by Congress some time ago. The railroads have always, of course, fought river improvements, because the rivers are the natural competitors of the railroads.

I would not say anything more in connection with the pending legislation if it were not for some of the speeches that have been made to-day. I had thought that the members of the committee had agreed to $15,000,000 in the bill as passed by the House on the theory that it was impossible to pass any legislation increasing that amount, but I find that some of the Senators, members of that committee, who have always been advocates of reasonable and adequate and appropriate appropriations for river and harbor improvement, are defending the amount contained in the bill. I know not why they take that stand; certainly not from anything that came from the War Department; certainly nothing that Gen. Taylor, representing the Board of Army Engineers, stated before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House or the Committee on Commerce of the Senate; certainly nothing contained in the letter that came in answer to the questions propounded to Gen. Beach, chairman of the Board of Army Engineers, by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce. To defend $15,000,000 as adequate can not be borne out by anything contained in the record.

I need only cite that to Senators before we vote upon the proposition. Do not be misled. Do not misconstrue the facts, because no one back home will be fooled by that kind of argument. The Senate is told in plain and simple language that no improvement work can be entered upon by the department on the rivers and harbors of the country if the amount of $15,000,000 is not increased. You can not, upon the record and the facts presented to us, go back to your constituents and tell them that any improvement at all can be made, that only maintenance can be carried on with the appropriation of $15,000,000.

I should like to read as a part of my remarks the testimony of Gen. Taylor before the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors, just one and a half pages, to show what he said about the Ohio River project, wherein he stated, which is a fact that is not controverted, that it would delay progress of the work upon the Ohio River for two years if the appropriation of merely $15,000,000 is made. However, I shall not delay the Senate further on that point.

Let us not try to mislead anyone. When you go back to Pennsylvania, to Philadelphia, when we go back to Washington, when you go back to Detroit, to Louisiana, to Florida, to New York, remember that your constituents will know, because they ought to know, that Gen. Beach said in a letter dated February 5, 1921, in response to questions from the chairman of the committee:

> I can not too strongly urge upon you the necessity for pushing work on certain of the improvements, particularly channels in New York Harbor, Delaware River, etc.

The river upon which the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has so long advocated improvement, a great carrier of commerce. Gen. Beach mentioned specifically the Delaware River, Philadelphia to the sea, Savannah Harbor, Ga., Jacksonville, Fla., Mobile, Ala., the pass at the mouth of the Mississippi River, Los Angeles, Calif., Columbia River, Oreg. and Wash., Grays Harbor, Wash., and the ship channel of the Great Lakes, Duluth to Buffalo. He said that improvement can not go on based on the proposition of a $15,000,000 appropriation. If that is controverted by a single member of the Committee on Commerce I should like to have him rise and controvert the proposition, because I wish to be put right if I am wrong. Those Senators are most of them present now, so I take it I am right in the assertion. When I vote on the matter, and the proposition which I have advanced, of $33,000,000 as the amount that is necessary to carry on the work, is voted down and we give only $15,000,000 to them, then do not attempt to mislead your constitutents by pretending to them that you helped them out in this emergency.

These are the facts. Vote on the proposition, cripple the improvement if you desire to vote down my amendment, but your constitutents will know what you are doing when you do it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made on the previous call, I vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], which I transfer to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WATSON (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote, in the absence of my pair, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. KNOX. In the absence of the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], with whom I have a pair, being unable to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. PENROSE (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has not voted. As I have a general pair with that Senator, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HARRISON. May I state that the senior Senator from Mississippi would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. PENROSE. I take that for granted, because during a long service in the Senate I think we have never voted on the same side.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; and

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—18.

Beckham	McKellar	Shields	Trammell
Harris	Pittman	Smith, Ga.	Underwood
Harrison	Reed	Spencer	Walsh, Mass.

So Mr. HARRISON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to offer the same amendment, with the amount reduced to $28,000,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 4, strike out "$15,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$28,000,000."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to say just a word about the amendment. It was my misfortune to be out of the city during this debate, as I was obliged to be, and I have not heard the discussion.

There is nothing, in my judgment, that is so great a mistake as to refuse to appropriate enough money to carry on the various plans for the internal improvement of our country. I have frequently had occasion, in discussing questions of similar import, to say to the Senate that money expended in this manner, if properly expended, is in the nature of an investment and not in the nature of an expense.

When we pave a street in Washington and get the vehicles out of the mud and make it possible for people to travel, while the street costs some money, the town is a good deal better off with the debt and the pavement than it would be with neither the debt nor the pavement. The city has actually increased its assets by making the expenditure. When a man shoes his team of horses so that they can travel over a road, it is true that he has spent a little money, but he has saved his horses or made it possible to get to town when otherwise he would not be able to reach it.

When this country improves its rivers and harbors it is not spending money; it is investing money. We are asking in this bill an appropriation for all of the vast river and harbor projects, which concern the whole country, which would not build and equip more than about one-half a modern battleship. Gentlemen have voted against the amendment which was just defeated, which proposed to raise the amount of money to $33,000,000, who only a few weeks ago voted for an Army of 300,000 men, costing a sum of money so much greater than the amount asked for these internal improvements that there can not be any comparison made between the amounts. The same gentlemen voted only a few days ago for an Army of 150,000 or an Army of 175,000.

Every dollar that is spent for an Army is that much money used up. It is gone forever, except as the Army may be necessary in order to protect the country. The money once spent is gone. The money that you expend for the internal improvement of your land is not gone; it is invested. It pays back its interest and pays back its principal frequently many times over.

This is a very poor time for our country to be refusing to make proper appropriations to carry on the internal development of this land. We appropriated $100,000,000 a little while ago to help suffering people in Europe, and indirectly, if not directly, a large part of it went for the purpose of carrying on war in Europe. In going over some accounts the other day I found that since the armistice we allocated to France $68,000,000 to pay a debt of France to Great Britain. It was discovered afterwards that we had been overgenerous; that they did not need more than approximately $30,000,000, as I now remember the figures; but that amount was taken of good American dollars to pay the French debt to Great Britain. Nobody is disturbed about it; everything is serene and lovely. You can not even create a ripple of interest in the Senate over it or attract the general attention of the country.

We had some $59,000,000 of our money in a bank of this country that had been turned over to a Russian government that fell, and after that government had fallen, when there was not the shadow of it left except an ambassador, for a defunct government that really was stillborn, that money has nearly all been permitted to be paid out, upon some kind of a theory that we were in some way morally obligated to pay debts that were contracted after the last shot had been fired upon the Argonne. All these things and multitudes more go on, and blissfully and serenely we sit and allow them to go on.

We allocated to Liberia $5,000,000, to a country that does not even rise to the dignity of a comic opera country—a country that is so far removed from being anything like a real country that it took $26,000 of that money to pay the fares of the delegates of that alleged country to the peace conference at Paris and to entertain the dusky representatives of that African land to pay their board and lodgings.

We have not been able as yet to discover what obligations have been incurred against it, but we were informed the other day that the State Department had made some kind of a commitment against that money.

For what purpose were we setting this money aside in the first instance? It appears that in 1912 four New York banks concluded it would be good business for them to go down to Liberia, loan $1,700,000 upon the bonds of that Government, and take a mortgage upon its revenues as security. Some English concern did something of a similar character. When the war was started it was proposed as a part of the beneficence that was to be doled out by us that we would take these debts over by loaning to Liberia the necessary amount of money with which to discharge them. So we stand here shoveling the taxpayers' dollars out to foreign countries with a scoop shovel.

However, when we come to do anything for our own country that will make transportation better, that will benefit every man, woman, and child in the land, directly or indirectly, we produce a pair of apothecary's scales and we weigh it out as though it were pearls of great price that could not in any way be parted with without bringing ruin to the country. Mr. President, it is the old story of saving at the spigot and wasting at the bunghole, except that in this case we have opened the bunghole for the benefit of Europe and are applying the spigot to our own country.

I appeal to Senators who want to make a record for a party and who want to practice economy, to have some regard for the fact that the United States ought to be considered for a little while, and that we ought to think about the development of this country more solemnly to-day than we have ever thought about it in the past.

We are confronted by a situation where our railroads are incapable of carrying the peak loads when they come upon us; we are confronted by a situation that great unemployment has come to this land, and that condition may exist for some months in the future. At a time like that we ought to endeavor to take up a little of the slack, or, perhaps, I had better say, absorb a little of the surplus by providing liberally for carrying on the public works of this land.

So, Mr. President, I have ventured to ask the Senate for another vote upon this matter. If we do not provide for making those improvements to-day they certainly will have to be made in the not distant future. Every day's delay means that the work already constructed and the plans already partially carried out will come to destruction and disintegration or will suffer waste.

This is not the way to save the taxpayers' money. I am as much in favor of economy in this Government as any man, I think, ought to be; but the trouble is you are saving, to use an illustration that I used the other day, a few dollars in putting a roof on a house and letting the house go to destruction; you are saving a little in a business enterprise by refusing to spend a little money to carry it on to success, but you are losing because you do not spend the money. If I could have my way, Mr. President, I say unhesitatingly that I would, if necessary, bond this country, and I would harness every great stream and stop it breaking over its banks and destroying crops and property of incalculable value; I would clear out of the harbors of this country every dangerous obstruction and open them to the free commerce of the world; I would develop the arid lands of the West, awaken them from their eternal condition of uselessness, and make them, instead of the habitat of prairie dogs and owls, the homes of American citizens, who would in return produce inestimable wealth for the land; I would reclaim the swamp and overflowed lands of this country and give them to agriculture. That policy will some day be adopted by some party with vision enough to glimpse the future and with courage enough to face the situation.

Mr. President, I thank the Senate, and I apologize for taking even this much of its time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I sympathize with very much if not all of the argument of the Senator from Missouri; but, for reasons that have already been brought out this afternoon, I hope the Senate will reject the pending amendment.

Mr. REED. I should like to know what good reason can be brought out. That is a very conclusive argument that we have just heard—"for reasons already stated." I do not expect the Senator to repeat them, but what reason is there for refusing to appropriate enough money to carry on the public works of this country?

Mr. JONES of Washington. We have spent all afternoon discussing those reasons, and I can not now repeat them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I should like to have a roll call if we can get it.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Making the same transfer of my pair that I made on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I inquire if the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed he has not voted.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have a pair with that Senator, and accordingly withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR. Making the same announcement with regard to my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS. I understand that if my pair were present he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to do so. I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have a pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence, I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], who is absent. I understand he would vote as I have voted. I will therefore let my vote stand.

Mr. OWEN. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—16.

Harris	Pittman	Shields	Swanson
Harrison	Reed	Smith, Ga.	Trammell
Heflin	Robinson	Spencer	Underwood
McKellar	Sheppard	Sutherland	Walsh, Mass.

So Mr. REED's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have an amendment that I desire to offer at the instance of my colleague, the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I understand that it is the mandate of the Commerce Committee that no amendment of any kind shall be accepted, no matter how meritorious it may be. I offer this amendment at the end of the bill as now constituted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made of the Yazoo River, Miss., with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1917.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi on behalf of his colleague.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to offer another amendment at the instance of my colleague, the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 9, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 2. That Lake George, in Yazoo County, in the State of Mississippi, be, and the same is hereby, declared to be a nonnavigable stream within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the United States, and jurisdiction over said lake is hereby declared to be vested in the State of Mississippi.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I will say to the two Senators from Mississippi that if they will ask the Committee on Commerce to report this as a separate bill we will do it instanter, but we do not want to put it on this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi on behalf of his colleague.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 16100, the fortifications appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16100) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

THE COAL SITUATION.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to announce that owing to an error in the print of Senate bill 4828, reported from the Committee on Manufactures, it has been found necessary to make a reprint of the bill, which will be made and placed on the desks of Senators in the morning.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if that is the coal bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is the coal bill.

Mr. REED. When did the committee meet to consider it?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It has met on a number of days. It reported the bill yesterday.

Mr. REED. I have had no notice of the meetings of this committee since we stopped taking evidence, and I had no knowledge——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will state that a written notice has been sent to the Senator of every meeting that has been held.

Mr. REED. I had no knowledge that any conferences were being held on it. I do not know what the report is, although I sat with the committee for some weeks and gave very close attention to the taking of the evidence. I had supposed that there would be a consultation in regard to the bill, and that those who had taken an interest in it would at least have an opportunity to express themselves with regard to it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have been, unfortunately, unable to attend the meetings of the Committee on Manufactures, of which I am a member; but the Senator from Wisconsin spoke to me especially about the meetings for conference on the bill and I received notices. I am very sorry that the Senator from Missouri did not.

Mr. REED. When were the conferences held?

Mr. LODGE. I understood they were held in the committee room.

Mr. REED. I say, when?

Mr. LODGE. I got my notices in the morning, as usual.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The meetings of the committee have been called regularly on four or five different occasions since the hearings were closed for the taking of testimony, and every member of the committee has been sent those notices of the meetings of the committee at least a day in advance.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in the face of that statement I am not going to say that a notice was not sent to my office.

It might have come there and I might not have seen it. I had no intimation that the committee was meeting to consider this bill after the hearings had closed, except that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], I believe, said to me on day before yesterday that he understood the bill was being rewritten. I assumed that the chairman of the committee probably was rewriting the bill in order to have a draft that would be satisfactory to him, and that those of us who had so long and patiently worked on this matter would be called in for conference.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I certainly endeavored to secure the attendance of every member of the committee day after day. We had repeated meetings of the committee without a quorum being present.

Mr. REED. The Senator had no difficulty in finding me when the hearings were going on and telling me by word of mouth to "Come on up to the room; we want to take some more evidence."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator was called into the meetings while the meetings were on just as other Senators were, by written notice. If I chanced to meet him, of course——

Mr. REED. I have had no notice since.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say that I did go after the Senator a number of times to get him to come and attend upon the hearings, because of the fact that we had no quorum; but the Senator surely understood that it was the purpose of the committee to report out the bill at this session, and if he will inquire at his office he will surely find that he has received three or four or five notices of meetings since he has attended.

Mr. REED. I distinctly understood—of course, I may have been in error in my understanding—from the conferences and talks that we had when the taking of evidence was about to be concluded, that the bill in its then form was not supposed to be satisfactory to any member of the committee. I remember mentioning to the Senator that we ought to get together and take at least a day or two days to go over it and see if ground could be worked out that would be agreeable. I got busy with other things, and I had not any idea that the bill would be reported in without that kind of a conference.

Mr. President, there may be some who think they are going to gain time by this sort of proceeding. I intend to have the opportunity to examine this bill, and I intend to have the opportunity to write a report and present it to the Senate somehow between now and the day of adjournment. I have no objection to the bill going back to be reprinted, but I do think the chairman of the committee ought to have given me an opportunity to consult about it. His ideas and mine may not be at variance. I do not know.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have not asked to have the bill returned to the committee, nor do I purpose to ask to have it returned to the committee. I simply have given notice that a reprint of the bill will be made to correct an error——

Mr. REED. I could not hear what the Senator said.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And that reprint will be on the desks of Senators in the morning. The report has been on the desks all day to-day.

I only want to say, Mr. President, that I am sure every associate of mine upon the committee will bear me out in saying that every member of the committee has had opportunity to attend the sessions of the committee, and that I have struggled in every way to secure attendance. It has been a very discouraging proceeding, because of the pressure of business at the close of the session.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think the Senator from Missouri will find upon investigation that he unquestionably has been notified of the meetings.

I personally have been in the same position that the Senator from Missouri is in. I have not been present during the conferences for the purpose of drafting the bill that has been reported, being away from the city; but upon my return to Washington I found in the mail notices of several meetings to be held in my absence.

I think I ought to say, too, that I do not know of any committee of which I have been a member in the Senate that has been more regular in giving written notices in advance of the hour and time of hearings than the Committee on Manufactures. Though I have not been present at any of the meetings that have led to the reporting of the bill, yet it was my own fault, and not the fault of the committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am not going to charge anyone with any bad faith, much less the Senator from Wisconsin, whose friend I have been ever since I knew him in the Senate, and I do not intend to let any misunderstanding of this kind interfere with that friendship.

The bill was brought forward at a time when other matters were crowding upon the attention of Senators. It was perfectly proper for the Senator, who is chairman of the committee, to call his meetings and endeavor to secure an investigation and to get as early a report as was practicable. I felt in perfect harmony with that sentiment, and accordingly I laid aside all my other work that I could lay aside and I attended the meetings of the committee with greater regularity than any other member of the committee except the chairman himself. I gave to it the best part of three weeks. On two or three occasions we had very important matters before the Committee on the Judiciary, which were of an emergency character, and I was obliged to be there. I put in all of the day Monday upon those hearings. Tuesday I was obliged to leave the city on an important matter, and I returned only about half an hour ago.

Notices may have come to me at my office. I have not had an opportunity to read my mail. Here was a matter in which I had taken a profound interest and in which I hoped that my labors contributed a little toward the elucidation of a somewhat mixed question.

I do not think all of the testimony has yet been printed, although it was taken, of course, at great expense. I thought we would have that evidence printed in the usual way, that the committee would sit down and go over it and try to make a finding of fact in regard to the coal situation which would throw some light on it to the country and we would get away from wild statements, made, perhaps, in the best of faith, but which nevertheless are not the kind of statements of fact on which the country ought to rely.

I have been in the city with the exception of the two days I have mentioned. I thought we were going to sit down and go over the bill, that we were going to have the evidence before us, and that we were going to try to produce a result that would represent the consensus of opinion of the members of the committee; that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who has given to the bill very considerable attention and contributed a great deal in the hearings, although, as he has stated, he could not be there all the time, would be called into those conferences, with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] and the other members of the committee.

I wish time to make a report that will express my views in regard to the coal situation, and I hope to have the concurrence of other members of the committee, or I hope to concur in some of their views as they may possibly in mine.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for five days' time in which to make a report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri has made it perfectly plain to the Senate why he received no notices during the last two days of the meetings of the committee. It was because he was absent from the city. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] was also absent from the city, which is the reason why he did not meet with the committee.

The conferences of which the Senator from Missouri speaks were held in so far as members would respond to the call of a written notice and attend upon the meetings. Even when it was impossible to get a quorum in attendance, some of the members were willing to go over the bill and put in some time upon it, but of course no action was taken in the absence of a quorum.

The hearings began immediately after the bill was sent to the committee. It was introduced on the 12th of January. It was believed by members of the committee that it would be possible to complete the hearings in a very few days, for the reason that the same committee had had extended hearings upon the subject of coal extending over a period of something like a year or more, during which three volumes of printed testimony was taken, which volumes were before the committee and were taken into account at the first meeting of the committee upon this bill and were made a part of the record which would be considered by the committee.

Furthermore, the special committee known as the committee on reconstruction and production had been taking testimony upon the subject and had printed a volume of testimony which was laid before members of the committee at the first meeting of the Committee on Manufactures. It was expected by all members of the committee who attended the first meeting, and we had a quorum then, that it would be possible to conclude the hearings within three or four days, in view of the extended investigations that had been made of the subject not only by that committee but by the Calder committee. The subject seemed a very urgent one, calling for legislation. A motion was made at the first meeting of the committee that the hearings should be concluded at the end of three days. At the end of that time, however, a large number of interested parties had appeared and asked for more time, and the hearings were reopened and we went on with the work.

Every member of the committee will acquiesce in all that the Senator from Missouri has said about his attendance upon the committee. He was very attentive, indeed. He was there at every session and took a very active part in the examination of witnesses and a large amount of testimony was taken. In order to expedite the work and insure, if possible, a report of the bill in such time as to give the Senate an opportunity to consider it at this session, night sessions of the committee were held, I think three or four different evenings until 11 or 12 o'clock. I felt and I know that other members of the committee felt that the bill should be reported.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to say that the hearings will show that the Senator from Missouri very early in the hearings, when witnesses were on the stand representing coal producers, in the course of his examination of them in calling for facts with regard to production cost and margins and everything pertaining to the business, stated again and again that he was in favor of full information with respect to the business; that he thought the people of the country were entitled to all the information that would enable them to know whether or not they were being charged too high a price for coal or whether coal was being furnished as it ought to be furnished to them in quality and quantity.

In the meetings of the committee that were held after the hearings were closed the committee adopted just exactly that view with respect to the bill. They struck out all provisions of it which pertained to price fixing or investing the President with power to take over the production of coal in the event of an emergency, and they struck out all the licensing provisions of the bill, and made it purely a fact-finding bill. It is that and it is nothing more.

I discovered this afternoon that one paragraph which went beyond that had inadvertently been printed in the bill. It had been marked out in a number of copies which the members of the committee had been using, but in some way or other a copy in which that provision had not been marked out was sent to the printer. Therefore I have asked for a report. It is a provision that clothed or sought to clothe the Federal Trade Commission with authority to make an investigation to determine whether or not individuals were profiteering, and to publish their names or make them public.

It was felt that that was a provision which, whatever might be thought about it properly having a place in a bill affecting the coal business, ought not to have a place in this bill, and it was stricken out by the committee but printed by error. It is to eliminate that error and two or three verbal errors which I found that the reprint is being made. I am confident when the Senator from Missouri has looked over the report and looked over the bill that he will find it is strictly in accord with the statement that he repeatedly made during the hearings, as to the sort of legislation that he thought ought to be enacted.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that is very cheering. The committee got around to my view. I am sure they were progressing in the right direction. The more of the bill they strike out, probably, the more they will improve it. But I had not seen it. It has just been handed to me by a page this minute. I thought I was entitled to see the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The bill has been on the Senator's desk all day. If he had been here, he would have seen it. It was laid upon the desks of all Senators this morning; and if the Senator had been in the city he would have had an opportunity to attend the meetings of the committee when the bill was considered and reported.

Mr. REED. Technically I have had notice. I have had technical notice many times to be at court, too; but I always, when I knew there was a man on the other side intensely interested in the case, sent him some special word that he had better get down.

What I am complaining about is this—I could not get mad at the Senator from Wisconsin if I tried, and I am not going to do so on this occasion—but I had in mind this thing, and I think it ought to be done. There has been more misrepresentation made to the people of the country in regard to the coal situation than I know of in regard to any other situation.

I think this committee came very near disclosing the facts. I think those facts ought to be stated to the country by the committee and laid before the Senate; and I think, if they are, it will save a great deal of work in the future and will be a genuine public service.

The Senator says there have been long investigations. It happens that I was the chairman at least a part of the time of the subcommittee which investigated this question two years ago. There was a change in the organization of the Senate while that was going on, and Senator Vardaman succeeded me as chairman of the subcommittee, but I was still on it. We investigated the anthracite-coal situation as it then existed. We did not examine into the bituminous-coal situation, and the anthracite coal represents something like 10 per cent of the total production. We never touched the bituminous-coal situation. I do not know what the committee of which Senator CALDER was the distinguished chairman was investigating. I could not understand whether their evidence had been incorporated by our committee or not. It seemed it was in part of the time and out part of the time. But that committee was investigating lumber and brick and mortar and labor conditions and combinations and every sort of thing. It traveled over the country a good deal. They had an attorney learned in the law and in matters legislative with them. We had the benefit of his presence while we were conducting the negotiations and occasionally a wise suggestion from him, which was all on one side of the case, as far as I observed.

I do not know what the Calder committee found out. I know that this committee had a meeting when I was home ill, and when I returned they had resolved to end their hearings at the close of the third day; but, as the Senator from Wisconsin said, they found out at the end of the third day that they had not really gone fully into the question. So the hearings were continued. Many witnesses were called. Some came. We examined a good many questions which might not have been pertinent to this inquiry, for it constantly had a tendency to block it.

I think we gave a day and a half, finally, or nearly that, to Mr. Gompers, who put in a very interesting and very able review of the legislation relating to trusts and combinations. We did not seem to be in much of a hurry toward the end. I thought we had arrived at a state of mind where we had found out that it was not wise to be in too great a hurry.

There was a phase of this bill which seemed to me all the time to be of merit, and that was the one regarding the publicity of the facts relating to the coal business, the prices, the production, and all the other facts necessary to enable the public to judge what is the state of the business. The Senator tells me that is all that is left of the bill. Nevertheless, there ought to be something in the report. I have not had a chance to look at the report. It may contain all these facts, but I would like to have time to consider it, and I would like to have the privilege of filing a minority report if I see fit.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the Senator should have that privilege. I think he has it anyhow, without leave being granted.

Mr. REED. I think I would have had before the report was filed, but I do not think I have now unless I get permission.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I certainly think the Senator has a right to file a report without the consent of the Senate or anybody else. I sincerely hope that he will file his report at a very early date, and I am sure he will when he has examined the bill and sees the scope of it.

Mr. REED. The evidence is in print?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The evidence is in print, but it is not in bound form yet.

Mr. REED. It is in galley proof?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It will all be accessible to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I find it somewhat difficult to make reference to testimony from a galley proof.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. A mass of testimony has been taken, Mr. President. Probably one-half of it, perhaps two-thirds of it, will not be found very useful to anybody who wants to study the coal proposition. As is known, the testimony before committees in such investigations always takes a very wide range. This testimony is related to the coal business, coal production, the coal industry, and involves in some measure the transportation question, and a number of other questions which arise in the consideration of the production and distribution of coal.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if I have that permission by unanimous consent, that is all I am asking now. The question of the merits of the bill will come up later.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I trust the Senator will not ask to have five days, and will not take any such time as that, because that would mean that we would not be able to consider the bill at this session. With the price of bituminous coal, all out through the West, anyhow, ranging anywhere from $12 to $15 a ton at the present time, as shown by inquiries recently made, it seems to me we ought to start finding the facts.

There is an urgent reason why the bill should be passed at this session. The coal year, as it is called, begins on the 1st day of April. It is then that contracts are made for coal for the year, where coal is the subject of contract for large users. Furthermore, I think it is about the time when the wage scale is arranged or rearranged. Many of the facts that will be sought in this investigation will be material in making those contracts. Even with the bill limited as it is in its provisions, going no further than it does, I am very hopeful that we shall be able to pass it through the Senate, and that it may yet receive consideration in the House and become a law.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not want to carry on this controversy, but just permit me to say, in reply to what the Senator has just said, that if the prices of coal are excessive in some parts of the country to-day, the collecting of this information can not affect that present situation, because if the bill were to become a law reports would not begin to come in for some considerable time in the future. It would take weeks, perhaps, to create the machinery and to lay out the plan for the making of the reports.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will remind the Senator that the bill provides that existing machinery shall be utilized. No new machinery will have to be created to secure this information.

Mr. REED. I am talking without knowledge of the bill, but I suppose it applies to retail dealers as well as to wholesale dealers. All those men have to be instructed and the plan has to be laid out for their reports, blanks have to be printed, and, no matter how much haste we make, it can not be that a practical result upon the prices of coal is going to come within the next 30 or 40 or 50 or 60 days.

Now, about the labor. The existing labor contracts with the unions, as I remember them, expire in 1922. They do not make a new contract, if I recollect the fact—and if I am wrong, I hope I will be set right—for something like a year from this day. The contracts which are made with the large contractors for coal will be made anyway. They do not rely upon the information that we get. The larger contractor makes his contracts on his own knowledge from year to year. So I do not think there is very much in that argument.

Everyone knows we are going to have an extra session of Congress which will begin about the 4th or 5th of April, and I think there is very little chance for the bill, even in its revised form, to go through at this session. However, I do not intend to put obstructive tactics in the way, because if the bill is limited as the Senator thinks it is, I probably shall be glad to support it.

I am asked to make a report very quickly, if I make one. The evidence is in galley form. It is not yet in volume. It is not yet paged. I could not make a report and refer to the pages of the testimony, because it is not yet in pages. But I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I will make every effort I can to get something in the form of a report, although it will not be nearly as conclusive as I wish to make it, and I shall try to get it inside of the five days, as much inside as I can. We are all pressed for time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Will the Senator from Missouri repeat his request for unanimous consent?

Mr. REED. I ask for five days' time in which to file a minority report. I think there are other Senators who feel as I do. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] is in the Chamber, and he can state his view.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I have no complaint at all with the chairman of the committee about the notification of the meetings. I was present at nearly all the investigation meetings, and I had intended to be present at the final conference in considering the bill. I was unable to be present at one meeting. I had supposed that the full committee would be gotten together, because it seemed to be of sufficient importance to make it necessary to have the entire committee present.

There are some phases of the bill, although it is a much milder one than we considered at first, to which I can not agree; and I, too, feel that it is a very reasonable request that the Senator from Missouri has made. He gave to the consideration of the bill very much of his time, probably five times as much as any other member of the committee, except the chairman, and it seems a reasonable request that he should be permitted to have the evidence printed and go over it before reporting on the measure or subscribing to a report. I think we ought to be permitted to go over the evidence after it is printed, and then I shall join the Senator from Missouri or the chairman of the committee in a report. But it does not appear to me to be quite fair, on a bill so important as this, that it should be rushed through by the chairman of the committee at a speed which seems unnecessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri mean, when he asks for five days within which to submit his views as a minority member of the committee, that no action shall be taken by the Senate upon the bill until he has filed his views?

Mr. REED. That would necessarily be implied. There would be no use in filing a report after action upon the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object. I would not object to a reasonable time, but I think that is an unreasonable time. I think the Senator is familiar with every part of the testimony. Indeed, I think the Senator's questions and statements would constitute a very considerable percentage of the testimony that was taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he is informed by the Assistant Secretary that the usual method of computing time under such an agreement is to make it calendar days, exclusive of Sundays. If Sunday is excluded from the computation, the request would be equivalent to asking for four working days. Objection is made.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There are only five working days remaining of the session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am going to prefer the request in this way: I ask that I may be given five days in which to file a report, with the understanding that if the bill comes up before the five days have expired, my request shall not bar consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is no objection to that request, I assure the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, and it is agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator in charge of the bill that there is reason for giving it consideration. I have read the first section while he has been talking, and the first section expressly puts the coal business under public charge; it puts it in the same class as the railroads. That is a proposition that certainly will evoke some discussion on the floor of the Senate. I do not say that to provoke discussion now; but I am calling attention to the fact that when you come to read a bill from a little different slant or angle than the other man had, you may see things differently.

With regard to the criticism that I have taken time on the bill, let the record speak for itself. I have asked a good many questions in my life, but I have never asked them with so much satisfaction as I did in the hearings on the bill, when the real viewpoint of some of the gentlemen who appeared as experts was disclosed. I will give one illustration, even at the risk of taking a little of this very valuable time.

A gentleman came before us and advocated this bill, which is designed to take charge of the coal mines and fix prices and take charge of the coal dealers and fix prices. He disclosed afterwards in his testimony, under some of the questions that I had the temerity to ask, that he had been an advocate of permitting the coal men to combine in order to raise prices, and that he is now an advocate of the theory that the coal men ought to be permitted to combine in order to raise prices to a proper level under some sort of governmental supervision. He is a very good man, a very fine gentleman; but I do not believe in his theories any more than I believe in the theories of Lenin and Trotski.

So I think we shall have to take enough time to find out what is in the bowels of this measure before we get through with it.

RECESS.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, February 26, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 25, 1921.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., pastor of Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church, Washington D. C., offered the following prayer:

Blessed heavenly Father, by the light of this day Thou hast quickened within us the sense of responsibility. Help us to rise like those who are called by the Master in the morning to do a day's work. Pity those who know the bitterness of affliction and the keenness of mortal pain. When they sigh let Heaven's blessing bring them great peace. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, announced that the Senate had passed bills and resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4889. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish free transportation and subsistence from Europe to the United States for certain destitute discharged soldiers and their wives and children;

S. 4859. An act for the relief of certain ex-service men whose rights to make entries on the North Platte irrigation project, Nebraska-Wyoming, were defeated by intervening claims;

S. J. Res. 238. Joint resolution authorizing the President to require the United States Sugar Equalization Board to take over and dispose of 13,902 tons of sugar imported from the Argentine Republic;

S. 4511. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a right of way over certain Government lands to the State of Oregon for the Columbia River Highway;

S. J. Res. 233. Joint resolution giving consent of the Congress of the United States to the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Nebraska, or any two or more of said States, to agree upon the jurisdiction to be exercised by said States over boundary waters between any two or more of said States;

S. 4864. An act to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved October 24, 1914;

S. 4865. An act fixing the taxable status of lands received in exchange for lands formerly embraced in the grants to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. and the Coos Bay Wagon Road Co.;

S. 4159. An act for the relief of dispossessed allotted Indians of the Nisqually Reservation, Wash.;

S. 4352. An act authorizing the Indians residing on or belonging to the Turtle Mountain Reservation, N. Dak., to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes;

S. 4645. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close upper Water Street between Twenty-first and Twenty-second Streets NW.;

S. 4186. An act to authorize the Broadwater Irrigation District, a Montana organization, to construct a dam across the Missouri River;

S. 4421. An act securing rights of way and easements over public lands in connection with Federal irrigation projects;

S. 4900. An act to amend section 5 of the act approved March 2, 1919, entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes;

S. J. Res. 229. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to investigate the claims of private parties to the Mariveles quarry within the limits of the United States military reservation in the Philippine Islands and to permit the working thereof by the persons entitled thereto, provided military necessities permit;

S. 2340. An act to amend the military record of Richard Parke;

S. 4827. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish to the National Museum certain articles of the arms, matériel, equipment, or clothing heretofore issued or produced for the United States Army, and to dispose of colors, standards, and guidons of demobilized organizations of the United States Army, and for other purposes;

S. 2252. An act making an appropriation to pay the State of Massachusetts for expenses incurred and paid at the request of the President in protecting the harbors and fortifying the coast during the Civil War;

S. 3487. An act for the relief of Clarence L. Reames;

S. 4991. An act for the relief of Kristina Furjak;

S. 4992. An act for the relief of William E. Lewis;

S. 4694. An act for the relief of Samuel H. Dolbear;

S. J. Res. 251. Joint resolution to authorize payment to members of the Army and Navy who were employed as enumerators during the Fourteenth Decennial Census to take the census of persons in the Army and Navy;

S. 3129. An act for the relief of Louisa Frow;

S. 2838. An act for the relief of Philip S. Everest;

S. 5023. An act to provide for the closing of Cedar Road between Quincy Street and Shepherd Street NW., in the District of Columbia;

S. 4554. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to create a Federal Power Commission; to provide for the improvement of navigation; the development of water power; the use of the public lands in relation thereto; and to repeal section 18 of the rivers and harbors appropriation act, approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1920; and

S. 4710. An act to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to dispose of certain trust funds in his possession.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15872) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, had agreed to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 27 and 30.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 10074. An act to enlarge the jurisdiction of the municipal court of the District of Columbia and to regulate appeals from the judgments of said court, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8067. An act to establish standard weights and measures for the District of Columbia; to define the duties of the superintendent of weights, measures, and markets of the District of Columbia; and for other purposes;

H. R. 12045. An act to provide for the conveyance of lots on the low grounds of Washington, D. C.; and

H. R. 13225. An act providing for the allotment of lands within the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, Mont., and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15441) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, had agreed to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 9, 13, 14, and 20.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution:

Senate concurrent resolution 35.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States earnestly calls upon the people of the United States to contribute out of their substance to the humanitarian activities in behalf of the needy of the world.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 1856) for the relief of Arthur J. Burdick.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution and bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 215. Joint resolution authorizing the legal heirs of certain officers of the United States Coast Guard who lost their lives when the Coast Guard cutter Tampa was destroyed in Bristol Channel September 26, 1918, to receive pay and allowances that would have accrued to said officers;

H. R. 11841. An act to amend "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893;

H. R. 15769. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Rio Grande between the cities of Del Rio, Tex., and Las Vacas, Mexico;

H. R. 15662. An act to extend temporarily the time for filing applications for letters patent, for taking actions in the United States Patent Office with respect thereto, for the reviving and reinstatement of applications for letters patent, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13402. An act for the purchase of land occupied by experiment vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif.;

H. R. 9840. An act for the relief of Capt. E. V. Dickson;

H. R. 8647. An act for the relief of the owners of the American schooner William H. Sumner;

H. R. 7573. An act authorizing payment of compensation to Pasquale Dolce for personal injuries;

H. R. 6414. An act for the relief of Herman W. Schallert;

H. R. 2328. An act relating to the title to land to be acquired as a site for a post-office building at Spring Valley, Ill.;

H. R. 1035. An act for the relief of the widow of Joseph C. Akin;

H. R. 646. An act for the relief of Perry E. Borchers because of losses suffered due to destruction of property and termination of contract for services because of smallpox while in the employ of the Navy Department in Cuba;

H. R. 397. An act to authorize a lieu selection by the State of South Dakota for 160 acres on Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, and for other purposes;

H. R. 1430. An act to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Weiser National Forest, Idaho;

H. R. 2946. An act to amend acts to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8535. An act to provide for the redistribution of general taxes and special assessments due and payable on real estate in the District of Columbia in cases of subdivision or sales of land therein;

H. R. 5081. An act for the relief of James E. Adams;

H. R. 9028. An act to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Nez Perce National Forest, Idaho;

H. R. 9702. An act granting certain lands to the city of Sandpoint, Idaho, to protect the watershed of the water-supply system of said city;

H. R. 10434. An act to add certain lands to the Targhee National Forest;

H. R. 10598. An act for the relief of the First National Bank of Sharon, Pa.;

H. R. 11004. An act to grant certain lands to the board of trustees of the village of Downey, State of Idaho, for the protection of its water supply;

H. R. 11307. An act to amend section 5146 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to the qualifications of directors of the National Banking Association;

H. R. 13051. An act to add certain lands to the Lemhi National Forest, Idaho;

H. R. 13592. An act to authorixe certain homestead settlers or entrymen who entered the military or naval service of the United States during the war with Germany to make final proof of their entries;

H. R. 5416. An act to authorize corporations oragnized in the District of Columbia to change their names;

H. R. 567. An act for the relief of John Chick;

H. R. 13319. An act for the relief of Wilson Certain;

H. R. 644. An act for the relief of Oscar Smith;

H. R. 9794. An act for the relief of Wendell Phillips Lodge, No. 365, Knights of Pythias; and

H. J. Res. 465. Joint resolution for the appointment of one member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as follows:

S. 4879. An act to amend section 1 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. L., p. 907), and to extend restrictions against alienation of lands allotted to and inherited by certain Quapaw Indians, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. SCHALL was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Mary A. Sims, H. R. 8286, Sixty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

EVENING RECESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess from 6 o'clock to 8 o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess this evening from 6 o'clock to 8 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. RUCKER. Reserving the right to object, has the gentleman in mind anything that will require the attention of the House to-day?

Mr. MONDELL. We have several conference reports, and we have three contested-election cases. I am not sure that we will take up any of them this evening, but those are matters that must be taken up as soon as possible. The business will be either conference reports or contested-election cases.

Mr. RUCKER. Has the gentleman any information at this time that any Private Calendar bills will be reached to-day?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think so. If anything comes on the Private Calendar, it will be pensions.

Mr. RUCKER. It will not be the Private Calendar that we had up last Saturday?

Mr. MONDELL. No.

Mr. RUCKER. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas makes the point that there is no quorum present. It is apparent that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anthony	Elston	Kraus	Riordan
Ayres	Ferris	Langley	Rowan
Bacharach	Gandy	Lea, Calif.	Rubey
Baer	Gard	Lonergan	Sanders, La.
Bee	Garner	McAndrews	Sanford
Britten	Goodwin, Ark.	McGlennon	Scully
Brumbaugh	Graham, Pa.	McKiniry	Sears
Caldwell	Greene, Vt.	Madden	Small
Cantrill	Hamill	Maher	Steele
Casey	Hamilton	Mann, S. C.	Steenerson
Clark, Mo.	Harreld	Milligan	Stiness
Classon	Hastings	Moon	Sullivan
Copley	Haugen	Mooney	Thomas
Costello	Hawley	Mott	Tinkham
Crowther	Hersman	Mudd	Towner
Curry, Calif.	Hill	Nolan	Vaile
Davey	Hudspeth	Oldfield	Vare
Dent	Husted	Pell	Venable
Donovan	James, Mich.	Perlman	Walters
Doremus	James, Va.	Phelan	Webster
Doughton	Johnson, S. Dak.	Rainey, Ala.	Welling
Dunn	Johnston, N. Y.	Rainey, John W.	Whaley
Eagan	Kahn	Ramsey	Wise
Eagle	Kennedy, Iowa	Randall, Wis.	Yates
Echols	Kettner	Reavis
Edmonds	Kitchin	Reed, N. Y.
Ellsworth	Kleczka	Riddick

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-one Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SIMS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. SIMS. To ask unanimous consent that leave of absence be granted to Judge MOON, my colleague, on account of serious illness, for the remainder of this session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that leave of absence be granted to his colleague [Mr. MOON] for the remainder of this session, on account of serious illness. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is the conference report on the sundry civil bill, amendment No. 60, relating to Muscle Shoals. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has 30 minutes and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] has 30 minutes. The gentleman from Iowa yields 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, those of us who were here last night listening to a discussion of this subject were treated to what I regard as the most remarkable speech I have ever heard delivered on the floor of this House. It conveyed—unintentionally, of course, but nevertheless conveyed—the plain intimation that a great State of this Union was purchasable for the sum of $10,000,000. I resent that intimation in the name of the people of that State.

Mr. SELLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; I can not yield.

Mr. SELLS. The speech made no such impression, and had no such intention.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I know the gentleman had no such intention, but that was the plain intimation that we could not help inferring from that speech.

Mr. SELLS. If the gentleman knows anything about the English language he knows that statement is not true.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course the fact is not true, because I know why the State of Tennessee joined the Republican column in the last election. It was not any question of purchase. It was for an idea, and the idea was and the reason why the State of Tennessee joined the Republican column was to protest against the wanton waste and extravagance of this present administration. [Applause.]

I come from a city, gentlemen, which is commercially one of the great gateways to the South, the city of Cincinnati, the only city in the world that owns a railroad. The people of Cincinnati own the Cincinnati Southern Railway, which connects that city with the market places of the South. It is to our every interest that the South should be developed. It is on the commercial prosperity of the South that our prosperity depends in great part. I will do everything in my power decently to help the South, but I balk at doing it indecently.

I wish I had more time than I have to go into the question of this Muscle Shoals development, but I have talked myself black in the face for 10 years against this outrageous proposed expenditure of the public money. I am not going to speak on my own authority this morning. I am going to cite the authority of one of the greatest chemical experts in this country, particularly with regard to nitrates. I mean Dr. Charles L. Parsons, formerly chief chemist of the Bureau of Mines, and who during the war was the chemical expert, and particularly the nitrate expert, for the War Department.

To use his own words as to his qualifications, Dr. Parsons in his testimony before the subcommittee on this proposition stated:

> I came to Washington in 1911 as chief chemist of the Bureau of Mines, and moved to Washington with my family in 1912. Since, I have handled the Chemical and Mineral Technology Division of the Bureau of Mines, including the building of two plants, one for radium and one for sodium cyanamide, at Saltville, Va. I was selected by Gen. Crozier to look into the nitrogen situation for the War Department in the summer of 1916. At that time I was transferred to the War Department as their chief chemical engineer for a few months and sent to Europe to study the nitrogen situation. I became acquainted with the chief leaders in nitrogen work, a good many of whom I had known before, and visited the plants in Norway, Sweden, England, France, and Italy at that time.

He was also a member of the interdepartmental board which went through the South to fix a location for this proposed nitrate plant.

Now, remember, gentlemen, that this nitrate plant is proposed to be operated to produce nitrates by the cyanamide process. What is the cyanamide process? Is it in use in any of the leading countries of the world? Is it the process for the future? Here is what Dr. Parsons says about the cyanamide process:

> I think there is no question whatever that the future of the fixation of nitrogen, and I might also say the commercial present, lies in the direct synthesis of nitrogen and hydrogen to form ammonia by what is normally known as the Haber process.

In reply to a question of the chairman as to the cyanamide process he says:

> No plants are being erected anywhere, so far as I am aware. In fact, the present plants are stopping their production. I was informed last Friday that in all probability the production of the cyanamide plants in Germany this next year would not be over one-sixth the production of last year, and there is no question—and I think it is quite generally admitted—that the cyanamide process is in a condition of obsolescence, and I do not expect to see it operated in any part of the world to any extent a few years hence.

And he said that the cyanamide process is a thing of the past. Why, if we were to undertake to build this dam and equip this plant the plant would be out of date before it ever produced an ounce of nitrates.

Why was this plant ever sent to Muscle Shoals? Dr. Parsons was a member of the board appointed by the Secretary of War to look over the country and see where a nitrate plant ought to be established. The chairman, my friend the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], asked him—

> Why was it that Muscle Shoals was selected?
> Dr. PARSONS. I do not know.
> The CHAIRMAN. Was it discussed?
> Dr. PARSONS. Oh, yes.
> The CHAIRMAN. Was it the opinion of the Secretaries that that was the place where we should go to manufacture nitrogen?
> Dr. PARSONS. It was my understanding that they were in favor of going to North Chattanooga, Tenn.
> The CHAIRMAN. Why did they not go there?
> Dr. PARSONS. I do not know; but every board that had anything to do with it, so far as I am aware, reported against Muscle Shoals.

The chairman later on asked him:

> The first boards knew that Sheffield had been selected as the site?
> Dr. PARSONS. The boards knew nothing about it at all. Some 10 days after the final meeting of the interdepartmental committee, at which I was present, I was very much surprised to be called up on the telephone by an officer who jokingly asked me if I knew where the plant was to be located. I told him that I thought I knew, and he said, "You don't know as well as I do." And I said, "I think I know better." And he said, "Where is it going?" And I said, "Where do you think? It is going to North Chattanooga." And he said, "It is not; it is going to Muscle Shoals." And I said, "Who sent it there?" He said, "There is no higher authority."

But we are going to have another higher authority in a very few days now. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, I have seen this Muscle Shoals lobby at work for the last 10 years. I have seen them coming into Congress by the front door, and I have seen them coming in by the back door, and the side door, and up the alley. I have seen them come here as a peace proposition and as a war proposition; and as a war proposition I ask you, if water power is necessary to produce nitrogen why was this plant as a war measure put at a place where by no conceivable possibility could an ounce of water power be developed for five years?

The farmers of this country have been entirely bamboozled about this proposition. They have been led to believe that there will be some benefit to them. To quote Dr. Parsons again, he says:

> I am in most hearty sympathy with the desire of the farmer and the War Department to fill the need of the American people for as large an amount of nitrogen and nitrogenous fertilizer as we can possibly make and for obtaining those nitrogenous materials at as low a price as it is possible to make them. I believe, however, that the farmers' organizations are very seriously deceiving themselves as to the outcome of this proposition. To my mind, both from the standpoint of a war reserve and from the standpoint of producing cheap fertilizer for the farmer, nothing worse could be done than to operate this plant at Muscle Shoals.
> The CHAIRMAN. Why?
> Dr. PARSONS. In the first place, they will find that instead of getting increased fertilizers that the plant will have to be continually subsidized from the United States Treasury to keep it going; it will cost considerably more, in my opinion, than the present commercial price of ammonium sulphate. Besides that, it will have a very great retarding effect on the development of the American nitrogen industry. The German plants are owned and operated by private capital. The cyanamide plants and, to a certain extent, I think, the Haber plants during the war were assisted by the German Government, but they are all back now under the nitrogen syndicate, in which, of course, the Government has a voice on the board of directors, but nevertheless they are private institutions. If that plant is operated at Muscle Shoals it will greatly tend to stop the development of the nitrogen industry in this country, which this country greatly needs, the same as all other countries. There is no other country outside of the United States which for a moment thinks of forming an immense Government nitrogen monopoly, to which this would inevitably lead.

Now, it does not make any difference whether they expend $10,000,000 for the dam or $12,500,000 to equip the plant. The two things are the same. They are both entering wedges for the expenditure of one-quarter of a billion dollars of the people's money to furnish cheap water power for a few select individuals. That is all this thing amounts to. [Applause.]

They tell you that you have got to run this plant; that you must not let it die. Let me read from the testimony of the man who built the plant, Col. Wagner. He testified at the hearings:

The plant could be kept in a stand-by condition, and I am perfectly willing to leave that to the unbiased judgment of any board of engineers that goes down there that it could be kept in a good and better condition if kept in a stand-by condition than by being run.

I tell you, gentlemen, there is no excuse for this outrageous expenditure of the public money. Let us not in these closing days of Congress become parties to this conspiracy of pelf. Let us throttle this plunderbund. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, for a number of years I have been interested in agriculture and have personally backed up that industry in a small way. I am not willing to concede that the farmers of this country are entirely gullible, as might be inferred from some of the statements made here.

Another thing: Whenever any good citizen of my country comes to talk to or ask me a question about any project pending in Congress, I have always been willing that he should do so. I am not complaining because these men come here and ask Congress to develop this power. I am for the power, and I should deem it a calamity, just as Col. Cooper, one of the greatest hydroengineers in our land, said, that it would be a national calamity not to develop this power. Would you destroy the power of Niagara Falls if you could. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] said yesterday that this is a bigger power than Niagara Falls on the American side. The whole Tennessee River is involved; it will produce 550,000 horsepower, which is worth $25 a horsepower per annum.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; I can not yield.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I want to correct the gentleman that it is bigger than Niagara Falls.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not for abandoning this project.

The Government has $110,000,000 already spent on this power dam, and the men and machinery and the organization are now working on it.

It will cost when completed $130,000,000.

It will make a power of 550,000 horsepower, and larger than the Niagara on the American side.

Some say it will never be used to make nitrate.

All right.

The farmers need plows, drags, rollers, drills, and automobiles. They need shoes and clothing. Homes need lighting; streets, schools, churches need lighting. It can furnish power for 200 miles both south, east, and west. Industry is waiting and will use every ounce of energy. Buffalo never sees a dark night because of Niagara. This will light and furnish power for Birmingham, Chattanooga, Memphis, and Nashville. Five hundred and fifty thousand horsepower at $25 a horsepower would yield $13,750,000, which would be 10 per cent on $137,000,000, the cost of the dam. It would do the work of an army of men. Look at what Niagara does and this would duplicate that on the American side.

It is said let us wait until we determine on a policy. If any policy is determined upon it is one of harnessing up our water powers and setting them to work. There will always be enough for it to do, and it costs no more running water through the wheels than it does to flow down the stream. By the additional expenditure we harness the great Tennessee River and set it to work.

Some only object because of the condition of the Public Treasury. Very well. I am for protecting that and avoiding waste. If we want to help out the Treasury and the people, let us fund our foreign loan of $10,000,000,000 into bonds and put into the Treasury to be used, sold, or disposed of as will best suit our needs, and the needs of the public. What are we doing about collecting or funding our foreign debt and helping the Treasury? Nothing but taxing the people. Let us help the Treasury out and not commit this great waste in the name of the Treasury.

If it is not paternalism to build the great dams all over the West for irrigation purposes then this is not paternalism. If it is not paternalism to ask $500,000,000 for reclamation projects, then this is not paternalism. Lincoln said he was in favor of internal improvements. Here is one of the best. Whatever benefits one section of the country benefits all. Here we have a power we are told greater than that of Niagara on the American side in the heart of our country. Its energy for industry can be carried 200 miles in every direction. It is of inestimable value, and let us not scrap it.

We spend $40,000,000, or quite that amount for one battleship. In time of peace it is of small value and no revenue. This power plant costing the same to complete, in time of peace will be of immense value, and both battleship and power plant are needed in time of war. I am for the battleship, and I am for the power plant. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON].

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, early in the year 1916 in the preparation of the national defense, or preparedness, act, through the influence of the officials of the War Department and the organization of farmers throughout the country, section 124, known as the nitrate section, was incorporated. It directed the President to locate and build one or more air nitrate plants to be operated by steam or water power, one or both.

After a long and careful investigation through commissions, plant No. 1, using the synthetic process, was located at Sheffield, Ala. It was this small plant that some one recommended should be located at Chattanooga, Tenn. Plant No. 2, using the cyanamide process, was located at Muscle Shoals. They were built for a twofold purpose—for the manufacture of munitions in time of war and to make fertilizer in time of peace. Such was the express direction of Congress. Plant No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, is the largest and best air nitrogen plant in the world. It was finished just as the war ended and was 100 per cent in point of quality and production, as demonstrated by Government tests, and its location was wise and proper. At Muscle Shoals is the greatest water power east of the Mississippi River, except Niagara, and more power is being developed there by the Wilson Dam than at Niagara on the American side.

All the raw material such as limestone rock, coal, coke, and phosphate rock are in close proximity and in inexhaustible quantities; climatic conditions could not be better; within the safety zone recommended by the War Department; in the central part of the country using the greatest quantity of fertilizer; the very best transportation facilities, both by rail and water, to all the markets of the world.

In the face of all of this the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] continues to criticize the location and the cyanamide process. It is strange that he and Dr. Parsons should continue to discredit the cyanamide process in the face of its great success in practically every country in the world, and the further fact that there were 14 cyanamide plants before the war and that there are now 35. Dr. Parsons admits that he is connected with a company which is proposing or undertaking to develop the Haber process.

The operation of the plant at Muscle Shoals is necessary to increase the supply of fertilizer and give the farmers a cheaper and better grade. It is also necessary in order to preserve the plant for war purposes. To put it in a stand-by condition it would rust out and be of little value, besides the cost of guarding and keeping it in repair to preserve it for munition purposes would probably cost a half million dollars a year. Its economic value is dependent upon the dam and the development of the cheap water power. The dam is more than one-third complete. There are more than 4,000 men at work there now pouring nearly 2,000 cubic yards of concrete a day, all of whom will be thrown out of employment in a short time if this appropriation is not made. Seventeen million dollars has been spent on the dam, all of which will be lost if not completed. To close down the work for 12 months would result in a damage to the Government in the sum of $4,500,000. It will develop 550,000 horsepower, 80,000 of which can be used for the operation of the plant to make fertilizer and the balance sold or leased to the public under Government regulations for enough to pay 5 per cent on the cost of the dam and an additional amount sufficient to cover maintenance and operation charges, supplying an area of 60,000 square miles, embracing a part of seven States. Besides, it will remove all obstructions to navigation for 18 miles over the worst part of the Muscle Shoals section of the river. Four million five hundred thousand dollars could be charged off to navigation. Dams Nos. 1 and 3, recommended by the engineers, are navigation dams and are in no way connected with the question now before the House. The estimates first made on these dams which have been referred to were made about 10 years ago under prewar conditions. The estimate of $25,000,000 made by Col. Brown one year ago contemplated the installation of 100,000 horsepower. Col. Hugh L. Cooper, who built the Keokuk Dam, and is the greatest hydraulic engineer in the United States, stakes his reputation as a hydraulic engineer that $50,000,000 will be the outside limit for the cost of the locks and dams and full installation of 550,000 horsepower. So it is safe for Congress to assume that when this appropriation is made it will never be called on again to appropriate more than from $18,000,000 to $23,000,000.

The War Department has $25,000,000 worth of Chilean nitrate in reserve and says that one-half of this amount is all that is necessary if plant No. 2 is in operation and could be converted at once into the manufacture of nitrogen for explosives, in the event of a military emergency, and recommends that $12,500,000 worth of the nitrogen in reserve be sold to secure the funds necessary to build the ammonium sulphate plant and provide operating capital for the operation of plant No. 2. The testimony of nitrogen experts and the Government tests show that with the cheap water power fertilizer can be produced at plant No. 2 at almost one-half of what it now costs. The Chilean nitrate commission, with headquarters in Great Britain, fix the price of sodium nitrate, and the price of ammonium sulphate from by-product coke ovens is usually about the same as sodium nitrate in proportion to nitrogen contents. Some one has said that the farmers are deceiving themselves in what they expect from the operation of this plant for fertilizer purposes. Able and experienced representatives of all of the farmers' organizations have not only visited and examined this plant but have carefully studied the fertilizer problem from every viewpoint and are of one accord in asking Congress to complete the dam and operate the plant. Confidently believing that it will relieve them from the burdens of the Chilean monopoly, they are waiting with great anxiety to see if Congress will give them this much needed relief. How can any Member explain a vote against this measure which promises such great relief to the farmers who have been so hard hit recently in the slump in price of farm products? I discussed this question at length when it was before the House the 1st of January, and time will not admit of further discussion at this time.

I appeal to my colleagues who represent city districts as well as those who represent rural districts to vote for this appropriation, for farmers, or rather the products from the farms, build, support, and sustain the cities. If the fertility of the soil is exhausted and the lands cease to produce the cities will be depopulated and the streets grow up in grass.

I have too much confidence in the good judgment of the Members of this House to believe that this amendment will not receive enough votes to secure its adoption. It is the most important question that has been before the House for a long time. The future usefulness of the greatest Government project is dependent upon your vote to-day. Please permit me to appeal to you in behalf of preparedness and in behalf of agriculture to support this proposed appropriation, and continue the construction of this wonderful and most important development to completion. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, nature has been so generous to my district that it does not use a pound of fertilizer. One of my chief reasons for favoring this project is based upon its value as an instrument of national defense. I call the attention of the House to the fact that in 1916 provision was made in the national defense act to establish this project as a military measure. For the present fiscal year this Government is expending $950,000,000 on an Army and a Navy; $450,000,000 annually for an Army, to do what? To fight? No; not to fight, because there is no prospect of war now. But we are spending $450,000,000 to have an Army to fight when it may be necessary to fight. We are spending $450,000,000 annually for a Navy, to do what? To attack other nations or to fight? No. We are spending that amount of money to have a Navy to fight whenever it may become necessary to fight. If it was necessary in 1916, before our entry into the World War, to provide a nitrate plant for war purposes and war needs, is it not wise now, when our experience is yet fresh in our memories, to keep that plant for future war purposes and for purposes of national defense? Oh, but gentlemen say, "we do not want the Government to engage in the manufacture and sale of power." If you are to maintain this plant as a war proposition, is it any argument against its value that in time of peace it may be usefully employed and thereby contribute to its own maintenance? Would it be any argument against the wisdom or economy of providing and maintaining an Army if every man in the Army during peace times should turn his activities to the production of something that would be for the well-being and for the upkeep of the Army?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. CONNALLY. Would it be any argument against the maintenance of the Navy if in time of peace it were possible to utilize that Navy in the carrying of the commerce of the world or in carrying the mails? Gentlemen of the House, if we can maintain this great agency of national defense and usefully employ it in time of peace for the manufacture of nitrates, for fertilizer, or for the manufacture of power to be distributed over a wide area, will it not to a large extent contribute to the economy of its upkeep and at the same time prove a useful agency for the public welfare when the necessities of war may require?

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] loudly declaimed against the proposition of carrying this item for the purpose of navigation or for the purpose of nitrates for fertilizer or for the purpose of water power. In that connection the gentleman adverted to the fact that he lives in Cincinnati. He seems to forget that at his city's feet there flows the Ohio River, upon the locks and dams of which, constructed for only one purpose, that of navigation, dissociated from power, dissociated from the manufacture of nitrates, this Government has already expended $60,000,000 out of its Treasury. [Applause.] I do not begrudge the gentleman that expenditure. I am in favor of improving the waterways of this Nation wherever they may be, wherever it is practicable, and wherever their improvement will contribute to the welfare of the whole Nation, and I am in this particular in favor of this project, because it will be a great national asset, because in time of war it will supply the explosives for the engines of war and in peace it will furnish the nitrates for fertilizer to replenish and renew the fertility of our farms and fields, and incidentally it will make available for navigation and power purposes the Tennessee River, and thereby provide for its maintenance and upkeep, and by the expenditure of $10,000,000 we shall save the $110,000,000 already invested in this great enterprise. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, from whatever standpoint we view the situation now before us, whether it be from the standpoint of the manufacture of fertilizer or from the standpoint of the development of navigation or of the development of power, after a careful consideration of all the evidence that has been presented, I am of opinion that we are not justified in making further investment at this time. I do not say that we may not further develop this enterprise, but I do say, and I do say it without fear of successful contradiction on the part of any man who has carefully read all of the testimony, that as matters now stand we are not justified in investing another penny in this enterprise or these enterprises without a further thorough and careful consideration of the matter from every standpoint. A new administration is about to take charge of the affairs of Government, a new administration charged with great responsibility, and that new administration should be left free to say whether or no, after careful investigation and consideration, there is merit in these enterprises; and if so, along what lines and to what extent we are justified in going further with them.

This is an effort under pressure to pledge the Congress to an expenditure, of doubtful value to the Nation, not of $10,000,000 but of anywhere from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000, and after all the criticism we have made of the unwise expenditures of public moneys since the war began, after all of the charges we have made against the administration for its wasteful misuse of the public money, we are not justified, any of us, in going forward with these enterprises without giving further and careful consideration of every fact and feature of them. If the Congress shall now vote this $10,000,000, which means the ultimate investment of from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000 in questionable undertakings, then I know of no demand that anyone can or is likely to make on the Congress that we can logically or consistently turn down. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] or more if he desires.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, of course, you can get experts to testify on any side of any subject, but after having carefully in mind the discussions which have taken place in this House and in the other body, after having in mind the hearings and the testimony which has been printed, I venture to say that this plant, if completed, can be operated to manufacture cheaply and profitably nitrates for the benefit of the farmers of the country.

We are appropriating hundreds of millions of dollars for the Army, hundreds of millions of dollars for the Navy, hundreds of millions of dollars for the merchant marine, many million dollars for increasing the tillable area of this Nation through irrigation and other projects. I believe we can afford to appropriate the money necessary to complete this plant which will give the farmers an opportunity to increase the productivity of the soil and the size of their crops. They work early and they work late that we may have the raw materials of our foods and of our clothes. Here is an opportunity reasonably to carry on a plant which will give plenty in time of peace and powder in time of war [applause], and in my judgment we will make a great mistake if we turn back on this great enterprise. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker [applause], how much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 14 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I wish to concur in what was said by my friend and colleague from Tennessee [Mr. SELLS] in his very eloquent speech of last night, and also in what was said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT], that this is in no sense a sectional question, nor should it be regarded by anyone in this House as a partisan question. I have been a Member of this House for 12 years. I have voted upon frequent occasions for the reclamation of the great arid West; I have voted for millions of dollars for the improving of rivers and harbors in the North, in the East, and all over this great country of ours, and I have never stopped for one minute to consider the section in which the money was to be expended, because I believe, as Members of this House, acting upon our oaths and obligations, we should vote for the best interests of the entire country, and that whatever benefits one section of the country benefits the whole country. I am not going to insult the intelligence and patriotism of you gentlemen upon the Republican side of the Chamber by assuming in advance that you are going to be actuated by any partisan or any sectional motives in the consideration of this proposition. Now, what have you here? During the war and as a war emergency there was spent at Muscle Shoals $69,000,000 in the erection of a cyanamid plant—plant No. 2. Everyone agrees that that plant was properly located. Why, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] undertook to criticize the action of the President in placing this plant at Muscle Shoals, and he quoted from Dr. Parsons. I ask you to read the record, for I speak from the record. I say that the testimony of Dr. Parsons does not substantiate the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio.

Dr. Parsons said the board to which he referred was considering the construction of a small Haber process plant, a plant which would not require water power, and because this plant was one requiring steam power they considered the location of a small plant at Chattanooga. But later on, when it became necessary to construct a great cyanamid plant for munition purposes, in order that our soldiers might be given the shot and shell necessary to win this war, this plant was located at Muscle Shoals, where there is possibly the greatest possibility of power development in this country. This plant requires hydroelectric power, and Dr. Parsons said he had no criticism of the location of the cyanamid plant at Muscle Shoals. Now, we have expended $69,000,000 there. Everyone agrees, Dr. Parsons included, that the plant should be maintained as a war emergency, because we all know that in the event war shall come, if we are dependent entirely, as we were at the beginning of this war, upon Chilean nitrate, we would be at the mercy of any powerful enemy. Why, they talk about paternalism! Everyone agrees that this plant should be maintained as a war emergency, and we insist that as an incident thereto, for the purpose of saving the money already invested in that plant, some action should be taken toward maintaining it, and that it should be utilized in a manner that will prove of most benefit to the most people. Now, Col. Cooper has been spoken of. You all know Col. Cooper, one of the most eminent and distinguished hydraulic engineers in the United States. He stated he had not a dollar's interest in this concern. He is getting no salary for his splendid services to his Government, and he stated it would be a godsend to him, so far as his own personal business was concerned, if the Government should cease the construction of the dam and let him go about his own private business. But he told the Congress and told the country in his hearing before the committee that it would be a national calamity if Congress refused to appropriate the money necessary to complete that dam. He stated that he could not conceive that Congress would be so foolish as to refuse to make the appropriation necessary to complete it.

It is true that he said that he did not believe in the Government manufacturing nitrate at Muscle Shoals. He said he did not believe in the Government going into private business, and as an original proposition, that is a perfectly sound position. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] read to you his statement that he believed in the marketing of the power at the place where it is created to industries and for the purpose of building up industries in the country and in that section, comprising seven States and an area of 60,000 square miles. He further stated that if the Government did not complete this dam, there would be little if any future water-power development in the South.

Col. Cooper stated distinctly that he was not an expert on fertilizer, and he declined to express an opinion on it. It is true that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], in his anxiety to get from the witness something to defeat this proposition which we propose in the interest of the farmers and the industries of this country, undertook to put in his mouth a certain state of facts in the form of a question. But here is what he said when given an opportunity to express himself. Let me read it to you:

> The question has been raised as to whether or not this plant was not usable for fertilizer. I am not a fertilizer expert, and I do not want to go into that side of it, but I would say this as to fertilizer: When you have something to sell or to lease you have a fine chance with competition as between the private fertilizer companies on the one hand and the power consumers on the other represented by the public utilities, and you have these two competing with one another as to which is the best thing for the greater number.

Col. Cooper staked his reputation upon the fact that this dam would never cost, even at the present high cost of labor and material, more than $50,000,000. He staked his reputation, as he stated in the hearings, on the fact that if it is constructed and this power is sold there would be no question as to the demand for it, and it would bring in a net return to the United States Government upon the $50,000,000 expended on the dam of 3.58 per cent interest on the investment in the first year of its operation, and at the end of 10 years there would be a net return to the United States Government of 5 per cent upon every dollar placed in that dam. And in that statement he said that he had very liberally charged off 5 per cent for depreciation. In other words, he shows in his letter printed here in the hearings that there would be a 10 per cent gross return upon every dollar invested in that dam.

You have expended $17,000,000 already in the construction of that dam. What are you going to do with it? Are you going to tell the American people, whom you are here to represent, that you are going to absolutely waste every dollar expended in that dam because, as intimated by the gentleman from Ohio, you do not like the section or place in which it was located? Are you going to tell the American people that you will throw away that money in the face of the fact that Col. Cooper, who has no interest in it, tells you that by the expenditure of $33,000,000 more you can bring a return of 5 per cent on the investment and save the amount already invested, and build up the industries of the country? Col. Cooper says that if this work is not continued, if it is not constructed now, it will never be constructed, and the United States Government will never recover one dollar of the $17,000,000 that has already been expended.

Why, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] said that it would destroy the navigability of the river. I do not suppose there is another man in this House or anywhere who has ever looked at the hearings who would make a statement of that kind. It is perfectly foolish to make that statement. They have navigation there now of only 5 feet by a canal which was constructed 50 years ago and is not adapted to modern boats and modern methods of transportation. It is true that if you want to complete the navigation at Muscle Shoals you have got to construct more dams, but that is for the future consideration of Congress.

I want to talk to you a moment on the subject of nitrates. Much has been said here to the effect that this plant will not be adapted to the manufacture of nitrates for fertilizer purposes. Dr. Parsons, at present employed by a Haber process plant now in process of construction and who appears more as an advocate than a witness, tells you it can not be done because this is a cyanamide plant. It would, of course, come in competition with the Atmospheric Air Nitrogen Co., by whom he is employed, and he can hardly be called an unbiased witness. Gentlemen have gotten upon this floor who never had a hoe in their hands in their lives, gentlemen have gotten upon this floor who were never between the handles of a plow, and have undertaken to solemnly tell you and the farmers of this country that this does not mean anything for their benefit. Gentlemen, I would rather take the word of the farmers of this country. Do not believe for a moment that they are entirely gullible. Do not believe that they do not know what is for their interest. Their representatives, representing millions of farmers, came before the committee, and what did they tell us? They told us it was distinctly in the interest of the farmer. They asked for it because they said they believed with the use of this secondary power, not the primary power, which will be sold, nitrates could be manufactured there that would benefit the farming interests of the entire country.

What is the condition in regard to nitrogen? During a conversation with Mr. Mann a short while ago, brother of our distinguished colleague and the very able Representative on the floor of this House, he told me—and there is no better informed agricultural expert in the United States—that there had been a 50 per cent depreciation in the soils of this country by the constant reduction of nitrogen due to cultivation. Take the State of Iowa, where the production of corn has decreased from 50 bushels to 37, due to the fact that every year they are taking nitrogen from the soil and failing to put it back. Go to the State of Illinois, and there the production is reduced from 50 to 34, and to Ohio, where the production has been reduced from 50 to 25. This is a proposition to enable the farmer, if possible, to develop a means by which we can add to the nitrate production of this country and give back to the soil some of that nitrogen we are annually taking from it. I would rather trust Mr. Mann and the farmers of this country to know what is to their interest as to the solution of the problem of increasing production than to trust these gentlemen who have no actual knowledge and experience on the subject.

I was handed a statement that was published in the Washington Post of September 2, 1920, relating to the production of nitrogen in Germany. What do they say?

The German Government has released 50,000 tons of nitrogen made from the air for exportation at once, export duty free, to America.

Remember they use the cyanamide as well as the Haber process there, and this means at least 250,000 tons of ammonium sulphate or fertilizer. It says, further:

This information was received yesterday by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

The German Government hopes, it was stated, that sale of this nitrogen will help raise the rate of German exchange. In spite of high prices and heavy taxes, deposits in German saving banks are increasing.

Gentlemen, it is a question with you as to whether or not you will stand in this vote for the interest of the American farmer and in the interest of the consumers of this country, who want to see our production increased, or whether you are going to stand for the German farmer and in the interest of the German manufacturer of nitrogen and the Fertilizer Trust of this country, which has conducted such a powerful lobby against this appropriation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, a great power development can be made in the Tennessee River. There is no question about that. But I protest that the power development intended for the Alabama Power Co. shall not be brought before this House and voted for in the name of the American farmer. [Applause.]

It is admitted that the primary horsepower on the Tennessee River is somewhere between 85,000 and 100,000 per annum. The primary horsepower is the constant power throughout the year. It is not proposed to use any of the primary horsepower for the manufacture of nitrates. Mr. Bower, of the American Farm Union, who came before the committee, testified that that power would cost too much, that that power was worth 4.4 mills per kilowatt hour, and that it was necessary to have cheaper power to manufacture fertilizer; and that inasmuch as Col. Cooper had estimated that the secondary power ran from nothing up to 400,000 horsepower in time of flood, they would use the first 80,000 horsepower of the secondary horsepower at Col. Cooper's estimate at 1.2 mills per kilowatt hour, and make fertilizer.

Col. Cooper said that after 10 years by the sale of all of the primary and secondary power developed this plant would bring in enough to pay operating expenses, depreciation, and obsolescence, and leave a 5 per cent return on the money invested.

But he made it plain that result depended upon the sale of the secondary power at 1.2 mills per kilowatt hour. Mr. Bower said that they must have the first 80,000 horsepower, mind you, of the secondary power; not the last 80,000 horsepower of the secondary power, but of the first. The fact is, if you take 80,000 horsepower of the first of the secondary power, it is worth almost as much as the primary power. And yet the first 80,000 horsepower of the secondary power will only permit that plant to be run for eight months in the year during years of light rainfall, and consequent low water, and when Mr. Bower was asked what he would do with the 2,500 men that would be engaged in manufacturing fertilizer for the four months when there was no power, he said, "I would pay them their wages and keep them there." Of course, it would be necessary to do this, otherwise you would not have the men to run the plant when you did have water.

At present it is costing the War Department $3.60 a day per man, and they have several thousand employed. That, multiplied by 2,500, will total $9,000 a day for idle men. Multiply it by four months, and you will have $1,080,000, which must be charged somewhere to idleness. And if you add that to the cost of the maximum of production of fertilizer you add at once $5 a ton to that production.

More than that, nothing has been said here in regard to the vast quantity of sludge produced in the manufacture of 220,000 tons of fertilizer. To manufacture 220,000 tons of fertilizer per year will produce, according to the statement made by all of the experts, 1,500 tons of sludge per day, or 450,000 tons of sludge every year. What do you think they propose to do with it? There is not a cent, not anything, in this estimated cost of producing fertilizer for removing the sludge. What do you think they propose to do with it? They propose to dump it into the river; 3,000 cubic yards per year; and then the next thing you would have them come here before Congress with an estimate for millions of dollars for removing the sludge out of Tennessee River. Now, we have some lowlands about 3 miles away from the plant. You can haul about three or four loads a day. A cubic yard of this sludge, which is something like sand, would be all that a man could haul. It would take 400 teams to haul away the sludge alone, and this would add another $5 per ton for the fertilizer produced. If you are going to estimate what it will cost to produce fertilizer, you must include all the elements of production.

Oh, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] smiles, but he does not smile, or will not, when I remind him this estimate can not be as far off as some of the War Department's estimates with regard to this dam. Back only six years ago the War Department, which is now building this dam, made an estimate, and they estimated that Dam No. 1 would cost $57,000. That is Dam No. 1. In 1920 it estimated it would cost $2,450,600; and when asked to-day what it would cost they say, "We do not know." Dam No. 2 was first estimated, six years ago, to cost about $12,500,000, in the Burgess report, which is found in House Document 1262, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session. That was the estimate of the War Department, and the details are there. Then last year, before the Graham committee, Col. Brown, representing the War Department, said that Dam No. 2 would cost $23,800,000; and now to-day this same War Department, after having spent $17,000,000 down there in building the dam, say it will cost $60,000,000.

But that is not all. They propose to build Dam No. 3 also. That was originally estimated, six years ago, to cost $5,200,000. Last year it was estimated at $12,033,000, and now they say they do not know how much it will cost.

Oh, they say, "This is a good thing," that it will be a wonderful investment for the United States. Let us see if it will. Take the testimony of Col. Cooper, upon whom the proponents rely. Col. Cooper is one of the great hydraulic engineers of this country. He built the Keokuk Dam. He raised the money to build it. He is a money-maker, and is looking for good investments of this character for his large clientele. The testimony shows that Col. Cooper can raise money. He admits it. Now, let us see what he says about this dam. He was asked this question—on page 59 of the hearings I asked if he would take the dam and complete it if the Government would turn it over to him after spending $17,000,000, and he said, "No, sir." I then asked him this question: "Suppose we should say we will put in $17,000,000 more, then would you take it?" His answer was, "No, sir." [Applause.] Wonderful investment, this Wilson Dam. Why, think of it! One of the best engineers in the world, the engineer the proponents are relying upon, says before the committee that if Congress will spend $34,000,000 in building this dam he would not take it as a gift and complete it and operate it! Now, if Col. Cooper does not want that kind of an investment, the 105,000,000 taxpayers all over this land do not want it. They would rather lose what is gone and stop than to send more good money after what is lost. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SELLS] misinterprets, I am afraid, the motive that cause that great people of Tennessee to sweep the Republican Party into power in that State.

Oh, the people of Tennessee, living there, and where they could see the $90,000,000 wasted down at Old Hickory, and $70,000,000 in a nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals, and $17,000,000 more on the Wilson Dam knew what the issues were last November. These good people living in the very shadow of these monuments to the colossal failure, the colossal and unthinkable waste and extravagance, living, I say, in the shadow of this monument to the administration of Woodrow Wilson, seeing that said, "we have had enough of this and we are sick of it," and they expect us to act differently toward the taxpayers.

and we are going to do it. [Applause.] If it is going to cost $65,000,000 to hold Tennessee in the Republican column I do not think that this side of the House is for it. The cost is too great.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Where does the gentleman get his authority for the statement that it will cost $65,000,000?

Mr. GOOD. I wonder if the Democratic side of the House are willing to expend $65,000,000 out of the Treasury to keep the Republican Party in power in Tennessee? If so, how much do you want to spend out of the Treasury to put the Republicans in power down in South Carolina, and how much will it cost out of the Treasury of the United States to carry Texas and keep it in the Republican column? [Laughter.] Oh, no; we are not treating the Treasury in that way. We believe in keeping campaign expenses down, and we do not believe in paying a dollar of them out of the Treasury of the United States. Yet you are going to vote to spend $10,000,000 more now and eventually $65,000,000 to keep the Republican Party in power in Tennessee.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. No; I regret I can not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GOOD. I have said that they propose to use the first 80,000 horsepower of the secondary power to manufacture nitrates. Let us see what Col. Cooper said about that. On page 77 of the hearings this question and answer appear:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Cooper, the nitrate people say they must have the first 80,000 horsepower of secondary power. If this plan was followed, what effect would this have on your estimated earnings from secondary power?

Mr. COOPER. Such a first use of 80,000 horsepower secondary power would defeat my power plan. The first 80,000 horsepower secondary power will produce 440,000,000 kilowatt hours for an average period of slightly over 10 months per year. Compare this first 80,000 horsepower with the last 80,000 horsepower of secondary power. The last 80,000 horsepower of secondary power will produce an average of only 172,000,000 kilowatt hours for an average period of 4 months per year. Power that is good for 10 months per year is worth at least 33⅓ per cent more per kilowatt hour than the same kilowatt-hour power that is good for 4 months per year. I feel quite certain that the taking away from the secondary earning capacity in my plan now before you of the first 440,000,000 kilowatt hours per annum would be taking off so much of the cream of this business as to make the remaining skim milk not worth building transmission lines for.

In other words, if you permit this nitrate-production scheme to go through, then your power plant falls to the ground, and Mr. Bowen, the farmer's friend, says you can not make the manufacture of fertilizer a success except that you first make the power plant a success by the sale of power to the municipalities and the industries. Hence it matters not which horn of the dilemma you take you can not use the power for the successful manufacture of fertilizer.

I agree with Col. Cooper that there are great power possibilities there, although the stream is erratic. But, my friends, if you vote for this, forget at once all about nitrate. You will never manufacture nitrates for the farmer at this plant. Why, do you know that you have not a plant there with which you can manufacture nitrate for the farmer? You have to build a new plant. The plant there was built by the American Cyanamid Co., and they manufacture cyanamid and ammonium nitrate and not ammonium sulphate; and ammonium sulphate is the only commercial fertilizer that can be produced that will have anything like general use by the farmer. That is in the testimony. Everybody admits that. They propose now to shove in another bill before this House, already passed by the Senate, carrying $12,500,000, to be used in the manufacture of fertilizer at Muscle Shoals. Of that amount, it is proposed that the losses will be $3,000,000 for the first year in manufacturing fertilizer, and you are going to be called upon to vote for that very proposition if you agree to this.

Now, I have said that the Alabama Power Co. is interested. Mr. Cooper says that he would sell this power at the plant, at the place of production. Whose wires are at the place of production? The wires of the Alabama Power Co. and no one else. Let me quote again from the report of the War Department as found in the Burgess report:

The work accomplished in the past four years in connection with Lock 12 on the Coosa River stands as a great example of the advantages of such cooperation.

He is referring to Government cooperation.

And also makes the Alabama Power Co. the logical and, in fact, the only company capable of building up the market necessary to use the power which may be developed at Muscle Shoals. * * *

With the sites already owned and developed, and the territory covered by the transmission lines of the Alabama Power Co., none of the hydroelectric systems of the North and East can economically, or without duplication of investment, be tied into Muscle Shoals and have the public reap the benefit which may be derived from the combination of Muscle Shoals and the Alabama Power Co. system.

What is the Alabama Power Co.? Poor's Manual gives the Alabama Power Co., incorporated January 5, 1912, under the laws of the Dominion of Canada, and it owns all the stock in the Alabama Interstate Power Co., the Birmingham, Montgomery & Gulf Power Co., the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Power Co., the Alabama Property Co., the Alabama Power & Light Co., the Asbury Electric Power Co., and the Anniston Steel Co., and it controls the Selma Lighting Co., the Dixie Construction Co., the Winona Coal Co., and the Coosa Securities Co., and holds $2,000,000 of stock in the United Gas & Electric Corporation. And here is their publication on Muscle Shoals, entitled "America's Gibraltar," published in the interest of the farmer, almost in the words of the gentleman from Illinois, is found the words "In peace, prosperity for the farmer; in war, preparedness for the Nation." That is the propaganda put out by the Alabama Power Co. and its subsidiaries, hiding behind the cloak of the farmer. This project is the protégé of Woodrow Wilson, whose picture adorns its pages, and when you vote for this measure, when you vote to take $10,000,000 out of the Treasury for this power steal—for it is nothing else—you do not vote to aid the farmer, but you vote to put an additional tax upon the taxpayers of the country in order that the Alabama Power Co., with its $30,000,000 of stock and $15,000,000 of bonds, a company of which James Mitchell, of London, England, is president, may reap the benefit that will come through heavy taxes that your constituents must pay. My friends, that is the issue involved in this amendment. Let no one deceive you, not even so-called representatives of the farmer. Some one had better be a bit careful or the farmer will want to know who has tied him up with the $50,000,000 British corporation that has farmer and industry alike by the throat. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. By the agreement the previous question is ordered, and the vote comes, first, on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 182, nays 193, answered "present" 3, not voting 50, as follows:

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Texas, Mr. HUDSPETH. If he were here, he would vote "aye." I voted "no," and I wish to withdraw that vote and answer "present."

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. KITCHIN, and I wish to withdraw my vote of "no" and answer "present."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye," but I wish to withdraw that vote and answer "present," as I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. REED.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. GOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the motion to recede and concur was rejected was laid on the table.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOOD. My understanding is that the motion pending is that the House insist further on its disagreement.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House further insist on its disagreement?

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For removal and reconstruction of a part of the fence around the Botanic Garden made necessary on account of the completion of the Grant Memorial, to be immediately available, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the supervision and direction of the Director of the Botanic Garden.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves that the House recede and concur with the following amendment: Insert a period after the word "necessary" in line 4 of said amendment and strike out the remainder of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 111: Page 112, line 15, insert:
"Fighting forest fires in national parks: For fighting forest fires in national parks, or other areas administered by the National Park Service, or fires that endanger such areas, and for replacing buildings or other physical improvements that have been destroyed by forest fires within such areas, $25,000: Provided, That these funds shall not be used for any precautionary fire protection or patrol work prior to actual occurrence of the fire: And provided further, That the allotment of these funds to the various national parks, or areas administered by the National Park Service, for fire-fighting purposes, shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior, and then only after the obligation for the expenditure has been incurred, and the Secretary of the Interior shall submit with his annual estimate of expenditures a report showing the location, size, and description of each forest fire, together with the number of men, their classification and rate of pay and actual time employed, and a statement of expenditures showing the cost for labor, supplies, special service, and other expenses covered by the expenditures made from these funds."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 111 and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 114: Page 115, line 1, insert: "Hereafter the Hot Springs Reservation shall be known as the Hot Springs National Park."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, this matter was in the bill as reported in the House. It simply changes the name of the Hot Springs Reservation to the Hot Springs National Park. I have no particular interest in the matter. I do not know why it was asked for except that they want the names of the parks uniform. They do not want one of them called a reservation and another a park. This national park has more scenic beauty than the Platte National Park and many others.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman visit this reservation?

Mr. GOOD. I have never been there.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman not think it would look just the same if we call it a reservation?

Mr. GOOD. I think it would.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to know the reason back of this.

Mr. GOOD. The national park people gave no reason whatever except they stated they thought the parks should be uniform in name; that all of the parks under their jurisdiction were called parks, while this is called a reservation.

Mr. WALSH. It is a reservation and it is treated as a reservation.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and so are the other national parks.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman thinks there is any reason why it should not be agreed to I am perfectly willing to move that the House insist on its disagreement.

Mr. WALSH. Why not call it a garden?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 114.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 120: Page 120, line 8, insert:
"For additions to the home economics building, to include dining hall and kitchens, to provide refrigeration, laundry, bakery, garbage incinerator, all equipment necessary for the buildings and also to provide for heating apparatus therefor and material and labor required in bringing heat from the central heating plant of Freedmen's Hospital to the buildings, $116,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment No. 120 and concur in the same. This is a provision for constructing a building at Howard University. The trustees of Howard University have had hard work in raising money by private subscription to build the necessary buildings for this colored university. It is located here at the National Capital. The buildings are not what they should be, and they are very much in need of this building. The matter came before the House committee, and the House committee would have reported for the building provided for by this amendment if it had not been subject to a point of order. I therefore move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment 120 and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 121: Page 120, line 24, strike out "$164,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$280,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 121 and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 127: Page 141, line 3, insert: "The provision of section 6 of the act entitled 'An act to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes,' approved June 20, 1918, relative to compulsory retirement shall not apply to an employee of the Lighthouse Service if within 60 days after the passage of this act or not less than 30 days before the arrival of such employee at the age of 70, the Secretary of Commerce shall certify as a matter of public record that by reason of his efficiency and willingness to remain in the Lighthouse Service of the United States the continuance of such employee therein would be advantageous to the public service. In that event such employee may be retained for a term not exceeding two years, and at the end of two years such employee may, by similar certification, be continued for an additional term not exceeding two years: Provided, however, That at the end of 10 years after this act becomes effective no employee shall be continued in the Lighthouse Service beyond the age of compulsory retirement defined in the act of June 20, 1918, referred to in this paragraph: Provided further, That nothing herein shall exclude or prevent any employee of the Lighthouse Service who shall have reached the age of compulsory retirement within 30 days before or after the date of the passage of this act from enjoying the privileges thereof."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment No. 127 and concur in the same. Under the law an employee of the Lighthouse Service when he arrives at the age of 70 is retired. Under this amendment, if he is in good health and the service will certify that he is in good health and is able to perform all of the duties and do his work as well as a younger man and he desires to remain in the service, instead of being retired he will be permitted to remain for two years, and at the end of two years his employment can be extended on certificate for two years longer.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is not this making a different rule with reference to retirement in the Lighthouse Service than is made in the Post Office Department?

Mr. GOOD. My recollection is that in the hearings there was one department where they have——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; the general retirement act carries this same provision. It does not apply to the Lighthouse Service, because there is a special law with reference to the Lighthouse Service. This is simply to make the Lighthouse Service conform to the general retirement act.

Mr. WALSH. I thought it was the other way around.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, is this policy of an extension of four years beyond the age of retirement of 70 years new legislation?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; it would be new legislation, but, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has stated, this provision will put the Lighthouse Service on the same footing as the other services with regard to the age of retirement.

Mr. GARD. Not all of the other services.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I think the Post Office Service is different from this. In that service I think it is made mandatory that a carrier must retire at 68.

Mr. GOOD. I could not give the gentleman that information.

Mr. GARD. I think it is 68, and I am sure that they have no permission of an extension to 74 years.

Mr. GOOD. I do not know as to that. I only know that this matter was urged by the Lighthouse Service. The Committee on Appropriations did not carry it because it was legislation, but the Senate committee found, as did the House committee, that under the operation of the law this would deprive the service of some of the very best men for a couple of years more, and would force them into retirement.

Mr. GARD. It would only apply to those in the clerical positions in the Lighthouse Service. Seventy-four years is a rather old age for active service, is it not?

Mr. GOOD. They stated that one of their most valuable men, a man whose services it would be almost impossible to replace, would be compelled to go out of the service if this amendment did not prevail. I do not know whether he is in the clerical end or not.

Mr. GARD. That is what I understood; it is probably to take care of a man or two, or three or four.

Mr. GOOD. No; that is the way these matters usually come up. When a law of this kind is put on the statute books and some one finds that he can not continue in public service because of that law and the department wants him——

Mr. GARD. We make a general law and then begin to make exceptions.

Mr. GOOD. I understand; but these exceptions, however, bring the Lighthouse Service on all fours with the other services.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This provision was carried in the general act for retirement; that is the reason it is here. Now, what is the fact in the matter? In all of these cases retirement pay is very much smaller than active pay. These retirement acts are very recent in date. A very large number of the employees who have been receiving active pay have not saved much, if anything, out of their salaries, and it is very inconvenient for them to live on the retired pay, and both in the Lighthouse Service and all the other services a considerable proportion of these people who would be retired under the law are seeking to remain in the service a few years longer on active pay.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman recognizes that these people do not come and voluntarily wish to retire when they can stay in the active service and get additional compensation and do the work?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Very true; they do not voluntarily retire. Some gentlemen do retire. The gentleman from Ohio has retired, much to our regret, voluntarily.

Mr. GARD. Retirement service very generally must be apart from any voluntary matter; it must be made more or less arbitrary to include classes up to a certain number of years.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Undoubtedly, and this provision was put in the law for the reason that I have stated. It is equally applicable in spirit to the Lighthouse Service, although I believe it is provided that after 10 years it shall not be effective.

Mr. PARRISH. Will the gentleman yield for one single question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If I can answer it.

Mr. PARRISH. I understand that some departments will allow employees the benefit of the provisions of any extension of time and other departments will not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think all departments do in various cases. The Post Office has in a great many cases to my knowledge.

Mr. PARRISH. Well, I was under the impression, from information I have received from the Post Office Department, that they were not allowing it in any case.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. PARRISH. I wanted to get that information and get it straight.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They have to discriminate between cases; that is what the law requires them to do, to discriminate; now, whether they discriminate properly or not I would not state.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. But even where the terms of the law have been absolutely complied with and recommendations have been made they refuse to execute the law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, well, what is the fact? An employee of the Post Office Department asks his foreman to recommend him to stay on two years longer, and it is a good deal like asking a man in this House to sign a petition, why he does it, that is all; and they do the same there, and it goes on up, unless there is reason, to show that the man is competent to conduct the postal business just as a younger man.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. As a matter of fact, I know individual cases in which the terms of the law have been complied with in every respect. Recently a statement has been made by the Postmaster General that all such men would be retired at the age limit without regard to this provision.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, now, I think the gentleman will not find any statement from the Postmaster General to that effect except in the newspapers.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I have some letters in my office signed by subordinates stating that is his position in regard to it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There have been a good many cases where continuance has been allowed.

Mr. PARRISH. I have one particular case in mind, if the gentleman will permit me to make this statement.

Mr. GOOD. I will yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. PARRISH. I have in mind a carrier who carries the mail at Bowie, Tex., and who has been carrying it about 16 years, I believe. He has absolutely on account of bad health never missed a single trip. A physician certified his qualification, and the postmaster certified his qualification, and there is absolutely not one single solitary reason why this man should not be continued in the service. The postmaster has certified that he can carry the mail better than anybody else so far as that particular route is concerned, and they have absolutely refused to permit that man to stay.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I have a number of cases of the same kind.

Mr. PARRISH. I want to get at what the facts are.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state what is the idea of that last proviso?

That nothing herein shall exclude or prevent any employee of the Lighthouse Service who shall have reached the age of compulsory retirement within 30 days after or before the date of the passage of this act from enjoying the privileges thereof.

Mr. GOOD. I suppose it means what it says.

Mr. WALSH. But what does it mean?

Mr. GOOD. It means that nothing herein shall exclude or prevent any employee of the Lighthouse Service who shall have reached the age of compulsory retirement at the age of 70 within 30 days before or after the passage of this act enjoying the privileges thereof. I suppose that is to cover one employee that they are fearful they are going to lose and whose services they desire.

Mr. WALSH. That is what I thought it meant, but that is not what it says.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Would it be in order now to make a motion to reconsider the vote taken on amendment No. 114, just passed?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the vote whereby the House insisted upon its disagreement to amendment 114 be reconsidered.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have appeared for this amendment on one or two occasions heretofore.

The Hot Springs is the oldest reservation or park in this Nation. It was set apart and withheld by Congress from sale or disposition in 1832, nearly 90 years ago. It has struggled along, paying its own way, without the Government having to contribute to its maintenance and support, and now, since it is the oldest reservation we have, and since it is a resort for the lame, halt, and afflicted, for all the people of this Nation and, for that matter, the world, I think it is high time that the Congress should permit it to be dignified by the name of a national park. We do not want the people who do not live in my district or in my State to think that it is a State reservation or that it is a preserve or reservation set apart by some rich landlord years ago, but that when it is mentioned as a national park the people of this Nation will know that it belongs to them.

It does not carry one dollar of appropriation. We ask only for the change of the name from "reservation" to that of "national park." We do not want people to believe, as I said the other day, that this is a pluce where there are a few digger Indians squatted around. There has grown up around these wonderful healing waters a beautiful city of some 15,000 people, and there are churches and schoolhouses, law and order, and it is one of the most beautifully erected little cities in all this country. There is located there our Army and Navy Hospital. The Hot Springs is visited annually by thousands of the afflicted, the crippled, and wounded of this Nation. Our ex-service men, many of them who have rheumatism and other afflictions caused by exposure in the World War, are there to-day. Now, I ask that the House afford the people of Hot Springs this rightful favor, which is only to change the name from "the Hot Springs Reservation" to that of "the Hot Springs National Park."

Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to reconsider the vote by which the House insisted on its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. I move now as a preferential motion that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 136: Page 161, line 22, insert: "Saratoga (Wyoming) fish hatchery: For construction of quarters for employees, and for establishment and equipment of auxiliary station at Sage Creek, $11,250."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert "$10,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the following amendment:

Amendment No. 137: Page 162, line 9, insert: "For refund to Falik Schimmer of $170.50 deposited with the commissioner of immigration, Ellis Island, N. Y., in behalf of his two daughters, Malke and Eidel Schimmer, said sum having been erroneously covered into the Treasury Department to the credit of miscellaneous receipts, $170.50."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment 137.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the following amendment:

Amendment No. 138: Page 162, line 15, insert: "For refund of immigration fine erroneously assessed and collected from N. Galanos & Co., agents National Steam Navigation Co. of Greece, $240."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the following amendment:

Amendment No. 143: Page 166, line 8, insert:

"EMPLOYMENT SERVICE.

"To enable the Secretary of Labor to foster, promote, to develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, to advance their opportunities for profitable employment by maintaining a national system of employment offices, and to coordinate the public employment offices throughout the country by furnishing and publishing information as to opportunities for employment and by maintaining a system for clearing labor between the several States, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and for their actual necessary traveling expenses while absent from their official station, together with their per diem in lieu of subsistence, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914; supplies and equipment, telegraph and telephone service, and printing and binding, $225,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in Senate amendment 143.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 2.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum, and evidently no quorum is present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees. Those in favor of the motion to recede and concur will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 297, nays 6, not voting 125, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 151: Page 173, line 4, strike out "$6,286,890" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,826,390."

Mr. GOOD. I move to recede and concur. That is a question of correcting totals.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 152: Page 173, line 20, after the word "sum," strike out the figures "$7,348,700" and insert in lieu thereof "$6,888,700."

Mr. GOOD. I move to recede and concur. That is a question of totals.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 167: Page 186, insert at the top of the page:
"To enable the President to cause an investigation to be made as to the petroleum resources and the production of petroleum in other countries, $35,000."

Mr. GOOD. I move to recede and concur in Senate amendment 167.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 168: Page 186, after line 18, insert:
"SEC. 3. Any journal, magazine, periodical, or similar publication which is now being issued by a department or establishment of the Government may, in the discretion of the head thereof, be continued, within the limitation of available appropriations or other Government funds, until December 1, 1921, when, if it shall not have been specifically authorized by Congress before that date, such journal, magazine, periodical, or similar publication shall be discontinued."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in Senate amendment numbered 168.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the gentleman why this is carried until December 1, 1921? Why should not these matters be clipped off on the 1st of July, at the beginning of the new fiscal year?

Mr. GOOD. They will be clipped off on the 1st of July unless we carry this provision. Under the law no publication, journal, or magazine which is now being published by a department or establishment of the Government at the discretion of the head of any such department can be published or the expenses for publishing it paid out of the appropriation unless we extend the law and grant that privilege. I understand it is proposed to bring in some kind of a law legalizing the publications that can be published and paid for out of public funds before the 1st day of December next.

Mr. WALSH. We have a printing bill pending yonder.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They have the House end of the printing bill over there, but not the entire printing reform bill. They have half of it, half passed.

Mr. WALSH. Half of it, half passed?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman knows that if we vest this discretion in the heads of these departments, nearly all these journals, magazines, periodicals, tracts, bulletins, flimsies, and various other publications will be continued, because you give them the discretion to publish them and they will publish them. That is how they got started publishing them. It was because they had a little discretion as to what to do with the money that they began piling up the printed matter, some of which is very valuable and some of which is worthless and very seldom read.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman does not mean that they had a little discretion. He means they had not any, and they did print these things. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. They had a small supply of discretion, which they converted into a surplus of indiscretion.

Mr. SNELL. And a large amount of printed matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the distinguished member of the Printing Committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Has anyone seen the Christmas cards sent out by a branch of the War Department under the guise of enlistment blanks?

Mr. WALSH. I am not surprised that any department of the Government should be sending out Christmas cards, because it has become the fashion not only at Christmastide but at other seasons of the year to consider Uncle Sam as a very good-natured Santa Claus. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Has the gentleman seen the Agricultural Almanac?

Mr. WALSH. I have secured all the information I desire about this.

Mr. TILSON. I should like to know whether or not, if this amendment goes into effect, the gentleman anticipates another crop of lobbyists and another lot of propaganda to convince Congress that each one of these publications ought to be continued? Are we not going to have Congress deluged with all sorts of requests for each one of them, with the usual claim that the very safety of the Nation itself depends upon each several one of these publications being continued?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They are all over before the Senate Committee on Printing doing that now.

Mr. TILSON. This is what we are going to have brought down upon us if we agree to this amendment; and, judging by some things that we do here, I fear that we shall give the authority desired and that as a result we shall continue to print all sorts of things in the future, as we have been doing in the past.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman will permit me, they are distributing the Agricultural Almanac; and that is so unreliable that there was nothing in it under the month of last November warning anyone to look out for frosts or anything of that kind. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. I move to recede and concur in Senate amendment 168.

The motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—BODENSTAB AGAINST BERGER.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the contested-election case of Bodenstab against Berger, and I move the adoption of the resolution (H. Res. 696).

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Henry H. Bodenstab, not having received a plurality of the votes cast for Representative in this House from the fifth congressional district of Wisconsin, is not entitled to a seat therein as such Representative.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, this is a contest brought by the contestant, Henry H. Bodenstab, claiming that he is entitled to the seat from the fifth congressional district of the State of Wisconsin. The only question that is involved is the question of whether the contestant is entitled to the seat. The other question of the right of Victor L. Berger to the seat has already been passed upon by this House in this Congress.

At the regular election in 1918 Victor L. Berger was the Socialist candidate and Joseph P. Carney was the Democratic candidate. Immediately following the reference of the question of the eligibility of Victor L. Berger to a special committee the contested-election case of Carney against Berger was referred to the Committee on Elections No. 1. The special committee, as the House will remember, reported that Victor L. Berger was not entitled to the seat. This resolution is printed at the bottom of page 1 of this report, where the whole history of this matter is summarized for the information of the House.

In other words, on November 10, 1919, the House passed a resolution by a vote of 311 to 1 that Victor L. Berger was "not entitled to take the oath of office as a Representative in this House from the fifth congressional district of the State of Wisconsin or to hold a seat therein as such Representative."

On the same day the House unanimously adopted a resolution recommended by the committee "that Joseph P. Carney, not having received a plurality of the votes cast for Representative in this House from the fifth congressional district of the State of Wisconsin, is not entitled to a seat therein as such Representative." By another resolution the Speaker was directed to notify the governor of Wisconsin "that a vacancy exists in the representation in this House from the fifth congressional district of Wisconsin."

In that case Joseph P. Carney, the Democratic contestant, claimed in that case that because he received the next highest number of votes he was entitled to a seat, the contestee, Berger, having been declared ineligible. The committee, however, took the other view of it, and the committee was unanimously sustained by the House.

A special election was held in the fifth Wisconsin district on December 19, 1919, and at that election Victor L. Berger was the Socialist candidate and Henry H. Bodenstab, a Republican, ran as the fusion candidate, having been indorsed by the Democratic organization of the district. When the contestee, Victor L. Berger, who had received a certificate of election from the governor of Wisconsin, appeared to take the oath of office on January 10, 1920, the House of Representatives of this present Congress adopted a resolution on a roll call by a vote of 330 to 6, which resolution is printed in full on pages 2 and 3 of our report, and declares that Victor Berger is constitutionally ineligible to a seat in this House. So the question of his eligibility and his right as the contestee to a seat has already been passed upon by this House and the time for reconsideration has long ago expired. The present case, therefore, involves simply the contention of Henry H. Bodenstab, the opposing candidate at the special election held on December 19, 1919, that he is entitled to the seat made vacant by the ineligibility of Victor L. Berger.

Mr. Speaker, it is my desire to state this case with absolute fairness. It is true that the fact of Berger's ineligibility was better known to the voters at the special election than it was at the regular election in 1918, when Joseph P. Carney, the Democratic candidate, was the contestant. At the regular election in 1918 Victor L. Berger had been indicted by the grand jury for a violation of the espionage act, but he had not been convicted, and the question of his eligibility had not been passed upon at that time by the House of Representatives. On the other hand, at the special election held on December 19, 1919, every voter in the fifth congressional district of Wisconsin knew not only that Victor L. Berger had been convicted of the crime for which he had been previously indicted but also knew that he had been declared by an almost unanimous vote of the House of Representatives to be ineligible to the office of a Representative in Congress under the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Now, it is true that it has been the parliamentary practice in England, under the English statutes, that where the fact of the ineligibility of a candidate is known to the voters and brought to their attention, the candidate having the next highest number of votes is given the seat. That is the English rule. There are two States in this Union where the courts of last resort have adopted the English rule. One of them is the State of Wisconsin. In the case of Bancroft against Frear, which was discussed in our report in the case of Carney against Berger and also in this report, where at a primary election the candidate for attorney general who received the highest number of votes had died previous to the primary election, and the fact of his death was known to the voters, and in spite of that fact a plurality of the votes cast for the office of attorney general on the Republican primary ballot were cast for him, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin held, by a vote of 4 to 3, overruling all their previous decisions, that the next highest candidate should be entitled to be placed on the official ballot as the Republican candidate for attorney general.

Indiana has also adopted the English rule, but Congress has always consistently from the beginning to the present time refused to adopt the English rule. The question has come up and has been discussed on numerous occasions in connection with various contested-election cases. The most exhaustive discussion, perhaps, was in the case of Smith against Brown, in the Fortieth Congress; and, without wearying the patience of the Members of this House, I desire to call the attention of Members to a quotation from the case of Smith against Brown, on page 6 of our report, in which the principle at the basis of this uniform congressional precedent is well set forth. The committee in that report said:

> As Congress, much less the House of Representatives, never conceded—never having the power to concede—to a voter his right to the ballot, neither can it take away, modify, or limit it. Least of all can this body—the House alone—punish a voter for "obstinacy" or "perversity" in the exercise of his right. It can not touch a voter or prescribe how he shall vote, nor can it impose a penalty on him, much less disfranchise him or say what shall be the effect or the power of his ballot if it be cast in a particular way. The laws of the States determine this.
> As has been shown, Parliament did enact a law that votes cast for one ineligible shall be treated as not cast, and one having a minority of the votes be thus elected. But neither has Congress nor Kentucky enacted any such law; much less can this House alone by a resolution set it up, and that, too, after the fact, as a punishment for "willful obstinacy and misconduct." The right of representation is a sacred right which can not be taken away from the majority.

And I want to call the attention of the House here to how absolutely the following sentence applies to this present case:

> That majority by perversely persisting in casting its vote for one ineligible can lose its representation—

And that is what has happened in this case; there has been a vacancy in that district—

> but never the right to representation while the Constitution and State governments shall endure.

In other words, the position taken by this House has been that if the people of that congressional district in Wisconsin should persist in sending a man here who is ineligible under the Constitution we will not seat him, but we will also refuse to seat a man who is not the choice of that district, and you can see how the English rule, if adopted, might work by taking an extreme case. Let us suppose, for instance, as frequently happens, that a man should come here elected as the nominee of both the two great political parties, having received both nominations. Suppose the only votes cast against him were a few scattered votes—say, 10 in number. Suppose he did not possess the constitutional qualifications, that he was under 25 years of age, was not a citizen, had not been a resident of the State, or had given aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States after taking oath as a Member of Congress. Under these circumstances we could not seat him under our oaths to support the Constitution of the United States. If the rule contended for by counsel for Mr. Carney, and by counsel for Mr. Bodenstab, should be adopted by this House it would seat the man who had only 10 votes out of a total vote of perhaps 75,000 or 100,000 from that district. Congress has wisely refused to follow the English rule, and so your committee has treated this Republican contestant exactly as they treated the Democratic contestant, Mr. Carney, and have brought in a resolution in identically the same language—

> Resolved, That Henry H. Bodenstab, not having received a plurality of the votes cast for Representative in this House from the fifth congressional district of Wisconsin, is not entitled to a seat therein as such Representative.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is the English rule a result of an act of Parliament? In case of Smith against Brown there is a reference there that would warrant the conclusion that apparently it is the result of Parliament enacting a law.

Mr. DALLINGER. It is an act of Parliament, I would say, and there is a provision made for publication, so that the voters shall know that the man is ineligible.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We have no such statute.

Mr. DALLINGER. No.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. England has no constitution in the sense that we have. Does not that make all the difference in the world? We are restrained or limited by a written Constitution, and England is not.

Mr. DALLINGER. That is true.

Mr. GARRETT. That is an act of Parliament, but that act of Parliament can be repealed at any time. We ought not to get away from the Constitution.

Mr. DALLINGER. I may say to the gentleman that the Supreme Court of Wisconsin and the Supreme Court of Indiana, in the absence of any such statute, have nevertheless in their decisions adopted the English rule.

Mr. GARRETT. But there is another provision of the Constitution of the United States, and that is that Congress is the judge of the qualifications and election of its Members.

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly; and this is an attempt I may say to have Congress adopt the English system as a precedent, in other words to establish a precedent which Congress has always in the past refused to establish.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I might make a suggestion in that connection that every act of Parliament has an equal validity and force in Great Britain that our own Constitution has. In other words, not having a written constitution, the acts of Parliament are supreme. However, I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] that whatever may be the condition that exists, our action is governed by the Constitution, which says that we have the supreme right and power to determine the eligibility of those persons who are claiming to have been elected Members of this body.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. PELL. I understand that this act of Parliament was passed just after they seated Col. Luttrell in the Wilkes fight in England; that that made such trouble in attempting to seat the candidate of the minority that this law had to be passed instantly to make the conditions uniform. Is not that so?

Mr. DALLINGER. I understand that to be the fact.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I am interested in having the gentleman's well-considered information on the phrase contained in the report of the committee in respect to previous contests, as is disclosed on page 6. In the latter part of the quotation there I find the following:

> That majority by perversely persisting in casting its vote for one ineligible can lose its representation, but never the right to representation while the Constitution and the State governments shall endure.

In reading the report I find that the gentleman's committee states that the additional fact that the voters of this Wisconsin district had knowledge of the ineligibility of Mr. Berger, and still, notwithstanding that, continued to vote for him, did not present any additional fact why the committee should find in favor of this contestant.

Mr. DALLINGER. No; it is simply a stronger case under the English rule.

Mr. GARD. What I am trying to get is the gentleman's opinion for my own information only. What is meant by the phrase:

> But never the right to representation while the Constitution and the State governments shall endure.

Mr. DALLINGER. What I think it means is that while Congress under the Constitution is not obliged to seat an ineligible person, as long as the people of a district persist in electing an ineligible person, Congress can refuse the right of that person to a seat in the House, but the House can not dictate whom they shall choose, which we would do if we seated the man who has a minority of the votes, under any such precedent as is sought to be established.

Mr. GARD. The phrase—

but never the right to representation—

is the phrase I am seeking information about.

Mr. DALLINGER. They could have a new election, just as was done here—a special election. A special election was called and they still persisted in electing the same man. The result was that when the matter again came before the House, and without any further reference to a committee, the House refused to seat that man because they had already found that he was ineligible under the Constitution.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman's idea is that the right of representation is protected by the fact of the ability to call another election and elect a suitable man?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I will.

Mr. FESS. I understand the position of the committee is that the representation of the fifth district is not denied by act of Congress, but simply a man's ineligibility to a seat here was pronounced before the election, and the conduct of the electors there is responsible for their not having representation?

Mr. DALLINGER. Absolutely. They can be represented here at any time if they choose to send a person who is eligible.

Mr. FESS. Correct; and it is not the act of Congress which denies it.

Mr. DALLINGER. No; it is the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. KEARNS. I see both in the majority and minority reports on this case that the statement is made that if the candidate is ineligible—disqualified for any reason—and this fact is known to the electors, it is one of the controlling features. Say 75,000 men and women voted for a particular candidate for Congress, how would your committee be able to determine—I am asking this for my information—that those 75,000 voters knew of this disqualification? It is a pretty big undertaking for you to determine; and how would you determine it?

Mr. DALLINGER. It certainly would be a difficult task in some cases.

Mr. KEARNS. The reason I ask this question is that I see both the majority and the minority report state that as one of the controlling features.

Mr. DALLINGER. I would say it would ordinarily be very difficult. I intend to yield to my colleague [Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin], who has offered a minority report, and he will——

Mr. KEARNS. He emphasizes that phrase also and makes that one condition necessary——

Mr. DALLINGER. That is under the English rule.

Mr. KEARNS. But under your rule you put it in as one of the conditions, and I wondered——

Mr. DALLINGER. Because it is one of the conditions, I may say to the gentleman from Ohio, precedent to the English rule.

Mr. KEARNS. It is one of the conditions precedent you make here, at least the gentleman has embodied it in his report and says that if this disqualification was known to the people, and in this case you say it was known, now I just wondered how you know that.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it would be very easy.

Mr. DALLINGER. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio——

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman from Illinois does not know that.

Mr. MADDEN. I do.

Mr. KEARNS. I am talking about a matter of proof. I know that the general opinion would be that men and women did know it, but I am asking now as a matter of proof.

Mr. MADDEN. If the notice is sent to the governor that there is a vacancy, that is proof.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman permit me to answer the question?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ROSE. This is a matter——

Mr. KEARNS. I would like to know.

Mr. ROSE. At the time this was heard before the committee this very question the gentleman has raised was already before the committee. We took the ground that with the refusal of this Congress to seat Mr. Berger and the fact that that congressional district was flooded with big posters showing Victor L. Berger was again a candidate, it was known all over that district that Victor L. Berger had been indicted and actually convicted, there was no committee having such knowledge that would not take judicial notice that the Wisconsin district from which he came absolutely knew that Victor L. Berger was not entitled to a seat in this House.

Mr. KEARNS. I believe that fully answers my question.

Mr. MADDEN. When notice was sent to the governor that there was a vacancy it was further notice.

Mr. ROSE. Certainly; and the committee considered all of that, and I have no doubt it will be taken up again in the minority report.

Mr. KEARNS. But that is the fact.

Mr. ROSE. Those are the facts.

Mr. DALLINGER. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio that in order to be perfectly fair to our colleague who signed the minority report we wanted to state the facts exactly as they were, and our position is that assuming that the voters did know of the ineligibility that furnishes no reason whatever why Congress should adopt this English procedure.

Mr. KEARNS. This Berger case was a very notorious case, and consequently would be known perhaps to a number of voters in that district, but suppose it had been the case of a nonresident. There would be no reason to advertise so thoroughly as this has been advertised in that district. Then how would you have proof that his nonresidence was known to the entire electorate of that district?

Mr. DALLINGER. I will state to the gentleman that it would be a question of fact for the Committee on Elections to determine, but in the case of Bancroft versus Frear the court held that the fact that the death of the deceased candidate for attorney general was published in the newspapers of the district was sufficient evidence of the fact that his decease was known to the electorate.

Mr. KEARNS. The decease in that instance occurred many days before the election.

Mr. DALLINGER. About a week, if I recollect correctly.

Mr. KEARNS. There has been a different holding entirely where the death occurred on election day, has there not?

Mr. DALLINGER. I understand so.

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. The gentleman is entirely correct. Where the death occurs on the day of election or within a few days of election, it is held there would be no notice.

Mr. TOWNER. I would like to say that in either event the committee would be able to justify their conclusion because of this fact: If Victor Berger had a majority or plurality of the votes, then Mr. Bodenstab did not, and was not elected, because he did not have a plurality of the vote. And if Victor Berger was not qualified, was not eligible, the same condition would exist, because then Mr. Bodenstab did not have a majority or plurality of the votes. So, in either event, the conclusion of the committee must be the same.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I felt compelled in this particular case to file a dissenting view to the report of the majority, not because there was any disagreement as to the facts, but I did feel that I could not subscribe to the conclusions of law reached by the majority of the committee, due to the facts existing in this particular case.

As has been called to the attention of the House in the discussion here, the Constitution of the United States provides that "each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members." The duty imposed upon the House when a question arises as to who is elected as a Representative is judicial in character, and therefore the determination of the House should be reached after a careful consideration of the evidence, the facts and the law applicable to the particular case, depending upon the precedents of the House as well as the decisions of the various courts. And it seems to me that the same consideration should be given to these things as is given by the judge upon the bench.

Now, under the so-called English rule, if the voters have actual or constructive notice of the ineligibility of the candidate, then the votes cast for such ineligible candidate are held to be thrown away, and the eligible candidate receiving the minority of the votes, is entitled to the election. The suggestion has been made that this is purely because of the declaration of Parliament. Now, in a discussion of a case of this kind, either by filing a report or upon the floor, it is impossible, and it would be wearisome to bring up all of the decisions, but a careful examination of the decisions brings this conclusion, that not only do the legislative decisions of Parliament declare this rule but also the decisions of the courts of England and the decisions of the courts and of Parliament as well, as I understand them, are not based upon any declaration of Parliament. In other words the courts and the legislative authorities of England have unanimously held to this rule from the earliest time up to date.

Now, the rule that has been affirmed by the majority of the courts in the United States is that the majority or plurality of the votes cast at a popular election for a person ineligible to the office, for which such votes are cast, does not confer any right or title to the office upon such ineligible candidate. However, such votes will be effectual to prevent the election of an eligible candidate who received the next highest number of votes, in the absence of proof that the votes cast for the ineligible candidate were given by the electors with the full knowledge or notice, either actual or constructive, of his ineligibility or disqualification.

The question of whether or not the House of Representatives will follow this rule to the extent of holding that the votes cast for an ineligible candidate where the ineligibility is known to all the voters, will be held to be thrown away, and whether or not the minority candidate, being the eligible candidate, having received the next highest number of votes, will be seated, is a question that heretofore has never been presented to the House.

Now, the decision of the majority rests upon a number of cases that are cited in their report, and I want to just scan those cases very briefly. The case that is relied upon most is that of Smith against Brown, which was decided in the Fortieth Congress, and that was the case where the contestant claimed that the contestee had been guilty of disloyalty and was consequently ineligible. But I call your attention to the fact that the specific act of disloyalty was a letter written by the contestee to a newspaper in Louisville, Ky., in 1861, six years before the election. And it is manifest to everyone that the voters of that district could not have had notice of this act of disloyalty, even if it were proved. And so, after a full discussion of the facts in the case and an examination of the English authorities as well as the American authorities, the majority opinion decided that "the case did not come within the law of the British Parliament for want of a sufficient notice to the electors at the polls of an ineligibility known and fixed by law."

In the Kentucky case of McKee against Young, decided in the Fortieth Congress, the question of ineligibility was not an issue in the case at all, because, as the majority report and the minority view call attention to, the report was based upon entirely different grounds, namely, whether or not the contestee was actually elected. Then there came along another group of cases that may be called the "polygamy cases." One of them is Maxwell against Cannon, in the Forty-third Congress, where there is no proof that the voters knew of Cannon's disqualification, namely, that he was a polygamist, and the matter of notice to the electors of such ineligibility was not discussed in the opinion. In the Utah case of Campbell against Cannon, decided in the Forty-third Congress, the main point at issue was the status of a Delegate in reference to qualifications, and nowhere in the case is there any proof of notice to the electors of the ineligibility of Mr. Cannon, and there is no discussion of notice to the electors of such disqualification.

One other case is that of Lowry against White, decided in the Fiftieth Congress, where the only disqualification alleged was the fact that the candidate elected was not a citizen. And in this case a careful examination shows that there is no proof of, or discussion of, notice to the electors of the alleged ineligibility of the contestee.

Now, in the case that we are considering, it must be conceded by everybody that after the House of Representatives held Victor Berger to be ineligible, and also declared a vacancy and the governor of Wisconsin called a special election, that the calling of this election in itself was notice to all the voters of the fifth district of Wisconsin that Victor Berger was ineligible.

Not only that, but there was the further fact that Mr. Berger had been convicted at Chicago, and that conviction in itself was notice to the voters of the district that he was ineligible. Now, there are two States——

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I do not wish to be understood as defending Mr. Berger, but does the gentleman mean to imply by his remarks that the conviction of Mr. Berger, while an apppeal to the Supreme Court was pending, would ipso facto disqualify him from holding office?

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. In answer I will say that until the appeal is decided the conviction stands as a verity.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I beg to differ with the gentleman. You have a similar case pending now in the Newberry case. The courts have never held that that disqualifies a man. It acts as a supersedeas so long as an appeal is pending.

Mr. PELL. It makes a difference whether he is a Republican or a Socialist.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I do not wish, however, to be understood as defending Mr. Berger.

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. I can cite you decisions which show that such a state of facts creates an ineligibility.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. One other question along that line.

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The only authority that we have for unseating Mr. Berger is not the fact that he was convicted, but a constitutional prerogative given to us that we may judge of who shall sit or shall not sit, whether he is convicted or not.

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. I understand that perfectly, and I think I have made the position clear that the House had declared him ineligible and the voters of the district had notice of that. But there was the further fact of his conviction.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think the gentleman will agree that the courts have held repeatedly that the right of appeal, so called, is merely a privilege. The appeal is not a matter of right. The decision of a nisi prius court is the determination of the case. There may be the privilege of an appeal, but the original decision of a court having full jurisdiction was the termination of the case. When Mr. Berger was convicted he was convicted, but he had a further chance to go before an appellate court.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. So is the franchise a privilege, not a right. The man gets that privilege by compliance with certain laws. But that is not a right; it is a privilege.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DEWALT. Am I correct about this—the fact of the trial and conviction of Mr. Victor Berger has nothing to do with this case?

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. You are correct.

Mr. DEWALT. Second, it is a basic principle that all people are presumed to know the law. Is not that true?

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. It is so declared.

Mr. DEWALT. Now, Congress passed a resolution which is a part of the law of the United States, and immediately upon its passage everybody in the State of Wisconsin, as well as everybody in the United States, is presumed to know that fact?

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. I presume that is correct also.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. But if the higher court had determined that Mr. Berger was not guilty, Mr. Berger would be qualified?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Not in the opinion of Congress.

Mr. EMERSON. Technically he would be qualified to sit in this House, so far as he was concerned.

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. It would depend on the determination of Congress if he was qualified.

Mr. EMERSON. But it is not in our power to reject any man who was qualified at the time of his election.

Mr. PELL. Would you contend that Victor Berger was entitled to sit in Congress until this resolution was repealed, either by this or a future Congress?

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. I do. The situation was this: The Congress having declared him ineligible because of the fact that he had given aid and comfort to the enemies of the country under the provisions of the fourteenth amendment that ineligibility never ceases until such ineligibility is removed by a vote of Congress.

Mr. PELL. But all that we said was that he was ineligible. Our resolution did not suggest any reason.

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. Oh, yes. The resolution declared that he came within the provisions of the fourteenth amendment because he had taken the oath previously, and subsequent to taking the oath he had given aid and comfort to the enemy.

Now, gentlemen of the House, I do not wish to take up more of your time, except to call your attention to this, that, as I stated before, the question before you is entirely a new situation, because it is my belief that the Congress has never in any of the cases had a case where the ineligibility of the candidate was known to the voters.

It is true that in these opinions and in the opinions of many of the courts there is considerable obiter dicta and declarations about what the law is, but it is a well-known fact that expressions of opinion that are unnecessary to the decision in the case in which they are made are merely expressions of opinion and are not law. They may be cited, of course, to argue and to prove your contention, but they are not binding as authority and are obiter dicta.

Now, after Victor Berger was barred from this House he went back to the people of the fifth Wisconsin district, and the issue was whether or not he was eligible to his seat in the House, and he made his campaign upon this basis, and the evidence and the testimony in the case shows that Mr. Bodenstab made the campaign upon the fact that Mr. Berger was ineligible to his seat in the House, so that the issue was very plain.

Now, I do not want to place myself in the position of not conceding that the majority have not the right to govern in this country, but I do take this position: That where the voters have notice of the ineligibility of the candidate they have no right to willfully go about to defeat the law of the land by electing a Member who is disqualified, and the voters of the fifth Wisconsin district knew at this special election that when they cast a vote for Victor Berger that if he received a majority of the votes to the Sixty-sixth Congress the Sixty-sixth Congress would certainly exclude him from membership in the House. Now, I want to read very briefly from just one opinion to show you the situation. It seems to me that the doctrine enunciated in Bancroft against Frear, a Wisconsin case, is entirely applicable to this one. Here is what the court said:

> Elections are held for the purpose of selecting officers, not for the purpose of creating a vacancy to the end that the place may be filled by appointment or even by a new election. The function of the voter is to express an affirmative choice of some person; not to content himself with merely expressing his disapproval of certain candidates. If a vote for a man known by the voter to be dead can be counted, then a vote for a stick or a stone or for the "man in the moon," as said in the English case, should be counted. It is true that in this country the majority rules, but the majority should not pursue a policy of mere negation. If the majority should contumaciously persist in voting for candidates notoriously ineligible, it might not be possible to fill the office at all. The illustration may be somewhat far-fetched, but instances have occurred in England where an ineligible candidate for a member of Parliament received a majority of votes cast at election after election, and such occurrences are by no means impossible in this country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield? I am very much interested in this.

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. That would be true in this case if Berger had been convicted and that conviction had been sustained by the United States Supreme Court. Then he would have been dead so far as his civil rights as a citizen were concerned——

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. So far as the House of Representatives is concerned——

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Let me finish. And the House of Representatives would have been without authority to seat him, for the reason that the Constitution of the United States requires a man to be a citizen of the United States before he can be eligible as a Member here. He would have lost his citizenship by his conviction.

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. But when the House of Representatives declined to give him a seat and declared him ineligible, he was legally dead so far as being eligible to be returned to the House of Representatives was concerned, unless the House of Representatives at some future time should grant to him a manifesto of freedom.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Now, just one more question, and I will not interrupt the gentleman any more. The gentleman does not contend that the resolution that we passed here is law, does he?

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. I certainly do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I think the gentleman is very much mistaken, because a law can not be enacted until it passes both Houses. What we passed here is a resolution affecting the right of a man to a seat in this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DALLINGER. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 10 minutes.

Mr. DALLINGER. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. FREAR. A very important question was raised by the case cited by the gentleman, which question was never determined by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, and I ask the gentleman's opinion on that. Of course, in the case of Tucker, who committed suicide, there was no question but what the people knew it and voted for him intelligently, and the court felt that it was a travesty to canvass that vote. But what would be the situation if only 100 votes had been cast for Bancroft? That is, a scattering and immaterial vote. Would the same theory hold good; the man receiving the majority having died or ceased to be eligible, would the minority candidate, who was in such a hopeless minority, be entitled to take the place?

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. I take this position, that where the ineligibility is notorious, and it must be held that the voters had actual notice of that ineligibility, the size of the vote cuts no figure, because if the majority, knowing the ineligibility, who choose to vote for an ineligible candidate, are in the same position as voters who remain at home. If they will not cast votes that can be counted, then they are in no position to complain that those who go to the polls and vote for an eligible candidate decide the election.

Mr. FREAR. Then a candidate receiving scattering votes would be entitled to the seat if he had the largest number of scattering votes, and if he was eligible?

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. Provided, of course, that there is actual or constructive notice of the ineligibility of the other candidate.

Mr. FREAR. That is conceded. The Supreme Court did not pass on that.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Would not the gentleman be driven to admit that a man receiving only one vote would be entitled to the seat if the other man was assumed to be ineligible?

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. The gentleman understands from his experience that there are many election precincts and many elections where only a very small minority of the voters go to the polls, and so I say that trying to reduce it to the irreducible minimum of one vote makes no difference with the principle involved.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If I may say so to the gentleman, it strikes me as rather astonishing that we should be put in the position that his reasoning could bring him to the conclusion that it might be possible for one voter to select a Representative in Congress.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the gentleman will yield, we had a case in Chicago where I think 50 votes elected a man to the bench as a judge. In a large election he was the only man who got any votes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What was in my mind——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. DALLINGER. I understand I have six minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Seven minutes.

Mr. DALLINGER. I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROSE].

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I was convinced at the conclusion of the hearing before our committee in the contested-election case of Bodenstab against Berger, that it would take up considerable time in this House when the matter was brought before you for determination. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. RANDALL] has presented a minority report which to my mind considers every question in the contest which was raised before the committee during the hearing of the case, and has brought to our attention certain matters that should be carefully considered. The claim is made that the matters submitted in the minority views have never been squarely before the House; with this view I can not agree. I might say that the committee is in entire accord as to the returns made by the several election boards, but the majority of the committee is not willing to recommend the setting aside of the long-established rule of the House.

I want to say that every question the gentleman has raised in the minority views, which accompanies this report, has been considered by the House, and especially were the matters raised by him disposed of in the former election contest in which Victor L. Berger figured. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. RANDALL] deserves the gratitude of the House for the very able report he has filed in this case, and wherein are the reasons upon which he bases his claim for the seating of Mr. Bodenstab as a Member of the House. The whole ground upon which he raises his contention is the fact that the voters of the fifth Wisconsin district knew at the time of the election last November that Victor L. Berger was ineligible to a seat in this House and that, therefore, it was the duty of your committee to punish the voters of the fifth Wisconsin district by setting aside all of the votes cast for Victor L. Berger and recommending the election of Bodenstab, notwithstanding the fact that no claim was made before the committee that there was fraud committed at the election. The election officers performed their duties and there was no charge of fraud against the electors themselves. We are now asked to follow the English rule and seat a man who did not receive a majority of the votes cast, there being but two candidates voted for at the election in November, 1920, in the fifth congressional district of Wisconsin.

We have before us the action by the House in the contested-election case of Carney against Berger, and it will be remembered that notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Berger received a plurality of the votes cast in which Mr. Carney was a candidate, that the House refused to seat Mr. Berger and also denied the right of Mr. Carney to be seated as a Member of the House. This House never has, and in my opinion never will, adopt the English rule, and your committee has followed the long line of precedents in the present case and have recommended that Mr. Bodenstab be denied the right to a seat in the House.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROSE. I will.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that in the contested-election case of Carney against Berger neither any member of the Elections Committee nor any Member of the House insisted that Carney was entitled to be seated?

Mr. ROSE. The gentleman is entirely right. The committee did bring in a report that Berger was ineligible and that Carney did not have a right to a seat in the House for the reason that he did not receive a plurality of the votes cast in the election in which they were candidates. This House and this committee would stultify itself by concluding in the one case that Carney was not entitled to his seat and in another case of like kind conclude that Bodenstab would be entitled to a seat simply for the reason that the conduct of Mr. Berger was more widely known.

In the present contested-election case every member of the committee, including the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. RANDALL, who presented the minority views, agree that all of the voters in the fifth election district of Wisconsin knew that Victor L. Berger was not eligible to occupy a seat in this House.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROSE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. My colleague does not mean to insist that a man must have a majority of votes cast to get a seat in Congress.

Mr. ROSE. Oh, no; a man may secure a seat in Congress by a plurality of votes, as there might be quite a number of candidates and no candidate have a majority of the votes cast.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. That would be governed by the State from which he came.

Mr. ROSE. That is true in many instances, although the House has entire control of its membership.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Would not a plurality be sufficient if the votes of Berger had been divided?

Mr. ROSE. Oh, certainly. A plurality of votes is sufficient where there are more than two candidates, but in the case of Carney against Berger and in the case of Bodenstab against Berger neither of the contestants received a majority or plurality of the votes cast in the several elections. The committee does not see its way clear to break away from the established rules of the House, and therefore ask you to adopt the resolution offered by the chairman in the report filed by him.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. RANDALL] for the sole purpose of offering a substitute.

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following substitute:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Henry H. Bodenstab was duly elected a Member of Congress from the fifth congressional district of Wisconsin to the Sixty-sixth Congress on the 19th day of December, 1919, and that he is entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives as such Representative.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I think that this matter has been discussed a sufficient length of time, and I move the previous question on the original resolution and the substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LONGWORTH). The gentleman from Massachusetts moves the previous question on the resolution and substitute.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. RANDALL of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of no quorum, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seven Members present; not a quorum; the Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 8, nays 304, answered "present" 1, not voting 115, as follows:

So the substitute resolution was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. ANDREWS of Maryland with Mr. BENSON.

Mr. MADDEN with Mr. FLOOD.

Mr. WALSH with Mr. MONTAGUE.

Mr. MASON with Mr. GARRETT.

Mr. MAGEE with Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana with Mr. RUCKER.

Mr. RODENBERG with Mr. MCANDREWS.

Mr. DYER with Mr. MAJOR.

Mr. CANNON with Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana.

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island with Mr. UPSHAW.

Mr. HARRELD with Mr. LEE of Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois with Mr. ASHBROOK.

Mr. VOIGT with Mr. HERSMAN.

Mr. SANDERS of New York with Mr. MOONEY.

Mr. WOODYARD with Mr. LARSEN.

Mr. RIDDICK with Mr. NEELY.

Mr. ANDERSON with Mr. WISE.

Mr. JUUL with Mr. CANDLER.

Mr. CROWTHER with Mr. NICHOLLS.

Mr. GOODALL with Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania with Mr. CAREW.

Mr. REED of New York with Mr. BARKLEY.

Mr. DUNBAR with Mr. CLEARY.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota with Mr. SABATH.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan with Mr. RIORDAN.

Mr. STEENERSON with Mr. DOOLING.

Mr. MCCULLOCH with Mr. HASTINGS.

Mr. JAMES of Michigan with Mr. JOHNSTON of New York.

Mr. ELSTON with Mr. GANDY.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DALLINGER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the House receded from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 151 and concurred in the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa calls up the conference report upon the sundry civil appropriation bill and asks unanimous consent that the House reconsider the vote by which it receded from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 151 and concurred in the same. Is there objection?

Mr. MCCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the amendment?

Mr. GOOD. An error was made by the Clerk in figuring up the totals in two different amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 151.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that the House reconsider the vote by which it receded from disagreement to Senate amendment No. 152 and concurred in the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the House reconsider the vote by which it receded from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 152 and concurred in the same. Is there objection?

Mr. MCCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this a similar amendment?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MCCLINTIC. Errors in figures?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment No. 152.

The motion was agreed to.

OMNIBUS PENSION BILLS—CONFERENCE REPORTS.

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 7775) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the conference report.

(For conference report see pp. 1052–1053, House proceedings, RECORD of January 6, 1921.)

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to adopt the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 9281) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the conference report.

(For conference report see pp. 1050–1052, House proceedings, RECORD of January 6, 1921.)

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 10515) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the conference report.

(For conference report see pp. 1053–1054, House proceedings, RECORD of January 6, 1921.)

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 11554) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the conference report.

(For conference report see pp. 1054–1056, House proceedings, RECORD of January 6, 1921.)

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. RICKETTS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SELLS. Yes.

Mr. RICKETTS. How many of these bills have been pending in the Senate since the last session of Congress adjourned?

Mr. SELLS. None of them have been pending in the Senate.

Mr. RICKETTS. I mean in the Senate committee. How many were held up there since the last session of Congress?

Mr. SELLS. A conference was asked for in the closing days of the second session. They have been held up until recently, when the conferees got together.

Mr. RICKETTS. How many pensions allowed in those bills by the House were cut out on account of the provisions in the Sells bill and the Fuller bill?

Mr. SELLS. Practically all of the bill that were eliminated by the Senate were, by reason of the passage of the act of June 5, 1920, which took care, as the gentleman knows, of all the disabled Spanish War soldiers.

Mr. RICKETTS. Many pensions that were allowed to soldiers and widows and their dependents by the House have been cut out and people who were entitled to those pensions will have to wait until the matter can be heard in the department before many of them are granted. Is not that true?

Mr. SELLS. As a matter of fact, I assume that a great majority of these claimants who had special bills pending have filed their application for pension long ago and will get a pension beginning from the date of the filing of the application?

Mr. RICKETTS. That will be true if they are filed; but if they are not filed they will not get a pension until the filing and it will date from the date of filing.

Mr. SELLS. No.

Mr. RICKETTS. Well, I am not criticizing the gentleman at all. I think the gentleman has done everything possible to hurry the bills along, but I do criticize the method in which pension claims have been handled in the Senate. It seems to me they wait too long over there and many of my constituents granted pensions by this House have died before the Senate would give consideration. I do not think that is fair to the people of the country who are entitled to pensions and which have been granted in the House.

Mr. SELLS. The gentleman is not trying to hold us responsible?

Mr. RICKETTS. I am not; I exonerate the gentleman from all blame.

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was adopted.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS, COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire recognition for the presentation of some privileged reports. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this resolution, which was not reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 692.

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ such additional clerks as may be necessary during the remainder of this session of Congress, the payment of services not to exceed $200, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual perfunctory resolution, and I move its adoption.

The question was taken, and the resolution was adopted.

GERTRUDE I. JEMISON.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the privileged resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 685.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Gertrude I. Jemison, clerk to the late Hon. FRED L. BLACKMON, a Representative in Congress from Alabama at the time of his death, February 8, 1921, the sum of $186.66, being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk of a Representative in Congress.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

On page 1, line 6, after the figures "186.66," strike out "being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk of a Representative in Congress" and insert: "And Hugh B. Fitzgerald, also clerk to the late Hon. Fred L. Blackmon, the sum of $120, these amounts being equal to one month's salary drawn by each as such clerk," so that the amended resolution will read:

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Gertrude I. Jemison, clerk to the late Hon. Fred L. Blackmon, a Representative in Congress from Alabama at the time of his death, February 8, 1921, the sum of $166.66, and Hugh B. Fitzgerald, also clerk to the late Hon. Fred L. Blackmon, the sum of $120, these sums being equal to one month's salary drawn by each as such clerks."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This amounts to over $300 a month. So that includes the bonus?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes, sir. Both the names and the amounts were verified by the Clerk.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That would include the bonus?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ERNEST WOLF.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration of the privileged resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 668.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Ernest Wolf, brother of August G. Wolf, late an employee of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months of his compensation as such employee, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray the expenses of the funeral of said August G. Wolf.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In line 2, after the word "to," strike out the words "Ernest Wolf, brother" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the estate," so that it will read:

"Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to the estate of August G. Wolf, etc."

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

PRINCE L. BOOHER.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 666.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Prince L. Booher the sum of $228.33 and to H. M. Booher the sum of $78.33, the same being the amount received by them per month as clerks to the late Charles F. Booher, a Representative in Congress from Missouri at the time of his death, January 21, 1921.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

B. E. MOORE.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer another privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 652.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to B. E. Moore the sum of $585, being compensation at the rate of $65 per month from September 1, 1919, to May 31, 1920, inclusive, for services rendered in the file room of the House under direction of the Clerk.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to B. E. Moore the sum of $300, being compensation from September 1, 1919, to May 31, 1920, inclusive, for additional services rendered in the file room of the House under direction of the Clerk.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was provoked by the fact that a young man in the employ of the Sixty-fifth Congress in the file room was retained over in the Sixty-sixth, but could secure no patronage to continue. In the Sixty-fifth Congress he was drawing $1,500 a year, or some like amount, and was reduced to $60 a month. It was deemed necessary by the Clerk of the House to retain his services to instruct the new employees, and the Clerk of the House promised the young man that he would try to secure compensation for the additional services rendered, due to his reduced remuneration. This resolution is the result of our anxiety to sustain the Clerk in his attitude.

The committee, on the recommendation of the Clerk, reduced the amount, as the amendment indicates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee substitute.

The substitute was agreed to.

The resolution as amended by the substitute was agreed to.

THOMAS F. FARRELL.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer another privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers another privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 686.

Resolved, That Thomas F. Farrell be appointed special messenger to serve in and about the House, under the direction of the Doorkeeper, at a salary of $1,180 per year, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided for.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

After the comma at the end of line 3, insert the words: "in lieu of the amount he is now receiving."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

OIL PORTRAIT OF FORMER SPEAKER THEODORE M. POMEROY.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer another privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 389.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized and directed to engage an artist of reputation and ability to paint an oil portrait of the late Hon. Theodore M. Pomeroy, of New York, former Speaker of the House of Representatives in the Fortieth Congress, and to place same in the Speaker's Lobby, at a cost not to exceed $2,000, which sum shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it appears that in the Fortieth Congress Mr. Speaker Schuyler Colfax, of Indiana, resigned his office as Speaker on March 3, 1869, and a successor was elected, namely, Mr. Speaker Theodore Pomeroy, of New York. The reason for it no doubt was found in that former Speaker Colfax had been elected Vice President of the United States and had certain duties to perform preliminary to taking that office, and Mr. Pomeroy, of New York, was elected to fill the unexpired term. A committee informed the President and the Senate of his election, and all requirements of a regular election of a Speaker were complied with. It appears that, due to the short time that he was in office, the traditions of the House were not followed, and that Mr. Pomeroy's portrait does not appear in the Speaker's lobby. Under an anxiety to do justice to all who have so served and so well served this House, the committee felt that the House would not desire to violate any of its traditions in this matter, and so reported this resolution favorably.

I have an arrangement with the chairman of the Committee on the Library whereby he has agreed not to grant this commission or make a charge upon the contingent fund of the House until near the close of the coming session of Congress. So an apparent extravagance will not deplete our contingent fund when we are so pressed as we are at present.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. This distinguished Speaker served one day. Is that the fact?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. He served from the 3d of March to the 4th of March?

Mr. IRELAND. I believe that is computable.

Mr. BLANTON. And we have a distinguished Member of the House who during the absence of our present Speaker served very faithfully and ably—the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. He served probably several weeks of time. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that this resolution is not privileged in coming from the Committee on Accounts. This is not under the rules of the House a privileged resolution.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I submit it is clearly a privileged resolution, and draws from the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a matter of legislation.

Mr. IRELAND. I submit the gentleman's argument seems quite unsound, but I admire the compliment he has paid to our colleague from Massachusetts; but, unfortunately, the cases are not parallel, for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has not as yet been elected Speaker. He has served as a substitute. Mr. Pomeroy was elected.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This portrait, of course, is not to be painted from life. I think we have made appropriations several times for painting of portraits from life of recent Speakers. On the other hand, a few years ago we provided for the portraits of Speakers who were not living, at an expense not to exceed $500 for each portrait. Those portraits are in the lobby. Now, just what is the theory of the Committee on Accounts, the Library Committee, or any other committee, proposing now to pay $2,000 for a portrait to be painted from a likeness of some kind of a man who served one day as Speaker, when we would only appropriate $500 to paint a portrait from a likeness of men who served from one to four full terms as Speaker? Is the excess because the man served for so short a time?

Mr. IRELAND. I submit that there was no question that he was both de facto and de jure Speaker, and as such merits this consideration.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Did the committee take into consideration the fact that Congress had limited these amounts for the painting of portraits from likenesses to $500 heretofore, or was it not informed of that fact?

Mr. IRELAND. I will answer the gentleman by offering an amendment. I offer an amendment striking out the figures "$2,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. IRELAND: In line 7 of the resolution strike out "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the amendment making the sum $500.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MANN of Illinois offers to amend the amendment by striking out "$1" and inserting in lieu thereof "$500."

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want just about two minutes.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am a member of the Committee on Accounts. Through no fault of the chairman, I was not present when this resolution was considered. If I had been, I would not have voted for it. I do not favor this resolution. At most, the person who was honored as Speaker for one day was only technically entitled to the distinction represented by this appropriation. I do not believe that the Committee on Accounts ought to assume jurisdiction to pay $2,000, or any other sum—$500, according to this amendment.

But this is an unusual case. I think it ought to go to the appropriating committee, say in the sundry civil bill or some other bill, or in a special bill to come before the House, reported from the Committee on the Library or some other committee.

I do not believe that where a Speaker served away back yonder, years and years ago—50 or 60 or 70 years ago—we ought to spend $2,000 to have his portrait painted, or $500; and I do not believe that we ought to act favorably upon the report of this committee for any sum. I think this resolution was considered, either formally or informally, at some prior time; I do not recollect just when. I was not present with the committee when this resolution was reported out. If I had been, as I have said, I would not have voted for it. I do not think we are justified at this time in voting this sum of money without some previous consideration by the Committee on the Library or some other committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. BEE. This gentleman who is to be honored with the painting served one day under an election as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. IRELAND. He was not elected Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. BEE. How was he elected?

Mr. IRELAND. As any other Speaker.

Mr. BEE. Is there any other instance in the history of this country where any other man served only 1 day or 5 or 10 days?

Mr. IRELAND. I think there was. I think ex-Speaker CLARK could recite them from memory, but I do not know who they were. I would not be positive about that.

Mr. BEE. If we authorize this, will we not be opening the door for the portraits of all those gentlemen in the dark and distant past, so that instead of this being a mark of distinction for gentlemen to have their memories perpetuated in that way it would be commonized, so to speak, by having the portraits of men hanging there who simply temporarily filled those places? Would it not be a serious and dangerous precedent if we voted this amount?

Mr. IRELAND. It is my belief, and I have been so informed, that all other Speakers of the past have been so honored, and the custom still continues. This is the only exception. That is my understanding, but I would not be positive of it.

Mr. BEE. Does the gentleman recall that out in the lobby there are portraits of gentlemen who served as Speaker only for one day?

Mr. IRELAND. No; I would not say that. I believe that the portraits of all the Speakers who served in this House have been painted, with this single exception.

Mr. BEE. Are there not many who served who are not out there?

Mr. IRELAND. I would not say many. There may be some.

Mr. BEE. We would have to put them all there in order to be consistent.

Mr. IRELAND. I am sure it was the thought of the committee, whether we do it or not, that between ourselves—the membership of this House—we are supposed to grant to each other a certain courtesy, and certainly an additional courtesy to all our officers of the House, and I should not want to believe this House as a whole would be less desirous of honoring one of the distinguished Speakers who had passed to the great beyond than a living one.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, under clause 5 of Rule XX, I make the point of order that this resolution, which is now on the Speaker's table and under consideration, is legislation carrying an appropriation. It is not the kind of an appropriation that the Committee on Accounts is authorized to recommend. It is a matter of legislation that ought to go to a legislative committee, and the appropriation should be provided for by the regular Committee on Appropriations, it being legislation pure and simple. It is not a matter that is ordinarily paid for out of the contingent fund of the House. This is a matter that occurred back in the Fortieth Congress, over 50 years ago. I submit the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to the point of order.

Mr. IRELAND. Absolutely nothing.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The rule expressly provides that all payments out of the contingent fund go to the Committee on Accounts. They can report in the purchase of a portrait or anything else.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose the Committee on Accounts should bring in a resolution here to paint a portrait at $2,000 for each Member of the House and adorn the walls of this Chamber, out of the contingent fund.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It would be in order, but——

Mr. IRELAND. Such a foolish proposition would probably be voted down, and properly so; yet it would be privileged and in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How does it happen that this matter has not heretofore been brought to the attention of Congress or heretofore been pressed upon the attention of the committee?

Mr. IRELAND. I can not say. It was presented to the chairman of the Committee on the Library and they brought it to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that efforts have been made from time to time in the past to get through a resolution of this kind?

Mr. IRELAND. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I thought that had been brought out some time ago.

Mr. IRELAND. The gentleman has the advantage of me if that be true. I do not know.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Have we not spent over $500 worth of time on this matter now?

Mr. IRELAND. I think so.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Let us vote, then.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not think this resolution ought to be passed at all. If it is passed, the amount ought to be reduced. It is not a matter of right on the part of the Speaker to have his portrait hung in the lobby. It is a matter of pleasure on the part of the House to honor a Speaker by doing that.

But this Speaker was only nominally a Speaker, to the extent of signing the last documents on the last day of the session. I do not know at what time of the day he was elected on March 3, but at the end of the March 3 legislative day he was no longer Speaker.

I can see no reason why we should set the precedent. If we do that we shall be called upon next to hang in the lobby portraits of all the Speakers pro tempore who served much longer throughout all the years of Congress. It is no reflection on a man not to do it, and there is no reason why it should be done. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] making the amount $500.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] to make the amount $1.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, may I have just a moment on that? This amendment appears foolish, but I know what I am talking about. This is the way to make the resolution still privileged, and yet not create so great a charge against the contingent fund. I am speaking with authority, and I have no further explanation to make.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman mean that some private arrangement has been made to pay the cost of the portrait?

Mr. IRELAND. The gentleman can draw his own conclusion.

Mr. FESS. Does this come from the Library Committee of the House?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes; from the chairman, who introduced the resolution.

Mr. FESS. It is the first time I have heard anything about it.

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman desire to have this amendment passed?

Mr. IRELAND. I certainly do.

Mr. KING. Then I shall vote for it.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I assume that this simply means in effect that it becomes a resolution that the House accept the portrait and give authority to hang it in the lobby with the portraits of the other Speakers. If that is the case, why not let that proposition be put up to us, rather than this resolution in this form?

Mr. IRELAND. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that this is the usual form. The resolution was reported carrying the amount that has usually been appropriated, and I did not know whether it would meet with approval of the House or not; and if the House does not feel inclined to accord to this man's memory the same privilege that has been accorded to others, because of the short time he served, this is an easy way out of the difficulty.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment reducing the amount to $1.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. IRELAND) there were—ayes 61, noes 58.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. IRELAND) there were—ayes 54, noes 83.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of no quorum present. I think we ought to have a record vote.

Mr. IRELAND. I ask for tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Well, I will make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of no quorum present. The Chair thinks there is no quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the resolution. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 149, nays 145, answered "present" 1, not voting 133, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. IRELAND, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

H. M. VANDERVOORT.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I call up House resolution 662.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House resolution 662.

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House $1,200 to H. M. Vandervort for extra and expert services to the Committee on Invalid Pensions from June 6 to December 5, 1920, and during the third session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, as assistant clerk to said committee, by detail from the Bureau of Pensions, pursuant to law.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, if these well-designed raids on the Treasury seem too numerous, I respectfully invite your attention to the fact that they are the accumulation of almost the entire session, and that I have not transgressed on your time hitherto save in very necessary instances, and then, I think, only twice. I make that explanation because I have a good many matters here, and they may seem on account of their number possibly excessive.

This is the usual resolution granted in favor of the pension examiner of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It has been the custom in the past to grant them additional amount of compensation for the services rendered to the two pension committees of the House. I observe in the last committee report when the last appropriation was made that we predicted that for the short session the compensation would be $800. It was the thought of the committee, substantiated and supported by the chairmen of the pension committees, that the work had been so heavy that they were entitled to additional compensation of $1,200, and so the resolution was ordered reported.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

WAYNE W. CORDELL.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I call up House resolution 660.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 660.

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House $1,200 to Wayne W. Cordell for extra and expert services to the Committee on Pensions from June 6 to December 5, 1920, and during the third session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, as assistant clerk to said committee, by detail from the Bureau of Pensions, pursuant to law.

Mr. IRELAND. This is a similar resolution for expert services to the Committee on Pensions.

The resolution was agreed to.

THOMAS M. HOLT AND JAMES KENAH.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 395.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided by law, to Thomas M. Holt and James Kenah, majority and minority messengers in charge of telephones, respectively, the sum of $500 each per annum, payable monthly, as additional compensation.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out "$500" and insert "$360."

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I voted against this resolution in my committee, both for the amendment and the original resolution, but was outvoted. Ordinarily I should feel inclined to bring in a minority report, but I am one of those old-fashioned Republicans who does not know the difference between a caucus and a conference, and I love to be bound by the majority, and so I shall stand by my committee and their vote for the resolution.

The only objection is that you are advancing the telephone operators to the point in salary that many clerks of committees receive, and placing them on a par. In this instance you are voting for men rather than for positions, and it seems a dangerous precedent to set. If anything detrimental could be said against the recipients of these salaries it would be quite a different thing, but nothing but commendable things can be said of Mr. Holt, and I am sure that the same thing may be said of the other employee. If there are any faithful men who religiously and conscientiously, at all hours, serve the Members well it is the men referred to in this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

TELEPHONE PAGES.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 615.

Resolved, That the salaries of the two pages employed at the telephone booths of the House be $1,200 per annum: Provided, That the said salaries be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives until otherwise provided by law, and said increase to become effective from the beginning of the third session of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "law" strike out the comma, insert a period, and strike out all of the remainder of the resolution, lines 5 and 6, so that the resolution will read:

"Resolved, That the salaries of the two pages employed at the telephone booths of the House be $1,200 per annum: Provided, That the said salaries be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives until otherwise provided for by law."

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, to be consistent, this resolution should be passed just as well as the one preceding it. These are two pages assigned to the cloakrooms for telephone service, and it creates only a very small additional charge upon the contingent fund. It simply raises their pay a trifle over that of the ordinary pages.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

EXTERMINATION OF INSECTS.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I present also the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 617.

Resolved, That the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make a contract for the extermination and banishment of insects from the House wing of the Capitol and the House Office Building at an expenditure not to exceed $1,700, payment to be made monthly from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers countersigned by the Superintendent of the Capitol and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this was introduced at the request of the Superintendent of the Capitol, and I think needs no comment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

AUGUST BUEHXE AND OTHERS.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 518.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House $500 to August Buehne for extra services rendered the Members of the House of Representatives during the year 1920, as employee detailed from the Government Printing Office.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out all after the word "Resolution" and insert:

"Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House $200 to each of the following-named employees, detailed from the Government Printing Office to the House of Representatives: August N. Buehne, William S. Smith, Harry A. Gwin, Benjamin F. Dorsey, Martin J. McAndrews, Martin F. McNamara, and Chester S. White, for extra services rendered to Members of the House of Representatives during the Sixty-sixth Congress in delivering to the Members the various pamphlets and other printed matter sent out by the Government departments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Is this the usual resolution?

Mr. IRELAND. I would say to the gentleman from Mississippi that it is not. These men are all detailed from the Government Printing Office and serve the Members of the House and sometimes the Members of the Senate. They work back and forth, as their duties seem to demand. There was one man who importuned the late lamented Dr. Foster regularly to get an additional payment each Congress, and the doctor's successor, Mr. BROOKS. An investigation by the committee showed that there were other men just as much entitled to this extra compensation as he. Their basic pay is about $950 a year, I believe.

Mr. SISSON. They get $240 as a bonus, and this is an extra compensation of $200.

Mr. IRELAND. That is correct.

Mr. TILSON. What services do they render to the Members of Congress?

Mr. IRELAND. They deliver all of the literature to the Members of both Houses.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is that a service? [Laughter.]

Mr. IRELAND. It is questionable in my mind. We were waited on by several Members of the House, who very vociferously so assured us and demanded that this compensation be given them, and they insisted that the service rendered was a valuable one to the Members. We can all agree that the basic pay is very low.

Mr. TILSON. I thought enough publications were delivered to us through the mail without having special-delivery messengers dump these things on us.

Mr. IRELAND. I do not use them myself, so I can not say.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, as I recollect, this thing commenced when Dr. Foster got some extra pay for one man.

Mr. IRELAND. That is correct. He did that several times.

Mr. SISSON. Yes. Now, at the beginning, one man happened to do some meritorious service and it shows how this thing goes. That is why I call the attention of the chairman to this roll. Now, I did not count them, but I believe there are eight——

Mr. IRELAND. No; seven.

Mr. SISSON. I tried to keep it in my mind, but perhaps I was not accurate. Now, these seven men, in my opinion, are not rendering any service that would justify a detail of that many men from the Government Printing Office. Of course, I understand that if they deliver all of the matter they perhaps will be pretty busy.

Mr. IRELAND. They are all under the direction of the clerk in charge of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. He thought they did additional work. Personally, I believe the practice is deplorable and ought not to be indulged in.

Mr. SISSON. It is deplorable.

Mr. IRELAND. I fought this off as long and as hard as I could and I served notice on the several attorneys, Members of this House, who appeared for these men, that so long as the Committee on Accounts was so constituted as it is at the present time, that this would be the last depredation that will occur.

Mr. SISSON. Well——

Mr. IRELAND. I give that as my opinion and not that of the committee.

Mr. SISSON. I think it is a very bad precedent by Dr. Foster, and as much as I love him I did not like it at the time, and this just shows what one swallow will do.

Mr. IRELAND. And what it leads to.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. I will.

Mr. KING. Are these messengers serving all the Members of the House or a few Members of the House?

Mr. IRELAND. I think they are serving all of them, or so intend to do.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. I will.

Mr. HICKS. There was so much confusion I know I for one have not been able to find out what these men do. Where do they bring this stuff from and where do they take it?

Mr. IRELAND. From the Government Printing Office to the offices of Members. Much of the pamphlets and printed matter, hearings, and everything of that sort you receive at your office is brought there and delivered by these men.

Mr. LANGLEY. What are their salaries?

Mr. IRELAND. Nine hundred and fifty dollars I believe, or near that.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is not enough.

Mr. HICKS. Why does it not come through the mail?

Mr. IRELAND. I think that would be an unreasonable additional tax on our post office and I do not know that it is practical or economical.

Mr. HICKS. It is cheaper.

Mr. IRELAND. Oh, yes; decidedly.

Mr. PARRISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Gladly.

Mr. PARRISH. I might here state, in connection with the bill introduced for these men, that they are detailed from the Government Printing Office and placed under the charge of Mr. Smith, who has charge of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and by reason of the fact they are so detailed it is not within the power of the officer of the Government Printing Office to increase their salaries with the increase of salaries of those who are directly under him. They, being under Mr. Smith, can not be given the increase of salaries which are given to the employees regularly under the Government Printing Office. It is said that some of these men have been working for the Government for 25 or 30 years, and their salaries are only about $950, not including the bonus. It was thought by the Committee on Accounts that there is an inequality in the salary of these men. It was stated by Mr. Smith, who came before the committee personally, that these men did hard manual labor and that every one of them is kept busy all the time, and their services are very necessary for the carrying on of the work of the House; and our committee felt, in view of the fact that their salaries were not kept up with the employees in the Government Printing Office, it would be but just and right to allow these men some little increase so as to enable them to meet their obligations and take care of their families. It was stated that practically all of them had families, and some of them five and six in a family. Men who have been working for the Government for 25 and 30 years and getting a basic salary of about $950 are entitled to justice, at least, at the hands of Congress, and we could hardly do less than to give the $200 provided in this bill.

Mr. IRELAND. I wish to say in addition to what my colleague has so ably stated that some of these men suffer a loss of a dollar a day, or such a matter, by being detailed up there.

Mr. SISSON. I have no objection to these gentlemen getting their salaries increased by the $200. But I do not think salaries should be fixed in this way, nor do I feel because they are detailed that necessarily they lose their status in the Government Printing Office. I do not think the conclusion reached is the real, actual fact. But it shows the wickedness of detail. The Committee on Appropriations has made every effort in the departments of the Government to do away with this. We have to fight off the question of detail all the time. You never know how many employees we have. If these men are detailed to the House and Senate they ought to go off the printing roll and be on the contingent roll of the two Houses. Then we would know exactly what we are doing. It is utterly impossible to keep track of these things when you detail men. The trouble is that a certain Member of Congress will go down and get a man detailed to do certain work, and he comes up here after a number of years and complains about it. It is a bad precedent and a bad system that I am complaining about. I am not complaining about the extra $200.

Mr. BARBOUR. May I ask the gentleman whether these employees are those that come to the Office Building and bang down a big bundle of papers at your door—newspapers, and so forth?

Mr. IRELAND. I presume so.

Mr. BARBOUR. If they are, we ought to eliminate them. Every few days somebody comes down the hall over there and throws a big bundle of papers down in front of the door.

Mr. IRELAND. What kind of papers?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The distribution to which the gentleman from California refers is made by the pages. Every week they bring the RECORD through the corridors and, instead of laying it on the table in the Member's room, they slam it on the floor in front of the door.

Mr. BARBOUR. Whoever they are, they ought to be eliminated altogether.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would like to know what they deliver. I have never seen them.

Mr. IRELAND. Printed matter.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. From where?

Mr. IRELAND. From the Government Printing Office, such as hearings of committees and things of that sort.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Do they deliver matter that comes from the folding room?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I was under the impression that the employees of the folding room delivered the stuff coming through the folding room. It does not come directly from the Government Printing Office?

Mr. IRELAND. No.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I know of nothing that the Members receive directly from the Printing Office.

Mr. IRELAND. I think these men deliver matter from the folding room as well.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Now, we ought to know that, because I do not know of anything else they could possibly do. If they are not connected with the folding room and do not deliver the stuff that comes out of the folding room, what is it they deliver?

Mr. IRELAND. I get none of it myself, but I know that when I was in the House Office Building great truck loads were passing all the time going somewhere.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is stuff coming from the folding room to the Members' offices, and, as I understand, is delivered by employees of the folding room. It is barely possible that these employees deliver Members' speeches to the folding room from the Printing Office, but they do not come to any Member's office. I would like somebody who knows what they do to tell us what it is, because I have never seen them.

Mr. IRELAND. I do not know where they come from or where they go. We only know from the superintendent who has charge there that they are busy in the discharge of their duties, ofttimes at night as well as their regular hours.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. I can locate one of these gentlemen, I think. One of them is Mr. Buehne, who is inside of the House Office Building on the first floor, and who has charge of the little room where printing, stationery, and stuff comes for Members, and he delivers it. He is there from about 8 o'clock in the morning to sometimes after dark at night. I have seen him there.

Mr. IRELAND. Personally, I am not very anxious to find or locate any of them. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 15935) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 233. Joint resolution giving consent of the Congress of the United States to the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Nebraska, or any two or more of said States, to agree upon the jurisdiction to be exercised by said States over boundary waters between any two or more of said States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 4694. An act for the relief of Samuel H. Dolbear; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 4511. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a right of way over certain Government lands to the State of Oregon for the Columbia River Highway; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 4352. An act authorizing the Indians residing on or belonging to the Turtle Mountain Reservation, N. Dak., to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 4186. An act to authorize the Broadwater Irrigation District, a Montana organization, to construct a dam across the Missouri River; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 4159. An act for the relief of dispossessed allotted Indians of the Nisqually Reservation, Wash.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 3129. An act for the relief of Louisa Frow; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2838. An act for the relief of Philip S. Everest; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 2340. An act for the relief of Richard Parke; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. J. Res. 229. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to investigate the claims of private parties to the Mariveles quarry within the limits of a United States military reservation in the Philippine Islands, and to permit the working thereof by the persons entitled thereto, provided military necessities permit; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4991. An act for the relief of Kristina Furjak; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 4865. An act fixing the taxable status of lands received in exchange for lands formerly embraced in the grants to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. and the Coos Bay Wagon Road Co.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 4889. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish free transportation and subsistence from Europe to the United States for certain destitute discharged soldiers and their wives and children; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4992. An act for the relief of William E. Lewis; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 4645. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close upper Water Street, between Twenty-first and Twenty-second Streets NW.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15682. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922;

H. R. 1300. An act for the relief of Alfred E. Lewis;

H. R. 15662. An act to extend temporarily the time for filing applications for letters patent, for taking actions in the United States Patent Office with respect thereto, for the reviving and reinstatement of applications for letters patent, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13402. An act for the purchase of land occupied by experiment vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif.;

H. R. 15872. An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922; and

H. R. 1856. An act for the relief of Arthur J. Burdick.

CONTINGENT FUND OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 416) repealing a limitation upon expenditures from the contingent fund of the House for certain supplies.

Resolved, etc., That the following provision in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved July 16, 1914 (38 Stat., p. 462), be, and the same is hereby, repealed, namely:

"Hereafter it shall be unlawful for the Clerk of the House to pay out of any moneys of the House of Representatives any bills for laundry, furniture, supplies, or utensils used in the barber shops of the House Office Building or the House side of the Capitol."

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is not a privileged resolution.

Mr. IRELAND. It is not a privileged resolution, and I asked unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama objects.

Mr. IRELAND. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will reserve it.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this seems to be a charge on the contingent fund. As a matter of fact, it is an effort to work economy, to repair chairs in the several barber shops that the Members of the House patronize—chairs which have fallen into bad repair. Several Members have fallen out of them and some of them have been slightly injured. [Laughter.] Very soon new furniture will have to be purchased if these repairs are not made.

The Clerk of the House and the disbursing officer have established a repair shop, which is doing wonderful work. Much of the furniture which you think is new about the Capitol is restored furniture. These chairs and other furniture about the barber shops might be repaired and put in good condition at a slight expense, thus avoiding the expense incident to the purchase of new furniture, if it were not for the existing law. That occurred through the peeve of some Member, who hung it on an appropriation bill as a rider. That is the whole intent of the resolution.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. A session or two ago there was an effort made to require the barbers in the barber shops to pay for the laundering of their own towels and to furnish their own barber utensils, the feeling being that when we furnish the water and furnish the chairs and furnish the shops free of charge that is all that is necessary. The proposition contained in this resolution will simply enable the barbers, who are paid by the Members and other people who patronize them, to get that laundry done at the expense of the House. So far as the repairing of this furniture is concerned, there is no reason why that can not be done now without any resolution, because all the other furniture around the Capitol is being repaired now. So this resolution simply enables these barbers to have their laundering done at the expense of the House.

Mr. SNELL. Are these barbers on the pay rolls of the House?

Mr. IRELAND. I understand they are, as laborers.

Mr. SNELL. We pay them for their work in the barber shop, and they are paid in addition to that.

Mr. IRELAND. I believe they are on the rolls as laborers.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact that they do work as laborers?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. They get paid by the House, and we pay them. In that way they get double pay.

Mr. KING. The House does not pay them for their work as barbers, but for the work they do as laborers.

Mr. SNELL. How much work do they really do?

Mr. IRELAND. I do not know. I have not followed them around to see.

Mr. SNELL. I did not know but the gentleman knew something about it.

Mr. IRELAND. They have certain duties about the House. They clean the Hall of the House.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me if we are paying them for their work as barbers, and if they are carried on the pay roll, they should at least pay for their own laundering.

Mr. KING. Does not the linen in the barber shop belong to the Government?

Mr. IRELAND. That is my impression.

Mr. KING. Why should the barbers pay for washing the Government's linen?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Without discussing the merits of the proposed change in the law, how does the gentleman justify legislation coming from his committee? Does not the gentleman think it is bad practice for his committee to be proposing changes in the law?

Mr. IRELAND. I presume that is a proper criticism, though the Committee on Accounts is not prohibited from submitting legislative measures. It may be presumptuous——

Mr. HUDDLESTON. We have a number of committees here which are engaged in dealing with subjects of that kind, which come within their jurisdiction.

Mr. IRELAND. The gentleman can follow his own judgment about the matter.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I hoped the gentleman would have some information that would indicate to me that this was not a proper case for an objection.

Mr. IRELAND. The gentleman must understand that the Committee on Accounts has to introduce a good many resolutions at the request of the employees of the House. Now, the Committee on Accounts is not running around to see that every wastebasket is emptied or that every laborer does his full duty in every little detail. We place confidence in the employees of the House in charge of such matters, and a reasonable request from them should not meet with disfavor.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But the committee would not give countenance to a request which was beyond its jurisdiction, and it seems to me a request to recommend a change in the law is beyond the jurisdiction of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. IRELAND. This resolution was referred to the Committee on Accounts. We did not question the Speaker's judgment in so referring it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I think I will have to insist on my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama objects. Has the gentleman from Illinois anything further to present?

Mr. IRELAND. No.

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President, which was read and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Pursuant to the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to repeal the joint resolution entitled 'Joint resolution to authorize the President in time of war to supervise or take possession and assume control of any telegraph, telephone, marine cable, or radio system or systems, or any part thereof, and to operate the same in such manner as may be needful or desirable for the duration of the war, and to provide just compensation therefor,' approved July 16, 1918, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919, I am transmitting herewith a report made by Albert S. Burleson, Postmaster General of the United States, supplementing the report of October 31, 1919, and giving a final account and report of the financial operations of the telephone and telegraph systems by the United States during the period beginning August 1, 1918, and ending July 31, 1919, and of the expenditures from the appropriation in the act approved June 5, 1920, reading as follows:

For payment of the deficit incurred in the operation of the telegraph and telephone systems during the period of Government control and to carry out the provisions of the joint resolution approved July 16, 1918, and the act approved July 11, 1919, with reference to just compensation to the owners of the telegraph and telephone systems for the supervision, possession, control, and operation of their properties by the United States during the period beginning midnight, July 31, 1918, ending midnight, July 31, 1919, $14,000,000, to remain available until June 30, 1921.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
25 February, 1921.

NOTE.—Report accompanied similar message to the Senate.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—FARR AGAINST M'LANE.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the contested-election case of Farr against McLane, tenth congressional district of Pennsylvania, and I move the adoption of the resolutions at the end of the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts calls up the contested-election case of Farr against McLane and moves the adoption of the resolutions which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 697.

Resolved, That Patrick McLane was not elected a Member of the House of Representatives from the tenth congressional district of the State of Pennsylvania in this Congress and is not entitled to retain a seat herein.

House resolution 698.

Resolved, That John R. Farr was duly elected a Member of the House of Representatives from the tenth congressional district of the State of Pennsylvania in this Congress and is entitled to a seat herein.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate on these resolutions be limited to two hours and a half, one hour and a half to be controlled by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBINSON], a member of the committee, who will yield part of his time, as I understand, to the contestee, who is a Member of the House, and the other hour to be controlled by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that debate on this case be limited to two hours and a half, one hour to be controlled by himself and an hour and a half by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBINSON]. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, if this time is agreed to, whether there will be anything taken up to-night other than to dispose of this contested-election case?

Mr. DALLINGER. I understand that the conference report on the immigration bill is coming in.

Mr. MONDELL. We hope to dispose of the conference report upon the immigration bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, is it not possible to reduce the time for debate to two hours, inasmuch as the committee has filed a unanimous report?

Mr. DALLINGER. The only reason that I have asked for two hours and a half is to be fair to the contestee. The members of the committee on both sides want to speak, and I thought if we would give the gentleman from North Carolina an hour and a half, he could take care of the contestee [Mr. MCLANE] out of that time.

Mr. CANNON. How about the contestant? Ought he not have a chance to air his immortality? [Laughter.]

Mr. DALLINGER. I understand that, inasmuch as it is a unanimous report, the contestant does not desire to be heard.

Mr. MONDELL. The report is unanimous?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. It does not seem that so much time is required. Does not the gentleman think it would be possible to get along with two hours?

Mr. DALLINGER. How much time does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCLANE], the contestee, desire?

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina. He has stated that he would want at least 30 minutes. Of course, if he does not consume all of that time, he will yield it back. Judge BLAND of Virginia wants 30 minutes; he is a member of the committee.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the contestee has a unanimous report against him, I think the chairman of the committee has been eminently fair in giving such time as will enable the contestee to have an opportunity to speak.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I do not consider that I have made an unreasonable request under the circumstances.

Mr. EMERSON. This just beats this man out of a week's pay. That is about all it is, and I do not see why it is such an important matter.

Mr. KNUTSON. But there is a principle involved.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I repeat my request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the time for debate be limited for two hours and a half, one hour to be controlled by himself and an hour and a half by the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DALLINGER. And that at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered on both resolutions.

The SPEAKER. And that at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered on both resolutions. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that this case has come up at a time of the day when there is a small attendance of Members of the House, because I understand there has been some criticism in regard to delay in reporting upon and disposing of contested-election cases. The question of contested-election cases is determined by a statute passed by the Congress. We have three Committees on Elections. For a long time in the history of the country there was but one Committee on Elections. Three committees were created because of the fact that one committee was totally unable to take care of all of the contests before the expiration of the Congress. These contested-election cases are matters involving fact and law, and the Committees on Elections are judicial tribunals. They act as both judge and jury. After having heard the facts and applied the law, they make their report to the House, and the House either accepts or rejects their report. It is a difficult task to exhaustively investigate and report on one of these contested-election cases, and I want to say for the Committee on Elections No. 1, of which I have the honor to be chairman, that no criticism whatever can be justly made against that committee for any delay in this case. This is the sixth report that we have made in this Congress. We have been constantly at work from the time the first session of the present Congress was called down to the present moment.

This case of Farr against McLane came to us late last spring. It was a case with a very voluminous record. I hold in my hand the record of the testimony, 1,371 pages of fine print, and in addition we had sent to us two great mail sacks of exhibits containing voting lists and poll books. The committee took up this case and the different districts involved were referred to subcommittees, each consisting, as far as possible, of one Republican and one Democrat. The committee worked until the adjournment of Congress in June. At that time we had not anywhere near finished the case. Just as soon as Congress came together in December we went to work at it again, and I have worked night and day and some other members of the committee have, in order to try and get this report made to the House.

Since our report was made we have been waiting for some little time to get a chance to have the report acted upon. To be sure, we had the right of way under the rules of the House, but we felt, in justice to the House, that we ought to let the conference reports on appropriation bills be taken up first because they had to go back to conference while contested-election cases are finally disposed of on the floor of the House.

Mr. Speaker, it has been a source of pride to me that with the exception of the case of Bodenstab against Berger, which we have just finished, where one Republican member of the committee filed a minority report, we have in every case had a unanimous report. Our committee has endeavored to consider and decide these election cases absolutely on their merits regardless of any partisan or personal considerations. Although the Committee on Elections No. 1 consists of six Republicans and three Democrats, we brought in a unanimous report in favor of the sitting Democratic Member, Mr. BLAND of Missouri. We brought in a unanimous report in favor of Mr. MAJOR, of Missouri, another Democratic sitting Member. And now we are asking your favorable consideration of a unanimous report unseating a Democratic Member from the State of Pennsylvania and seating his Republican contestant.

If there ever was an occasion when the membership of this House is obliged to rely on the committee, it is a case like the present, involving a large number of election districts, in most of which the contestant claims there was fraud and illegality, and a few in which the contestee claims there was fraud and illegality, and in all of which we had to see whether the claims in the briefs were substantiated by the testimony. In order to give you some idea of the magnitude of this case and the immense amount of work involved, I want to call attention to the fact that the contestant's brief—which, I may say, is one of the most complete and clear briefs I ever had the good fortune to see, where he makes his specific charges in each district and gives the pages of the testimony upon which he relies—contains 306 printed pages. I want to say that the committee, in making its report, has given the benefit of the doubt to the contestee in every case. Personally, I believe that there were a great many more illegal votes than the 1,006 which the committee found and specifies in the report.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I will.

Mr. DEWALT. The gentleman speaks of 1,006 illegal votes. What evidence was there that there were that number of illegal votes—upon what ground were they cast out?

Mr. DALLINGER. On various grounds.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman specify one?

Mr. DALLINGER. There were a good many cases where men were returned as having voted on the poll books who, on their own testimony, never voted at all. I may say, in passing, that under the laws of Pennsylvania the election officials are supposed to write down the names of the voters as they appear at the polls.

Mr. DEWALT. I think the gentleman is wrong about that. If he will permit me. I do not mean to say that his knowledge of the Pennsylvania laws is less accurate than mine. The system is this, that as the voter appears he is asked to deposit his ballot. He has been registered, either as a Democrat or as a Republican or as a nonpartisan; and then he asks for his ballot. But there is no registration at the time he deposits that vote as to what party affiliation he belongs to.

Mr. DALLINGER. I was not referring to the party affiliation. The poll book is numbered consecutively, and when the voter comes to the polling place the election officials write down his name as voter No. 1, and so forth.

Now, where it was charged by the contestant that a man whose name appeared on the poll book as having voted did not vote on election day, and he was summoned in to testify and testified that he was sick in bed with the influenza, an epidemic of which was raging at the time of this election, and did not vote, the committee considered that was evidence that somebody else voted on his name, and that it was an illegal vote. There were also numerous cases of men who were fighting overseas and their names were voted on.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I will.

Mr. STEVENSON. As to the man whose name was on the ballot as having voted and did not vote, was there any evidence to show for whom he voted, or was it because some fellow impersonated this voter when he voted?

Mr. DALLINGER. I will come to that.

Mr. DEWALT. Supplementing that, if the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him.

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. DEWALT. The gentleman has spoken of 1,006 votes?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. Could the committee determine for whom those 1,006 votes were cast?

Mr. DALLINGER. I am coming to that in just a moment.

Mr. DEWALT. Very well.

Mr. DALLINGER. There were a great many cases where minors under 21 years of age were induced to make false affidavits and then permitted to vote.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman allow another interruption? Without regard to the specific fact that certain people voted who were not entitled to vote, it seems to me that the basic question is this, For whom did those people vote?

Mr. DALLINGER. I am coming to that.

Mr. DEWALT. I would like for the gentleman to come to it now.

Mr. DALLINGER. I will come to that in a moment when I have answered the gentleman's first question. There were a great many cases in the districts mentioned in the contestant's notice of contest and in his brief and substantiated by the testimony where a large number of men were permitted to vote whose names were not on the voting list and who did not make any affidavit on election day before the election officials as required by the laws of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. DEWALT. Another interruption.

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. DEWALT. Is the gentleman now through? Has the committee definite information as to whom or for whom these people voted?

Mr. DALLINGER. Just a minute; let me complete my answer to the gentleman's first question.

Mr. DEWALT. I know the gentleman is coming to that, but I would like to know this now.

Mr. DALLINGER. There were a great many cases of unnaturalized persons who testified that they said that they were unnaturalized and protested that they had no right to vote, but who were told that they could vote and were taken to the polls after having been treated at one of the hotel bars in the neighborhood, and ballots were given to them and marked for them by the election officers themselves or by persons acting in collusion with the election officers. Now, it is perfectly evident from the testimony, verified by the committee by an examination of the original poll books and the voting lists and giving the benefit of every doubt to the contestee, that there were at least 1,006 illegal votes. Now, the question comes as to the method to be pursued by the committee.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. DALLINGER. I am answering the gentleman's question now. There is a long line of State and congressional precedents which hold that where there has been a reckless and flagrant disregard of the election laws of a State an elections committee and a legislative body is justified in throwing out the entire returns from districts where such conduct has occurred on the ground that the returns from the districts in question are totally unreliable and that no certainty as to the truth of what took place at the election can be ascertained, and there is no State, I may add, where the courts have gone further in throwing out entire election districts because of such disregard of election laws by the officials as the gentleman's own State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. DEWALT. Well, our State is a Republican State, and that may be the misfortune of the fact, but will the gentleman allow me to inquire now. The gentleman has spoken of 1,006 illegal votes.

How many of those 1,006 were called before you? How many witnesses were called to prove the illegality of those 1,006 votes?

Mr. DALLINGER. I will say to the gentleman that we did not try the case all over again. As in all election cases, we went by the testimony taken in the congressional district in the manner prescribed by the congressional statute, and verified by an examination of the voting lists and the poll books.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman allow another inquiry?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. DEWALT. Before whom was this testimony taken, and by whom?

Mr. DALLINGER. It was taken in accordance with a congressional statute, before a notary public, where all the witnesses were examined by counsel for the contestant and cross-examined by the counsel for the contestee.

Now, in order that the House may understand what went on at this election, I want to call the attention of the Members to a sample piece of testimony printed on page 7 of our report.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I will.

Mr. STEVENSON. Before you come to that, I want to ask this question: You made the statement that in nearly all the States where gross and palpable fraud is found in elections they throw out the whole election. Most of the States, when they make that holding, however, do not hold the contestant has the right to the office. When the whole thing is thrown out and held vicious for fraud, nobody has the office. On what ground does the gentleman place that?

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from South Carolina, I will say that perhaps he misunderstood me. If there has been fraud and illegality and reckless and intentional disregard of the election laws of a State in all the precincts of a congressional district, the gentleman is correct in the supposition that the committee would throw the entire vote of the district out and declare the seat vacant. But that is not the case here. In the city of Scranton, which comprises the larger part of this congressional district in the matter of population, where both the contestant and contestee reside, there is no charge on either side of fraud or illegality. It is only in certain election districts, peopled to a large extent by people not speaking the English language, where the issue was "wet and dry," that in order to beat this contestant because he voted for the prohibition amendment wholesale fraud was resorted to in the interest of the contestee. It was in those election districts where the contestant had no friend on the election board to protect his interests, because they were all wet men, whether they were Republicans or Democrats. It was in those election districts where this utter reckless disregard and violation of the election laws took place from the time the polls opened until they closed.

Mr. DEWALT. With due deference to the gentleman and without desiring to interrupt the course of his argument, may I quote from page 12?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. DEWALT. I quote now from page 12, in the last three or four lines of that page, in the summary, in which your committee has said:

> In a vast majority of these cases there is no way of ascertaining for whom these illegal votes were cast for the office of Representative in Congress.

Now, let me paraphrase that. If that be correct, and if that be the conclusion of your committee, how is your committee able to determine that the contestee is not entitled to this seat by reason of the fact that you do not know as to whether these votes were for him or against him?

Mr. DALLINGER. I will say in answer to the gentleman that, following a long line of congressional and State precedents, in our opinion our committee would have been justified in throwing out the entire votes of all those election districts. Pursuing this method, John R. Farr, the contestant, is found to be elected by a plurality of 2,420 votes. Pursuing the method of rejecting no districts but deducting the illegal votes pro rata from the votes of the two candidates, John R. Farr, the contestant, is elected by a plurality of 476 votes. Pursuing the method adopted by the committee of rejecting entirely the returns of these districts where there was fraud and collusion, and deducting pro rata the illegal votes in those districts where there was simply the voting of persons not properly registered, John R. Farr, the contestant, is elected by a plurality of 1,454 votes.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him again?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. DEWALT. Is that merely a personal opinion or is it based upon precedents in law?

Mr. DALLINGER. It is based upon precedents in law.

Mr. DEWALT. Now, where is the law for it?

Mr. DALLINGER. There are so many of them that I can not give them all to the gentleman. I will give him one, however, in the present Congress—the case of Tague against Fitzgerald, where because of colonization and illegal registration several precincts were thrown out. In the case of Wickersham against Sulzer, in the last Congress, the committee adopted the method of deducting illegal votes pro rata.

Mr. BEE. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to read from the summary that in the majority of cases there was no way to ascertain. It seems, however, that your committee ascertained, as shown on page 11, that in the Carbondale district 8 illegal votes were cast for Farr, the contestant, and that in the fifth ward there were 3 cast.

Mr. DALLINGER. And we subtracted them all from Mr. Farr's vote.

Mr. BEE. You were able to ascertain the illegal votes cast for the contestant, but not for the contestee, and on that ask to have the contestee unseated?

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Let me answer the gentleman from Texas first. The gentleman is entirely in error. In the cases in the city of Carbondale the contestee summoned these men. He claimed there were 73 illegal votes. Only a certain number of those did he see fit to summon. Those that he summoned testified and were asked for whom they voted.

Where they said they voted for John R. Farr, although they were on the voting list, the committee threw them out and deducted them from Mr. Farr's vote, because it was found, as a matter of fact, by the committee that they were illegally registered by the county commissioners; that they were put on the voting list by the county commissioners on sworn affidavits that they had been absent from the city or prevented by illness from going and registering during the three days that the board of registrars were in session in that particular locality; and therefore the committee found that they should not have been registered, for the reason that they were not prevented from registering by illness or unnecessary absence, although they were on the official voting list, and where they were shown to have voted for Mr. Farr we deducted them from Mr. Farr's vote.

RECESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 6 o'clock having arrived, the House stands in recess until 8 o'clock.

Thereupon (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the House stood in recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 8 o'clock p. m.) resumed its session.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—FARR AGAINST M'LANE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] is recognized.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important subject, and I think we ought to have a quorum here. I make the point of no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point that no quorum is present. Clearly there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and twenty-four Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DALLINGER. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], a member of the committee.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Speaker and gentleman of the House, there is a common ground on which I think Democrats and Republicans as patriots may meet to-night, and that is to do justice. [Applause.]

I have no doubt that it is the desire of every Member of this House, as it has been the desire of every member of this committee, to deal fairly, justly, and honestly between these respective contestants, regardless of party politics or any other issue that may be involved. The question is for you. If we have been wrong, reverse us. If we have been right, then find in accordance with the report of this committee.

If there is any man in this House who desires to serve on an election committee, I seriously question his sanity. [Laughter.] Gentlemen, this committee has been through a record of over 1,300 printed pages, and whatever others may have done, so far as I am concerned I say to you now, gentlemen, that I have read every line of that testimony and read every line of the briefs and have considered that testimony in connection with the briefs, in order to arrive if possible at a fair conclusion. [Applause.]

We have involved in this case on the part of the contestant 20 election districts. Some of those involve only the question of illegal voters, unregistered persons. Others involve the question of fraud.

Gentlemen, to consider this case in all of its aspects and in all of its bearings I submit that you have got to go back to the time when Mr. McLane announced himself a candidate for Congress.

Bear in mind that there was no nomination in prospect on the part of the Democrats. Mr. McLane saw Mr. Murphy, city editor of the Scranton Times, and desired that he should announce that, if there were no other candidates, he himself would be a candidate. The evidence shows that they saw that Farr was riding as they say to a fall. Why? Because he had voted for prohibition and because he had voted in favor of the restriction of immigration or against immigrants coming into this country, to a certain extent, restricting them. Mr. McLane saw Mr. Murphy about running for Congress. He expressed his thought that rather than to go quietly around the country seeing this person and that person, knowing all the party workers he felt he could go to a large number of them and get their support, and that then by putting up an aggressive fight he would be able to win out. McLane had been a member of the Democratic county committee from time to time for a number of years. McLane contemplated considerable newspaper publicity as a part of his campaign, as evidenced by the testimony of his friend and supporter as follows:

A campaign for mayor upon that kind of a campaign that you now say you understand McLane means when he used the words aggressive campaign? Oh, yes; to go out before the people with newspaper publicity.

Now, gentlemen, when you go to the account that has been filed by the McLane campaign committee you find over $5,000—approximately $5,500—spent for advertising alone. The people who testified said that there never had been in that district such a newspaper publicity campaign, and that McLane was unable to get out but he made up in printers' ink what he lost in the way of holding meetings.

Why do I bring this to your attention, gentlemen? Just here let me say that I think there was too much money spent by all parties in this campaign. The Republican county committee spent too much money, but you can not connect Farr with it. The evidence is lacking to show that he knew anything more than his contribution and expenditure on his part of $2,000 that he contributed to the Republican county committee. There was a McLane committee that was organized in October, 1918. There was spent by this committee approximately $10,000. Every dollar of the McLane campaign committee except the sum of $200 was contributed by liquor dealers and by brewers.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. No; I can not yield, I have only a limited time and I want to conclude, so that Mr. McLane may have an opportunity to reply to what I say. Mr. McLane, I submit, was charged with knowledge of this enormous expenditure. He saw the advertisements daily appear in the newspapers; he carried Mr. O'Toole, the man who made the cartoons, to the Democratic county committee.

These committees were holding their sessions at two places. McLane says that he knew nothing about the McLane campaign committee. His own friend, Huffnaegel, testified that he was present at the Hotel Casey at meetings of the county committee along with the McLane campaign committee. Can he say, gentleman, when the McLane campaign committee was meeting a block and a half down the street from the headquarters of the Democratic county committee—the two headquarters being maintained in the same town, within a block and a half of each other—that he did not meet the McLane committee in connection with the Democratic county committee? Can he say that he did not know that there was a McLane campaign committee?

Furthermore, you will find over $5,000 of newspaper advertisement paid by a man by the name of Bosack, who was a member of the McLane committee, and it was paid back by the McLane campaign committee.

That is the situation, and I can only touch it in the high places. Do you think under these circumstances he would not know of the existence of the McLane campaign committee? There is no evidence, so far as Farr is concerned, beyond his contribution of $2,000 to the Republican county committee.

Now, gentlemen, I must go on. The illegal votes have been deducted proportionately, and that matter has been discussed. I will not discuss it further.

Gentlemen, I want to call your attention in connection with this situation to some of the evidence to show fraud at some of these precincts.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I have but very little time.

Mr. GARRETT. Is there any evidence as to the amount which the Republican committee expended?

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. There is an account that the Republican committee spent approximately $10,000, and I say they spent too much. I think somebody ought to be prosecuted, and if the law does not provide for prosecution, it should; but how can you hold Farr responsible when his contribution is the sum of $2,000 and there is no evidence to show any further knowledge on his part?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I can not yield any further.

Mr. LINTHICUM. But the gentleman talks all on one side and will not answer any questions.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I am going to present the case as I see it, and if gentlemen want to vote the other way, they can do it. It is entirely immaterial to me.

Mr. LINTHICUM. We will do it, all right.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has declined to yield.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I decline to yield.

Mr. BRAND. But the gentleman did not decline to yield to me.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I can not possibly yield. My time is almost up now. I want to call attention to some of the evidence of fraud. I wish it were possible to read all of this evidence—how man after man was approached and asked to go to the polls in these different precincts where the vote was thrown out on account of fraud. In reply to the request to vote, the man would answer, "I am a foreigner; I am an alien; I have only my first papers," and yet the reply always came, "Why this is a wet and dry fight; go ahead; everybody is voting to-day"; and in other cases it was, "Wilson has asked everybody to vote, and everybody is going to vote." Here is just one precinct that I want to call attention to, Olyphant Borough, fourth ward. This is one of those which was thrown out. There were 46 more votes in the ballot box than there were names on the voting list. On the voting list there were contained the names of 204 persons.

There were such strong evidences of fraud at this precinct that, in my opinion, the returns must be rejected. Attention has been directed to the presence in the ballot box of 46 votes more than appeared on the voting list. The voting list was numbered. From numbers 1 to 23, inclusive, names appeared, then from 24 to 75, both inclusive, no names appear. The last name appearing on the voting list was opposite No. 256, but 52 names had been omitted. It appears from the evidence, page 377, that on the first page of the voting list there were 23 names; on the second page, none; on the third page, none; on the fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, and tenth pages, 25 names each; and 6 on page 11; making 204 names in all. There were two blank lines on the first page. That night when the ballots were counted there were three more ballots than stubs. The officials would not sign the returns for this reason until the Monday following the election, when they signed under direction of the court. When they were in court, however, no one called the attention of the court to the fact that there were only 204 names on the voting list.

According to Onze, judge of election, when the election was over the stubs were counted, and they were found to be 204, page 332. This is significant, for it corresponds identically with the number of voters whose names were actually on the voting list. When it was seen that the stubs were 204, they looked at the last number on the voting list and found it to be 256. Then there were a few men who started to holler about it, that there were so many stubs short, and a few seconds after Charlie Simons walked around and picked up a pad of stubs from the floor near Charlie O'Boyle, and between him and the box. Onze had been handing out the ballots, and he had been separating them from the stub with a ruler and knife.

The stubs which were found on the floor were uneven and had been torn off (333). The edges were ragged. There were around 50 of these ballot stubs. These 50 brought them to about 3 or 4 of the voters as shown by the last name on the voting list. It will be remembered that in part there were 204 names on the voting list, but the last name appeared on line 256, so that it looked as though there were 256 votes so long as the list was not examined. The stubs first found on the table correspond with the actual number of voters but not the apparent number of voters. When the 50 stubs were found on the floor the stubs were 254, or 2 less than the apparent number of voters and 4 more than the actual ballots in the box.

This witness and the majority inspector say that they did not find out that night that there were only 204 names on the list. They were 10 or 15 minutes trying to find the stubs, and picked them up by the chair of Charley O'Boyle. Charlie O'Boyle picked them up. According to the witness, Onza, the names 1 to 23 on the voting list were in O'Boyle's handwriting, except one name. The names from 76 to 157 were in O'Boyle's handwriting, except Nos. 105 and 106. At the time O'Boyle picked the stubs off the floor Ernest Simons, Republican watcher, said: "Well, you might be able to do that in Jessup, but you can't do it here."

According to Hartman, Republican watcher, Simons, another Republican watcher, picked up the ballots where O'Boyle was sitting. There was picked up a pad of stubs containing 50, he thinks, and he says, page 322:

It was a pad and the stubs picked off the floor was tore off ragged, where the other pads were tore straight. There was a ruler used to tear the stubs off.

Again the witness says that those that were picked off the floor were not the same as the judge had cut; they were torn off ragged, while he had cut them off with a knife.

The witness knew nothing of the blank pages on the voters' list.

This witness also says:

There was ballots read that come out of the box when they were counting them that had the ragged edge that would correspond with the ragged edges of the stubs on the floor (p. 323).

It is fair to state that there is evidence that after the polls closed at night the ballot stubs and different things were thrown on the floor. Simons says he put in a kick, and they were picked up. The floor was practically clean, so far as he could see. This was before the stubs were found. After the ballot stubs were counted there were 204, and everybody expressed surprise, as there appeared to be 256 names on the voting list. Mr. Simons says:

There was two hundred and fifty and some names on the list and 204 ballot stubs; and Mr. O'Boyle arose, and when he did I looked alongside of where he was sitting and I seen something rolled up, and I walked around behind the chair and picked it up, and I used the expression, "What the hell is this?" and I threw it on the table. It was fifty and some ballot stubs.

The witness says they were rolled up, and he straightened them out and counted them. This witness also says that they did not count the names on the voting list; they simply looked at the last name and number.

This witness also says that after dinner on election day he had a conversation with Charley O'Boyle. The witness says (p. 345):

He wanted to know who I was working for, and I told him a straight Republican ticket, and he asked me would I have any objections to going along on swapping votes, and I said what did he mean, and he said to give the votes in the box to McLane if he would give them to me for Davis. I asked if the Republican overseer was in on that, and he said, "Yes," and I said I could not give him an answer on that. It surprised me that the Republican overseer was in on a deal like that, and I walked away and left him.

That is the evidence at one of these precincts. If you will go to others, you will find where election officers were out asking men to come to vote, and when the men told them that they were not qualified to vote, that they were aliens——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me five minutes more?

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Take some of these precincts, and you find what? You find men who were fighting on the other side who were apparently there voting that day; you will find again and again the names there of men who were dead who were voting on that day. That is the evidence. It should be considered. I could go on and take up these precincts one by one, and you will find that this evidence of fraud permeates all, and the question was, "Come on and vote, it is wet and dry to-day; come on, you want to vote wet."

Gentlemen, it was not a fight between the Republican and the Democratic Parties, it was a wet and dry fight. I wish it were possible to go on and give you all of the evidence in this case. I believe the committee has been as fair as it possibly could be. I know that I have studied this record as I never studied a record before in any case. The chairman of this committee has given every consideration to the other side in extending all of the time possible to examine these names.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I have only five minutes; I can not yield now. Well, I will try to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. BURKE. I understand the gentleman to say that it was a wet and dry fight back in Scranton between Mr. Farr and Mr. McLane.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I do not recall that there is any evidence as to the Scranton district. I will say this: That it was a wet and dry fight in every one of these precincts that are in question here, and if you read the record you will find that to be so.

Mr. BURKE. How many dry members are there on this committee? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I do not know anything about that. I have not considered that.

Mr. BURKE. Was there any other issue between these two men back in Scranton submitted to the committee?

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. The issue was fraud, which is all along the line, as in the Olyphant Borough, which I have read here before this committee. Any other issue? If you are casting votes in the name of dead men, I submit there is another issue.

Mr. BABKA. Is there any evidence who these fellows voted for?

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. No; we did not bring any of the dead back to life to testify. It was impossible to find out who was casting the vote for the dead men.

Mr. BABKA. But did they vote for Farr or for McLane? For whom did they count the votes?

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. If a vote is cast in the name of a man who is in the cemetery, how can they find out who cast the vote? [Laughter.]

Mr. BABKA. But why charge McLane with it?

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Because there is fraud, and so long as I am on an elections committee of this House I shall vote against fraud wherever it appears. [Applause.]

Mr. BABKA. Was there any evidence which one committed the fraud?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DEWALT. In order that I may be entirely explicit, there were 1,006 votes—am I correct?——

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I do not recollect. The gentleman has the report, and he will have to verify that.

Mr. DEWALT (continuing). Declared to be fraudulent. According to the report of the gentleman's committee it is determined that they can not determine how those votes were cast. Is that true?

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. They have deducted them proportionately except in the precincts that were thrown out. I have been practicing law long enough to know that I can answer in my own way, and I shall.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DEWALT. I have heard from the chairman of your committee. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended one minute.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. All right; I have no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina. I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DEWALT. I understand from the argument that 77 witnesses have been examined out of 1,006. The testimony preserved by the committee is 77 out of 1,006——

Mr. DALLINGER. That is not correct; I did not——

Mr. DEWALT. Now, then, the committee has passed upon the evidence as presented. The committee determined by the testimony of 77 out of 1,006.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. It is determined by the evidence of witnesses both sides introduced. If there were any other witnesses Mr. McLane wanted introduced before the committee, they could be summoned and the evidence taken. This committee arrived at its conclusion upon the evidence that came before it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McLANE], the contestee. [Applause.]

Mr. McLANE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am going to read from a prepared statement for about 15 minutes. After that I will permit any Member of the House to ask any question that he sees fit to ask pertaining to this contest. In order to clear up the few things which have been said by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] relative to throwing out the votes which they claim were illegally cast, I would like both of them before I proceed to state specifically, if they can do so, how many witnesses were called in the contest proceedings by the contestant and myself. I want to get this fact before the House. The committee disqualified 1,006 voters, when as a matter of fact only 358 witnesses were called by contestant in the entire contest proceedings. The contestant did not disqualify a sufficient number of votes to overcome my majority. With only 358 witnesses called, where does the committee get the evidence to disfranchise 1,006 voters?

The question that you are going to decide to-day is not the unseating of Mr. McLane or the seating of Mr. Farr. You are deciding a far more important question. You are deciding whether or not a legally elected Democrat from the tenth Pennsylvania district has a right to sit as a Member of this House.

I say this for the reason that I am the second Democrat elected from the tenth Pennsylvania district in 30 years. Hon. George Howell was the other, and he, like myself, had contest proceedings instituted against him and was unseated without any justification for the act because he was honestly and legally elected. Eighteen years later I was elected only to find that I am to meet the same fate.

I am told that politics cut very little figure in a contest case, and I believe this to be true. I am fully satisfied that no Member of this House has any desire to vote to unseat a man because of his political affiliations, nor do I believe it is the intention of the Elections Committee to do so. However, I do believe it is the lack of knowledge of local conditions on the part of the committee that prompts the making of such a report as was submitted to this House. That was shown in the Connell-Howell contest—18 years ago—and I shall try to prove to the satisfaction of the Members present that it happened in this case.

I am not going to take the position that I did not receive some illegal votes. Where more than 23,000 votes are cast some illegal votes are liable to creep in. However, I am of the opinion that Mr. Farr received as many of them as I did.

The testimony will show the only illegal act proven in the election was an act of illegal registration committed in the interest of Mr. Farr by Mr. Histed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. What did they do, kill him so that he could not testify?

Mr. McLANE. No; they gave him a job, and incidentally Mr. Histed was never brought to trial, notwithstanding that he was indicted by the grand jury of our county. On the contrary, he was given a job at the capitol at Harrisburg for efficient work.

Mr. LUHRING. Is that in the record?

Mr. McLANE. Yes, sir; it is in the record.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLANE. If the gentleman will remain patient.

Mr. DEWALT. But I would like to know right now.

Mr. McLANE. If the committee had taken the time to compare the Republican registration in the various districts with the vote returned for Mr. Farr, particularly in the city of Scranton, it would show conclusively that he was not beaten because of any fraud committed in my interest, but because the Republican voters failed to support him. Mr. Farr did not poll his party vote in any district in the city. He did not even poll his party vote in his home ward, which is strongly Republican.

He, nor his attorney, does not allege that any illegal votes were cast in my behalf in the city of Scranton; yet he ran 3,892 votes behind his party registration.

I wish to call your attention particularly to the charge that I conspired with others to defraud Mr. Farr out of his seat in Congress. If exercising the right of citizenship is conspiracy, then I am guilty.

In Pennsylvania we have our primaries for Congress in the month of May preceding the November election. We were within a few months of the primaries with Mr. Farr as the only candidate in the field for Congress on either ticket. There was a feeling among Democrats that he was unbeatable and that he should be reelected without opposition. Upon hearing this I immediately announced in the Scranton Times, the Democratic daily, that if no other Democrat sought the nomination for Congress I would accept it. As no other Democrat came forward I became the Democratic nominee. If becoming a candidate in this manner is conspiracy, then I am guilty; otherwise I am not.

Every Member knows there is no foundation for such a silly allegation in a contest proceeding, and the thing that Mr. Farr should have said when making out his bill of particulars is that it is illegal for the majority of the voters of the tenth Pennsylvania district to vote against him.

No doubt he feels justified in charging the brewers and wet voters with conspiracy for deserting the Republican Party. But he seems to lose sight of the fact that he benefited by their support in the campaigns of 1910 and 1914. I want to assure you also that he willingly accepted their support in both campaigns.

I wish to call your attention to the charge that there were many nonregistered votes cast in my favor. This is a pure fabrication and was conceived by Mr. Farr's attorney, Mr. Mosher, who is a past master at the art of political manipulation and has a reputation in our community for being able to cleverly perpetrate any and all the illegal acts which he alleges were committed in my interest.

This is the same Mr. Mosher who, after being indicted by the grand jury with two other gentlemen for committing an illegal act in the interest of a friend some years ago, escaped going to jail because the memory of one of the witnesses failed; the other two were found guilty and went to jail. The witness whose memory failed was given a job on the police force in Scranton, which position he holds to this day.

Is it not very strange that none of the men who were charged with committing these illegal acts or election frauds were not called before the grand jury?

Mr. Farr, with his 35 years' political experience, is not the novice that he is endeavoring to make this House believe he is. He is fully aware of the fact that proof of fraud would strengthen his case with the committee.

Mr. Farr, having represented a Republican district for four terms in this House, was defeated by the voters of his own party faith in a year when the Republican Party increased their representation in this House. No doubt he was very much disappointed and came here for redress.

I did not defeat Mr. Farr. The voters of the tenth Pennsylvania district defeated him. The campaign was fought out on issues which Mr. Farr voted upon in this House. It is the privilege of this House to give Mr. Farr something denied him by the voters of the tenth Pennsylvania district in the general election of 1918 and the primaries of 1920.

In our testimony we have proven that Mr. Farr benefited by the illegal registration in the city of Carbondale and we assumed that other irregularities occurred. Therefore, I asked for a recount of the votes cast in the districts which I attacked in the city of Carbondale, but was denied that right by the Elections Committee No. 1.

Let me make a comparison of the vote cast for Mr. Farr in the city of Scranton with the Republican registration. In the city of Scranton we have personal registration. The city consists of 22 wards, 4 of which showed a Democratic registered majority and 18 a Republican majority. I carried 11 wards, and Mr. Farr carried 11. The total Republican registration in 1918 was 7,787; the Democratic, 3,054. Mr. Farr only carried the city by 753 votes, thereby losing approximately 4,000 votes. Mr. Farr also ran behind the Republican vote in every district in the county. Heretofore these districts always went Republican. In 1918 they gave me a majority.

Let me call your attention to Mr. Farr's home ward. He resides in the second district of the twenty-first ward, city of Scranton. He lost 40 votes in this district. His ward showed a registered Republican majority of 318; he carried it by 64, thereby losing 258 votes.

I also wish to call your attention to the eleventh and nineteenth wards of the city of Scranton. The Republican registered majority was 514. I carried these two wards by a majority of 340, thereby making a gain of 854 votes in both wards.

The committee in its report recommends the throwing out of whole districts because they believe many men voted who were not registered. That is, in their opinion, sufficient reason to disfranchise thousands of voters.

The statement made by contestant that many who were not registered voted is incorrect if the election returns of 1917–1919 and 1920 as certified by the prothonotary's office are correct; or if the registration figures taken from the Republican county commissioner's office is any criterion to go by, the allegations are not only untrue but are put in for the purpose of deceiving this committee.

I do not think I ought to read the vote cast, inasmuch as it would take too long. So I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the figures be inserted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that if the gentleman wants to extend the figures in the RECORD, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. McLANE. Herein are the returns of the vote cast in the districts attacked for the years of 1917, 1918, 1919 and the male registration of 1920. The figures show plainly that there were hundreds of legal voters in these districts who did not cast a vote in the election of 1918. The returns show that less than 60 per cent of the voters cast their ballots in 1918. Only 23,000 out of the 40,000 voters cast their ballots. It was a Republican falling off, and I received the benefit of it.

Let us see what evidence the committee had to show that men who were not registered voted. Only the evidence of the county commissioners' clerks, and that evidence was so jumbled that it would not stand in any court. How did Mr. Mosher get his evidence? He was permitted to send a number of boys and girls to the county commissioners' office to make a copy of the registration books. The commissioners' clerks swore that said lists were certified copies of the registration books. The names on the supposed certified copies were then compared with the names on the voting check list, and if a letter was omitted in a name or a name misspelled, or even an "i" not dotted, the committee was led to believe that the men who voted were not on the registration books.

Mr. Farr did not call the county commissioners to testify to the correctness of the books. Why, gentlemen, 50 per cent of the legal vote of our district could be thrown out on this flimsy pretext, because I take it that about half of the names on the voting check lists are not spelled the same as they are on the registration books.

The evidence on page 550 will show how the testimony of John Lewis, a clerk in the county commissioners' office, got into the record. A careful perusal of it will prove that it was put in for the purpose of deceiving the committee.

That was conceived by Mr. Mosher and the clerks in the Republican commissioner's office for the purpose of deceiving this committee. Now, it is a well-known fact that in the districts attacked by Mr. Farr, in the election of 1916, when he was a candidate and was elected, they polled more votes in these districts than they did in 1918. They polled 1,800 more votes in 1917 than in 1918. They polled 2,000 more votes in the same districts in 1919 in the judicial contest. In the tenth congressional district in 1919 we polled 37,000 votes in a judicial contest against 23,000 in 1918.

Now, that is connected with a charge of Mr. DALLINGER that he did not have a man on the board anywhere. We have a law in Pennsylvania which permits both candidates to go into court and submit a name of an overseer and have him appointed by the court. He is the choice of the candidate or the party. So it disproves the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] that he did not have a man in any of the districts.

The testimony of the Republican county chairman shows that Mr. Farr or the Republican county committee had a right to name a man in every election district to oversee the count as an additional safeguard.

The Republican chairman and the prothonotary said that the court appointed the men recommended by the Republican committee.

The returns show that Mr. Farr ran behind his party registration in every voting district in Lackawanna County except in the city of Carbondale, where the registration list was padded in his interest. We impounded the ballot boxes in these districts by a court order in the hope that we could have a recount of the votes made by Elections Committee No. 1. As I stated before, this privilege was denied us by said committee.

We feel that we should be granted the right to have a recount of the votes. Both sides in this contest called about the same number of witnesses. Contestant called about 358, and I called 330. Contestant did not disqualify a sufficient number of voters to overcome my majority, and the only way he can be seated is by throwing out the entire vote in the Democratic districts, as Elections Committee No. 1 has recommended. How easy, how unfair, and how dangerous that procedure is. A committee of this House, unfamiliar with conditions in the tenth Pennsylvania district, on the advice of a lawyer of questionable repute, disfranchised hundreds of legal voters in order to give a bonus to a defeated candidate.

Mr. Farr, through his attorney, Mr. Mosher, has tried to impress the Elections Committee with the idea that the foreign-born citizens of the tenth Pennsylvania district are undersirable citizens. There is no truth in this allegation. The contrary is true. These men mine our coal and ask only an opportunity to earn an honest living, and Mr. Farr or Mr. Mosher should not misrepresent them to this Congress simply because they think it bolsters up a bad case.

Most of them are Republicans, and have voted that ticket consistently for a good many years.

I am charged with conspiring with others to defraud Mr. Farr out of his seat in Congress.

I was a candidate from the 18th of May to the 5th of November and Mr. Farr never heard of a conspiracy until he was defeated. The conspiracy is as mythical as the McLane campaign—both came to life at the same time.

Mr. Farr, through the Scranton Republican, the Republican daily, called attention to the fact that this case was similar to the Newberry case when he started contest proceedings, as far as expenditure of money was concerned. I am not prepared to say whether it is or not; but I am prepared to say this, that I was not in position to violate the corrupt-practices act when I accepted the nomination. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] alleges that if the act is not enforced in my particular case it will become a farce. Now, it is rather strange that a gentleman can sit over on the other side of the Capitol for almost two years, when everybody knows he violated the law, when he has been indicted, and yet it is a farce if a Democrat retains his seat, but it is good law if a Republican retains his.

Inasmuch as we touched on this phase of the contest, I want to call the attention of the Republican Members to the items of expenditure in the recent election.

In the recent election my successful opponent spent $32,000. I do not think you propose to put him out. I do not expect you will. There is no contest proceeding instituted against him. That is the fault of the lawmakers. He believes that by spending it through the Republican committee it is legal. At least, some of the gentlemen who made the unfavorable report on my case feel the same way about it.

Mr. BURKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLANE. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. Is it your intention to contest the gentleman that is now elected to succeed you in Congress?

Mr. McLANE. I will say to the gentleman, no. The fight is all over and I am through. Two years hence I have redress if I see fit to take advantage of it.

His brother contributed $9,000 to the Republican county committee, his brother-in-law $13,500, and one of his mill foremen contributed $5,500.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Whose brother?

Mr. McLANE. His brother, not Mr. Farr. I am talking about the recent election. I am talking about the corrupt practices act.

Now, gentlemen of the House, if there is anybody on either side of the House who wants to ask any questions about this case I shall willingly answer.

I thought I had made it plain to the Members how I became a candidate. I became a candidate conditionally. Mr. Farr was about to be indorsed by the Democratic Party. Of course, I did not want that, and I said to the members of the Democratic Party, and particularly to Mr. Murphy, of the Scranton Times, that if no other Democrat would take the nomination, I would do so. In the meantime we would try to get somebody to run on the ticket.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. McLANE. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The record shows that you made a report to Congress that you expended $748.04. The record shows that the McLane campaign committee spent $12,800. Did you appear before the committee and make a statement in regard to that? Did you deny that?

Mr. McLANE. No, sir. I denied that because I could not truthfully say so. This is what happened. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] misstated the facts. This is what happened: The election was very quiet until the 18th of October. Then I commenced the campaign through the Democratic organization. I had absolutely no connection whatever with the campaign committee, and there is not a semblance of evidence to show that I ever solicited one dollar from this supposed campaign committee. As a matter of fact there was no such thing as the McLane campaign committee until the expense account was filed, and I was as much surprised as any other citizen in our community on seeing it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. You had nothing to do with it?

Mr. McLANE. I had absolutely nothing to do with it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The Newberry case shows that there was over $100,000 spent in his behalf and that he had knowledge of a large part of it. He was tried by a Republican judge, convicted by a Republican jury, sentenced by a Republican judge to 10 years in the penitentiary, and yet there has been no charge brought against him in the Senate. I think that ought to go into the record.

Mr. McLANE. I want to say to the Members of the House that if I or any other Democrat in the tenth Pennsylvania district had violated any law, we would be brought before the grand jury and indicted. There is no question about that. Our district is strongly Republican, and I am the only Democratic official from that county. Every other man in the courthouse is a Republican, with the possible exception of a minority county commissioner, which the law provides we must have. Now, if Mr. Farr or the Republican committee of that county at that time, as they say, had no protection, I am at a loss to know why. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. McLANE. Will the gentleman from North Carolina let me have five minutes more?

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman five minutes additional.

Mr. CARAWAY. Has anybody been indicted for fraud in connection with the election?

Mr. McLANE. One Republican.

Mr. CARAWAY. Has he ever been tried?

Mr. McLANE. No. He was given a job at Harrisburg. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARAWAY. For being indicted?

Mr. McLANE. Yes. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to ask the gentleman another question. How much does the record show was spent for Mr. Farr in this campaign?

Mr. McLANE. About $10,400, I think. I am not certain about that. Approximately as much as I expended, or our supposed committee expended.

Mr. CARAWAY. And he was as close to that as you were to the other fund?

Mr. McLANE. Of course he was. [Laughter.]

Mr. DALLINGER. Is it not a fact that Mr. Farr had no campaign committee, and that the $10,000 to which you just referred was all the expense of the county committee for all the Republican candidates, from the governor down?

Mr. McLANE. I will say to the gentleman that that is a distinction without a difference. It was expended in his interest, just the same.

Mr. DALLINGER. Was not all the money expended by the Democratic county committee spent for you just the same?

Mr. McLANE. And for two other candidates. I had running with me a Democratic candidate for Senator, and we had a Democratic candidate for governor, who received the benefit of the money expended by the Democratic committee. The other committee I know nothing about.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] laid particular stress on the point of the fourth ward of Olyphant. That ward is a Republican ward; always has been. I carried it by a small majority, I think a majority of 34, or thereabouts. That board is composed of a Republican judge, a Republican majority inspector, and a Democratic minority inspector.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. McLANE. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Who controls the election machinery—the Republicans or the Democrats?

Mr. McLANE. The majority party in the district. Now six, I think, of the districts attacked, are Republican districts. The second district of the second ward of Archbald is a Republican district. The three districts of the Dickson City borough are Republican districts, and three of them are attacked; and incidentally I am informed that Mr. Farr sat with the third ward board of Dickson City while the votes were counted. Why, it seemed rather preposterous to think that one Democrat should defraud all those innocent Republicans in my district. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC], a former member of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I was a member of the Committee on Elections No. 1 when the greater portion of this testimony was heard. I feel that it is but fair to the House, to Mr. McLane, and to Mr. Farr that I should state just why I did not continue as a member of that committee until the time arrived to write the report on this case.

During the latter part of the month of December I was assured by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] in the presence of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] that I would be given another committee assignment to fill a vacancy that existed at that time; and having confidence in the gentleman from North Carolina, I sent in my resignation to the Speaker. Then later on the committee met; some one threw me a curve, and from that time on I was left as a member of the Committee of the Whole. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that two Members of Congress should have to contest for a seat in this great legislative body, and unless a person has had a contest for a seat in some legislative body, he can not have a conception of what one has to go through as a party to a controversy of this kind.

This House is confronted with a most remarkable spectacle here to-night. We have a man here whose seat is contested, standing alone, looking you all in the face and inviting every Member here to ask him any questions that they care to ask relative to this particular controversy. Not a single member of the committee stands by him, but he stands alone on the floor fighting single-handed for his rights, fighting in a way that entitles him to receive the praise of every Member who hears or sees his attitude in this connection. [Applause.]

What are the facts in this case? The gentleman who brought this contest has been a Member of Congress heretofore. He has had experience in filing campaign accounts, and so he files here a campaign account of his expenditures, not in his own name but in the name of the county committee, showing that $10,413.96 was collected by his county committee and that $9,768.16 was expended by that committee. And if you turn to the back of the report which is sworn to, you will find that not a single dime of this money was used in the furthering of the candidacy of anyone else who made a contest for election in that year.

Contrasting that statement, we find here a Member who tells you that he knows nothing about any organization that expended money in order that he might be elected to Congress. There is nothing to connect him with the report that was made by a campaign committee who felt that they were honoring him because they allowed his name to be at the head of that committee. He filed his account here just the same as you and I file our accounts, setting out the items that he had expended, and they have not been disputed in any word of the testimony that I have heard.

But the Committee on Elections comes here to-night with a report and says that because some $12,000 was expended in that campaign that the contestee had constructive notice that this money was being expended for him, and that for this reason he has violated the corrupt practices act.

I want to say to you that if you will refer to the items that are contained in the expenditures enumerated by his campaign committee, and then contrast the same with the items that show the expenditures by the gentleman who has brought this contest, you will find that they are, in the main, for publicity and for different kinds of expenses which are made in congressional campaigns.

But, my friends, let us go a little further. The committee found that 1,006 votes were illegal, and this result was used as a basis for arriving at a final conclusion. These votes were deducted from those which were formally credited to Mr. McLane and credited to Mr. Farr, and by throwing out a number of votes it was finally decided that the contestant was entitled to a seat in this House.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I will.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Was it not apparent that the only man on the Republican ticket who had any fight was Mr. Farr, and that the money raised and spent was spent substantially for him?

Mr. McCLINTIC. If you will look in the back of the 1,300 page record, in the list of expenditures filed by the campaign committee you will not find a single item that will show that money was expended to help any other candidate who aspired for office that year.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. No other Republican candidate?

Mr. McCLINTIC. No other Republican candidate.

Mr. FLOOD. Can the gentleman tell us why Mr. Farr did not have constructive notice that this money was spent in his behalf, and was therefore bound by that constructive notice?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I can not answer that question; but I want to call your attention to this one fact and that is 1,006 votes were found to be illegally cast. No member of the committee is going to say for whom those votes were cast. Can any member of the committee tell whether they should have gone to the credit of Mr. McLane or of Mr. Farr? No. But because of some construction based on a State law it has been decided that a number of votes were illegally cast. No one knows who these votes were cast for, yet the committee feels warranted in deducting them from the number of votes cast for Mr. McLane. I want to call your attention to this situation and I have made mention of it to the ranking minority member of the committee. Mr. McLane went into the court of common pleas and asked that 32 ballot boxes be impounded in order that the records contained in the same might be brought before this committee. In these 32 boxes there were cast 4,687 votes. The tally sheets and the voters' lists in those boxes have never been before this committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. McCLINTIC. This being the case, there is not a Member of this House nor a member of this committee that can successfully deny the fact that there were just as many illegal votes in those 32 boxes impounded as were found in the 8 boxes in which the 1,006 votes were found to be illegal. Therefore, I say, it is not fair that a great committee of this House should bring in a report of this kind.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Why were the 32 boxes not brought before the Election Committee and counted?

Mr. McCLINTIC. All that I can say is that on the next to the last page of the testimony is found the court order which caused the 32 boxes to be impounded. I have figured them up and there are 4,687 votes in those boxes.

Mr. RAKER. Does the gentleman know whether the contestee requested the committee to have those boxes brought before that committee and counted?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I will yield to the contestee to answer that question. Did the contestee ask that the boxes impounded be brought before the committee?

Mr. McLANE. I did, and not only that but I got a court order from the judge of the quarter sessions, Lackawanna County, and you will find it in the record on page 353.

Mr. RAKER. On what basis did the committee refuse to bring those 32 boxes before the committee and count them?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Some member of the committee will have to answer that question.

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina. The request was made that the boxes be brought before the committee and counted, but, as there was no allegation of fraud in those precincts, that request was denied.

Mr. RAKER. The contestee received the majority vote. If you get down to the——

Mr. McCLINTIC. I can not yield further. There were 1,006 votes thrown out of the eight boxes because the State law required the voters to be registered before they could have the right of suffrage. If there were 1,006 votes subtracted from the total from those eight boxes, who is there here can say how many votes would have been found illegal in the 32 impounded boxes had they been brought before the committee and the votes properly examined?

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that there are more foreigners, I dare say, in that congressional district than are to be found in any other district in the entire United States. I realize that many of them did not understand the State law relating to elections.

But the committee has no right to examine one half of the testimony offered in this case and then take those votes found to be illegal because the voters were not registered and throw them out without examining the other half that was brought to their attention by the contestee in this case. I want to say that every man, regardless of who he is, or where he comes from, is entitled to a run for his white alley. There is not a member of the committee that can say that McLane has spent more money than was spent by the contestant in this case. There is not a member of the committee that can say that Mr. Farr received more votes in this election than was received by McLane, because they have not gone down to the very bottom of this case and examined all the records that were cited in the brief. This being the case, I do not see how any Member here should want to vote on this question until all the evidence that has been cited in the brief has been brought to the attention of the committee and then properly and carefully considered. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 15 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE].

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, I do not pretend any profound knowledge of the facts in this case, but I do wish to make my appeal to the fair judgment, to the honest judgment, of the Members of this House, regardless of their politics, to pause and consider before they turn from the doors of this Capitol as a disgraced man Patrick McLane, of Pennsylvania, upon the record that is made in this case. Mr. Farr, whom I do not know, a long time Member of Congress, as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] has called attention, through his committee, through the county committee, when the only contest on the Republican side was to elect him, spent $10,000 that we know of. The county Democratic executive committee of this county, not trained in election contests, not familiar with the rules of the House with reference to expenditures, with many candidates for legislative offices in addition to the candidacy of Mr. McLane, spent approximately the same amount, but Mr. Farr's committee, with their trained experience—and listen, gentlemen on the Republican side of the House, to the justice of this statement—with only Mr. Farr involved, expended $10,000. Mr. McLane's committee, with Mr. McLane and other candidates involved, spent approximately over $10,000, but the county Democratic executive committee certified they spent the amount in the election of Patrick McLane for Congress. The Committee on Elections No. 1 italicizes that statement to prove that the contestant ought to be seated in this House.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEE. Just one moment. Let me say to you gentlemen that if every man in this House—and I do not look at anybody, because I can look anywhere and locate him—who either himself or through his friends for him spent more than the maximum amount allowed by Congress was unseated, there would be an exodus from the Congress of the United States equal to the exodus of the Democrats on the 4th of March. [Laughter.]

If Mr. McLane has violated a corrupt practices act of Pennsylvania, a criminal statute, the courts of Pennsylvania are open for his prosecution. The Senate of the United States has before it for consideration the election of a Senator from the State of Michigan. There was no question in the world about the expenditure of money in large sums beyond the sum allowed by the laws of Michigan. That gentleman is to-day a Member of the Senate of the United States, and in the dying days of this session, in the ebbing days of the Congress, we are asked to expel an honest Member of this body because his friends spent a sum in excess of the amount allowed by law. Oh, they say, he should have had notice of it and that constructive notice is brought to him. The constructive notice is also brought to Mr. Farr.

Here is another thing I want to suggest to you gentlemen. I believe in giving the under dog a chance. My Democratic colleagues on this committee have forgotten the rights of this man. [Applause on Democratic side.] My friends on the Democratic side of that committee have sat in the committee room and have brought in a report here that puts a stamp of infamy upon this man without the foundation of fact for it. [Applause on Democratic side.] They tell you there were illegal votes cast. Yes; there were illegal votes cast. The committee says they do not know how many or for whom they were cast, but they presume they were cast for Mr. McLane. Let us see. Take Carbondale. There were 13 illegal registered votes cast at Carbondale in the first ward. Seven of them were voted for Mr. Farr. One testified that he voted for Mr. McLane and the other five refused to disclose for whom they voted. In the fifth ward three illegal votes were found. All of them were cast for Mr. Farr. Are Mr. Farr's hands so clean that he can hold them up to high heaven and clothe himself in the white robe of innocence when under the known testimony in this case illegal votes have been cast for him?

My friends on the committee say there were no allegations of fraud in these ballots, and that that is the reason they did not open these boxes that contained 4,600 votes. What was the purpose of the committee? Did the committee merely confine itself to allegations of fraud made by Mr. Farr? If that is what they propose to do, well and good. This man, not clothed with the machinery of office, was not able to make the allegation that there was fraud in the 4,600 votes that he impounded the election boxes for. I say in answer to the suggestion that there was no allegation of fraud, that it is the duty of this committee before they put a stain on the name of a good man to open those boxes, and let the chips fall where they may. But when they did not do it, they have no right to put a stain upon him. How many illegal votes in the 4,600 were there? My friend from Massachusetts and the other gentlemen talk about the thousand and six illegal votes that they found, and they prorate them between the two candidates, and you can take the record and you will see that the number was largely in favor of Mr. Farr.

Gentlemen, I realize the die is cast; I realize the verdict is already written. I hold no brief for this man, but 40 years ago he came to this country, an immigrant boy from Ireland. He lived in the city of Scranton among his people. He followed the humble but very honorable occupation of a locomotive fireman upon the trains that came into that city. He was selected by his party to carry the falling standard of Democracy in that district.

He carried that standard to victory and brought to the bar of this House the credentials from the election officer of Pennsylvania that he had been duly elected. Nearly two years have passed. In that two years he has sat and exercised his prerogatives and his rights as a Member of Congress. In these dying days he is turned adrift. This gentleman who contests his election now and who ran thousands of votes behind his ticket in the city of Scranton under the committee's report, was defeated by his own party for the primary election last year, comes into this House, and it is proposed upon this character of record to vote into his pocket $15,000 of the taxpayers' money, to vote to him $6,400 for clerk hire, to give him mileage for four sessions of Congress to his home and back, and his stationery account. I appeal, Mr. Speaker, in the name of fairness, in the name of justice, in the name of common decency, in the name of honesty, that you gentlemen exercise your judgment as men and cast your vote in favor of the contestee, Patrick McLane. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts has very generously yielded to me 5 minutes of his time, making 10 minutes.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the debate be extended 30 minutes—half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts and half by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I trust that in the time that is remaining to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] he will give to the House more information than has yet been given upon an aspect in this case which is perhaps the most important aspect. This report says:

> The committee therefore finds that the contestee, Patrick McLane, must, under the law, be held to have had constructive knowledge of expenditures made in excess of the amount permitted under the corrupt practices act, and for that reason, in accordance with congressional precedent, he is not entitled to a seat in the Sixty-sixth Congress.

And a resolution in accordance with that is presented, and upon which we shall first vote. Now, this report recites that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McLane], the contestee, contributed some $708, I believe, or something like that. The report does not state in any place what is contributed to the campaign fund by Mr. Farr or his party, but we learn from the debate on the floor that he contributed $2,000. Now, let me ask how is it that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McLane] shall be held to have had "constructive knowledge" of an amount of some $12,000 expended in his behalf and the other gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Farr] is not held to have any constructive knowledge of $10,000 expended in his behalf. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If we are to place ourselves upon the ground that one should be unseated because there has been expended in his behalf more than $5,000, why shall the rule not apply to the other? Why should that which is sauce to the Democratic goose not be sauce to the Republican gander? [Applause on the Democratic side.] What sort of disposition is it that you are undertaking to show here now? Are you wishing to lay down such a principle and ask this House to commit itself to it, when in the next Congress are to be gentlemen who have already filed statements showing that there have been expended in their behalf amounts far in excess of the law, and permit those gentlemen on the Republican side to retain seats in the next House while you unseat Mr. McLane in this Congress.

I do not think the attitude of these gentlemen upon the question of prohibition has anything to do with this contest. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That which is involved here goes beyond their views.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I have been very much surprised at the attitude of the Democratic side of the House in absolutely ignoring the members of their own party on the Committee on Elections No. 1, men of high standing and character, who have given their time and thought to an exhaustive investigation of this case. This is a unanimous report of this committee, and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC], who spoke for 20 or 25 minutes against the committee's report, as long as he was a member of that committee never gave any intimation but that he agreed with the other members of the committee.

Mr. MCCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I have not the time to yield, Mr. Speaker. I have a lot of things to reply to. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC] was on the subcommittee with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUHRING], and they went over certain of these precincts, and at one time the gentleman from Oklahoma expressed some doubt as to the question of illegal voting, and he came down to my office, and I showed him the original voting lists, and he told me that he was satisfied from the original voting list that a large number of men who had been permitted to vote were not on the official voting list.

Mr. MCCLINTIC. I think the gentleman wants to be fair to the House. I will admit that that statement the gentleman has made is true as far as those boxes were concerned, but the 32 boxes that were questioned were never examined by the committee, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. DALLINGER. Why should the committee have sent for those ballot boxes and spent months on them when there is no contention in the contestee's brief in regard to any illegality or fraud in any of those precincts? The request of the contestee that these 4,600 votes, the returns of which were not questioned by anyone, should be counted by the committee was simply for delay. We have investigated every contention in the contestant's brief and every contention in the contestee's brief. They were the only contentions relied upon before our committee either by the candidates or by their counsel.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I have no time to yield. I decline to yield further at this time, Mr. Speaker.

Now, in regard to this question of expense accounts, the gentlemen on the other side overlook entirely the fact that there were three accounts filed in the interest of Mr. McLane. Mr. Farr simply contributed his $2,000 to the Republican county committee which had charge of the campaign for all the Republican candidates from the State ticket down to local county officers. Mr. McLane filed his own account, showing seven or eight hundred dollars. The Democratic county committee filed a return, the original of which the committee examined, in which the officials of that committee certify under oath that the money was spent in the interest of Patrick McLane for Congress.

Mr. FLOOD. How many Republican candidates were there?

Mr. DALLINGER. A large number, State and local.

Mr. FIELDS. Was the gubernatorial candidate in danger?

Mr. DALLINGER. The Republican organization in every county in Pennsylvania spent money for all the candidates.

Mr. FIELDS. Was the gubernatorial candidate in danger? Will you answer that question?

Mr. DALLINGER. I decline to yield. The gentleman has overlooked the fact that in addition to the report of the Democratic county committee, in which they themselves under oath said that the expenditures were incurred in behalf of Patrick McLane, there was a McLane campaign committee, which spent $11,749.

There was no Farr campaign committee, but there was a McLane campaign committee in addition to the Democratic county committee, and they spent $11,749, the contributors to which campaign committee were liquor dealers of Lackawanna County and life-long friends of Patrick McLane, the contestee. Mr. McLane said he did not know anything about this McLane committee. The testimony shows that he was in constant consultation with members and officers of that committee. Bills for advertising, according to the testimony——

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I decline to yield. Bills for advertising, as shown on page 14 of the testimony in this case, were in the first instances sent to Mr. McLane, directed to his address in Scranton. When it was found that the bills were likely to amount to over $5,000, then they resorted to this expedient of having a McLane campaign committee so as to evade the corrupt practices act.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman decline to yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes; I decline to yield further at this time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in regard to this question of fraud, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] asked me to give him some cases. Before the recess I referred him to the Tague-Fitzgerald case in the present Congress. There is a long line of congressional and State precedents, including the cases of Renshaw against Conaghan, 17 district reports, Pennsylvania, 705; Gibbons against Sheppard, 2 Brewster, Pennsylvania 1; Conway against Carpenter, 15 Philadelphia, Pa., 388; Mann against Cassidy, 2 Philadelphia, Pa., 320; Barber's case, 10 Philadelphia, Pa., 579; Duffy's case, 4 Brewster, Pennsylvania, 553; Blair against Barrett, Thirty-sixth Congress, Rowell, 165; Konox against Blair, Thirty-eighth Congress, Rowell, 190; Howard against Cooper, Thirty-sixth Congress, Rowell, 161; Washburn against Voorhees, Thirty-ninth Congress, Rowell, 201; Myers against Moffett, Forty-first Congress, Rowell, 235; McKenzie against Braxton, Forty-second Congress, Rowell, 265; Giddings against Clark, Forty-second Congress, Rowell, 279.

Now, the committee figured this case out on every possible supposition. They first went according to the congressional precedents and threw out all the precincts where this outrageous fraud and illegal voting occurred. That would give Mr. Farr the election by a plurality of 2,420 votes.

And I may say incidentally that through an inadvertence there was left out of the report of the committee the facts in regard to the first ward of Olyphant Borough, where the ballot box and the voting list and the poll book and everything else disappeared, and where the generous election officials gave Mr. Farr 10 votes and Mr. McLane 277 votes. If we had simply thrown out that precinct alone, according to the congressional precedents, it would have elected Mr. Farr.

Now, simply taking the 1,006 illegal votes which were absolutely proven by the testimony and checked up by the original voting lists and the poll books, and subtracting them pro rata from the candidates in accordance with the precedent in the case of Parley against Walls in the Forty-fourth Congress (Rowell 305) the contestant John R. Farr is elected by a plurality of 476 votes.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, may I make an inquiry of the gentleman?

Mr. DALLINGER. I decline to yield. I wish I had more time. Then I would yield to everybody.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the committee, in order to be fair—and I want to say to the Democratic Members of this House that these gentlemen who have spoken here recently on the Democratic side are men who do not know anything about the facts, who have not investigated the matter as Judge ROBINSON of North Carolina and Mr. BLAND of Virginia have—I say in order to give the benefit of the doubt to this contestee, instead of throwing out all these precincts where this fraud and this illegality occurred, we simply threw out those where there was gross fraud and collusion of the election officers and subtracted pro rata the illegal votes in the other districts, and that gives John R. Farr, the contestant, the election by a plurality of 1,454 votes.

Mr. DEWALT. Does the gentleman still decline to yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I decline to yield. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DEWALT. With the gentleman's permission——

Mr. DALLINGER. I will yield simply for a question.

Mr. DEWALT. The gentleman says they examined 77 witnesses out of 1,106. Is that correct?

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman entirely misunderstood me. I never made any such statement. What I said was this: That the contestee in the city of Carbondale claimed that there were 77 illegal votes.

Mr. DEWALT. And that 77 witnesses had been examined out of 1,106?

Mr. DALLINGER. Hold on a minute. We were simply talking about the city of Carbondale. If the gentleman will give me time to answer and not interrupt me, I will answer him. The contestee claimed there were 77 illegal votes in the city of Carbondale. We went into every one of those, as we went into every other one of the contestee's allegations, and we subtracted the illegal votes from the contestant's total, where they testified that they voted for Mr. Farr, and the others pro rata——

Mr. DEWALT. You examined 77 out of 1,106.

Mr. DALLINGER. I can not yield further.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a legal question about this? I just wanted to ask this question. The gentleman cited precedents: Is there any precedent where the House unseated a man because he spent too much money and then seated the contestant? Does not that merely vacate the seat?

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, this question of the unlawful expenditure of money was only one phase of the case.

Mr. STEVENSON. I wanted to understand what the position of this committee was as to that.

Mr. DALLINGER. In the case of Gill against Catlin the gentleman's side of the House unseated a Member from the State of Missouri and seated his Democratic contestant where there was no evidence at all that he had expended the money. The evidence only showed that his father and brother had spent a lot of money, and they charged that he must have had constructive knowledge. In this case Mr. McLane had actual notice, and it was a deliberate, premeditated attempt to violate the corrupt practices act, and they thought because they filed the statement of a "McLane campaign committee" they could evade the statute passed by Congress.

Mr. STEVENSON. The committee in this case only finds constructive notice. Is not that the finding?

Mr. DALLINGER. We find, Mr. Speaker, that he had constructive notice of everything that the McLane committee and the Democratic county committee did, based on the evidence of the actual notice that he did have. That is what we find. That is altogether different.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do I understand that the report of the committee justifies the assumption, standing alone, that the proof of the expenditure of more money than was allowed by the corrupt practices act would be sufficient to prohibit a man from holding a seat in this House?

Mr. DALLINGER. On the basis of the precedent of Gill against Catlin, most certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wanted to be clear about that.

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes. Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt whatever in this case that there was a violation of the corrupt practices act. But apart from that, admitting that Mr. McLane was not at fault at all because of the spending of this vast sum of money under the guise of a McLane campaign committee, which he said he did not know anything about—throwing that all aside, upon the testimony in this case and upon silent testimony of the voting lists and the poll books——

Mr. CONNALLY rose.

Mr. DALLINGER. I decline to yield—on the testimony of the voting lists and the poll books, and the testimony taken under the statute subject to examination and cross-examination, going into every allegation in the contestant's brief and in the contestee's brief, giving the contestee the benefit of every doubt, Mr. Farr was elected by a large majority.

Mr. GARRETT rose.

Mr. DALLINGER. I decline to yield, Mr. Speaker. I ask the attention of the House in these closing minutes. I know Members are tired and weary, but I simply want to say that the committee gave this matter the most earnest consideration. We tried to give the contestee the benefit of every doubt, and I want to say that as a student of election cases from the beginning down to date, there never was a more outrageous conspiracy to defraud an electorate or more gross frauds, in which the election officials of both parties took part. It was a wet and dry fight, and Mr. Farr had no friends upon the election boards in many of these foreign-speaking districts. It was the most outrageous condition of affairs that I have ever known to exist in any election case in all my reading. Why, Mr. Speaker, scores and hundreds of these unnaturalized foreigners were stopped as they were going along the street and were told to come up to the election booth. They protested that they were not naturalized, and the reply was, "Never mind; this is a wet and dry fight; everybody can vote." And they were brought up and their ballots marked for them; and these men testified to that fact.

Boys were induced to come to the polls, boys 18 years old, and to swear to false affidavits that they were of age, and were allowed to vote. Hundreds of men were permitted to vote whose names were not on the voting list, who made no affidavits as required by the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, and they were allowed to vote by the election officials. The names of boys who were fighting for their country overseas were voted upon by collusion of the election officials. This contestee, who is so solicitous about his rights, in his brief before the committee asked us to throw out all the soldier vote because the returns did not comply with all the technicalities of an old statute passed in 1864. He wanted to disfranchise every soldier in that whole district.

But even if we had done all that he asked, it would not have altered the result.

Mr. ROSE. A determined, persistent effort has been made here undertaking to show that Mr. McLane had nothing more than constructive notice as to the great expenditure of money in his behalf. I want to say that on pages 677 and 678 of the evidence taken in this case it is shown conclusively that Mr. McLane was present with the committee and discussed with them the expenditures made in his campaign.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. I decline to yield any further.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. McLane did not acknowledge that he knew anything about the expenditure of that money.

Mr. ROSE. He says he was with the committee nearly all the time; says so in his own testimony. This should be conclusive.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for one question?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. How can Mr. McLane be held to have constructive notice and Mr. Farr not to be held to have constructive notice?

Mr. DALLINGER. There is no parallel between the two cases. Mr. Farr had no campaign committee at all. Mr. Farr simply contributed $2,000 to the regular Republican county committee, the money being used for all the candidates on the Republican ticket.

Mr. STEVENSON. Was not that his campaign committee?

Mr. DALLINGER. There was a Democratic county committee, which spent a lot of money, and if they had not filed a return here and said under their own oaths that it was all spent for Mr. McLane we would not have considered it.

Mr. McLANE rose.

Mr. DALLINGER. I decline to yield. But in addition to the Democratic county committee return, in addition to the McLane personal return, there was the McLane campaign committee organized according to the gentleman's own admission a short time before the election which spent over $11,000, and the testimony shows that he knew all about it.

Mr. McLANE. Did I admit that I consulted with the McLane campaign committee?

Mr. DALLINGER. No; but the testimony was there.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Was the McLane campaign expenditure filed with the Clerk of the House?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes; amounting to $11,749.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Was the amount expended by the committee of Mr. Farr filed?

Mr. DALLINGER. No; because it is not required. No county committee report is required to be filed here; it is only personal returns of candidates and congressional committee returns. It was not spent for Mr. Farr alone; it was spent for all the candidates on the Republican ticket.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Was the report of the McLane campaign committee required to be filed here?

Mr. DALLINGER. It was filed here, because they knew that the money was spent solely for Mr. McLane. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the gentlemen on the other side deliberately ignore the McLane campaign committee, which expended over $11,000. Why was the report of that committee filed here? Because they knew that under the law it should have been filed under McLane's personal returns; it was just as much his expenditure as if he had spent it himself.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. No. Mr. McLane would naturally have received these sums from his friends in the liquor business, but when they found that it was over $5,000 they resorted to the expedient of organizing the McLane campaign committee, figuring thereby to evade the law.

Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say to the Democratic Members of this House that it comes with a poor grace for them not to stand by the unanimous report of this committee when the Republican side of the House stood by the unanimous report of the same committee in the case of the gentleman who now stands before me, from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]. [Applause on the Republican side.] When we reported unanimously in favor of Mr. MAJOR of Missouri and allowed him to keep his seat, it comes with a poor grace for them to repudiate their own men, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBINSON] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], two able, conscientious, Democratic Members who have studied this case for weeks and months, and allow Members who have not studied the case to appeal to them to go back on the record. I trust the resolution I have offered will be adopted, and that Mr. Farr will be given the seat that he is entitled to. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I want to know if a motion would be in order to recommit the report on the Farr and McLane case to Election Committee No. 1 with instructions to examine the other 32 boxes of ballots?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order now.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Would a motion be in order?

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered by agreement.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Then, can I offer a substitute for the report?

The SPEAKER. Not after the previous question is ordered, and the previous question was ordered by unanimous consent.

Mr. WINGO. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. Does the Speaker rule that a motion to recommit will not lie after the previous question is ordered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not sure about that.

Mr. WINGO. I think the Chair will find that a motion to recommit is in order in all cases.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware of any reason why a motion to recommit would not be in order. The Chair will be glad to hear anyone to the contrary.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I send up the motion and ask that it be reported.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, there are two provisions in the rules with reference to a motion to recommit. I have but one of them in my hand at this moment, and that is the one to which the gentleman made reference, providing that a motion to recommit shall be in order after the previous question is ordered. That rule provides that after the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of a bill or joint resolution one motion to recommit shall be in order.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my motion be reported.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the other rule in reference to a motion to recommit is Rule XVII, where it is provided:

It shall be in order, pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to recommit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee.

In the Manual is this statement, under No. 790:

The motion to recommit under this rule applies to resolutions of the House alone as well as to bills.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, it has been held, and, of course, the Chair is familiar with the practice, that it is in order to recommit a conference report to the committee of conference. Rule XVII, to which the gentleman refers, provides that the previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments and include the bill to its passage or rejection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to hear argument on the other side.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be no argument on the other side.

The SPEAKER. A decision in Hinds' Precedents seems to hold that in an election case it is in order to recommit. The Chair thinks the motion is in order. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers a motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McCLINTIC moves that the report in the Farr against McLane contested case be recommitted to the Committee on Elections No. 1, with instructions to examine the tally sheets and the registration lists in the 32 boxes impounded by a court order under date of April 5, 1919, on the prayer of the contestee, and to report back to the House when all of the testimony and facts have been properly considered.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, the gentleman can not debate it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I understood I had 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 120, nays 161, answered "present" 2, not voting 145, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?
Mr. PELL. I do not think I got in in time; I do not know who they were calling when I came in.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.
Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if Mr. DYER is recorded?
The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.
Mr. DOMINICK. Then I will ask to withdraw my vote of "aye" and be recorded as present, as I have a pair with him.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.
Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, may we have that reported again?
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the resolution.
The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Patrick McLane was not elected a Member of the House of Representatives from the tenth congressional district of the State of Pennsylvania in this Congress and is not entitled to retain a seat herein.

Resolved, That John R. Farr was duly elected a Member of the House of Representatives from the tenth congressional district of the State of Pennsylvania in this Congress and is entitled to a seat herein.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. McARTHUR. Are not these two separate resolutions?
The SPEAKER. They are, if any gentleman desires them separated.
Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the resolution.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands a division of the resolution. The question is on the first resolution.
The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.
Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
The question was taken; and there were—yeas 161, nays 113, answered "present" 4, not voting 150, as follows:

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, is Mr. DYER recorded?
The SPEAKER. He is not.
Mr. DOMINICK. I desire to withdraw my vote of "nay" and answer "present," as I am paired with that gentleman.
Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as I am paired with the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE], I wish to withdraw my vote of "nay" and answer "present."
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
The SPEAKER. The vote now comes on the second resolution, which the Clerk will again report.
The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That John R. Farr was duly elected a Member of the House of Representatives from the tenth congressional district of the State of Pennsylvania in this Congress and is entitled to a seat herein.

The question was taken on the resolution, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 158, nays 106, answering "present" 5, not voting 159, as follows:

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. DYER, recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. DOMINICK. I wish to withdraw my vote of "nay" and vote "present," as I was paired with the gentleman from Missouri, and I wish to make the same announcement that I made on the other vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. DALLINGER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, submitted for printing, under the rule, the conference report and accompanying statement on the bill (H. R. 15543) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that action on the Senate amendment No. 58, which is the amendment whereby the Senate has inserted an authorization for the sale of $200,000,000 of farm-loan bonds, be postponed for consideration until Tuesday. By that means I think it possible that we can get this conference report up to-morrow, and get along with it so that it can be concluded before the end of the session.

Mr. SISSON. Reserving the right to object, I have no objection to that being done. In fact, I think that by taking the bill back to conference with that one amendment to come back to the House, as I understand it, to be voted on on Tuesday——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes——

Mr. SISSON. The bill then can be agreed to, or could be agreed to, and the engrossing clerk can engross all the bill except that page.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is it the intention to take the bill back to conference before Tuesday?

Mr. SISSON. I understand we shall take the bill back to conference——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You can not without this amendment to it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Even so, we will have made that much progress.

Mr. SISSON. The point the gentleman from Illinois makes is that the whole report will have to be made.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You can have an understanding.

Mr. SISSON. It can be made with the understanding that the items can be brought back to the House on Tuesday. The understanding is that we will not recede, but get a vote on it in the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The understanding would be if the bill comes up to-morrow or Monday that formally we would further insist on the disagreement to the amendment, and that the amendment will be brought back to the House for the House to vote upon on Tuesday, if the conference report comes back on Tuesday.

Mr. WINGO. I may be in error, but my understanding is that we can go ahead with the conference report with respect to everything except this amendment, and then, on Tuesday morning, if the situation required it, the House could express itself on that one amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. True; but if you send the bill back for further conference this amendment must go back with it——

Mr. GOOD. On a disagreement.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. That is assuming that the House will further insist on other amendments also, and that the House will vote down a motion to concur in this amendment. If the House concurs in this amendment, of course, it would not need to go back to conference.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The purpose is to wait, as I understand, to see if the Supreme Court should decide the pending case on Monday. The gentleman says this matter will not be disposed of in conference, or that the Senate will not recede, and that it will be brought back to the House if it goes to conference before then.

Mr. SISSON. It insures a vote on that amendment.

Mr. GOOD. You will have a vote on it on Tuesday.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15962. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 15441. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, I present the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. FARR, to be sworn in.

Mr. FARR appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office prescribed by law.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on House bill 14461——

Mr. PELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Saturday, February 26, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV,

427. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Damariscotta River, Me., was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. COADY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15963) to amend and reenact the first paragraph of subdivision (a) of section 209 of the transportation act, 1920, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1360), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FESS, from the Committee on Education, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15853) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended by the act of July 11, 1919, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1374), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FOCHT, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2682) for the relief of Blanche Winters, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1361), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FERRIS: A bill (H. R. 16152) to amend an act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain, approved February 25, 1920; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 476) to pay the actual and necessary expenses of James I. Coffey and William Lufkins in visiting Washington in the interests of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island, urging the passage of legislation now pending in Congress for the benefit of disabled men of the World War; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. McGLENNON: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, favoring the passage of House bills 13558, 10845, 14961, and 14157, which contain legislation for the benefit of the ex-service man; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. OLDFIELD: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, favoring the construction of a United States Public Health Service hospital for tubercular cases at Booneville, Ark; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII,

Mr. CANNON introduced a resolution (H. Res. 695) to pay Arthur Lucas for special janitor services, which was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6057. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the Unemployed League of Denver, Colo., asking that public work be started, so as to give work to the unemployed; to the Committee on Appropriations.

6058. By Mr. ACKERMAN: Petition of 109 citizens of Roselle Park, N. J., protesting against the passage of the Smith-Towner educational bill; to the Committee on Education.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 26, 1921.

(Legislative day of Thursday, February 24, 1921.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

KERENSKY GOVERNMENT OF RUSSIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, with accompanying documents, in response to Senate resolution 417, of January 4, 1921, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the Senate information as to the use of the funds of the United States in aid of the so-called Kerensky government of Russia, which communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, February 25, 1921.

SIR: Pursuant to Senate resolution 417, I have the honor to furnish the following information:

Question 1. Are funds of the United States being used either directly or indirectly to support or maintain an embassy in the city of Washington, D. C., representing the so-called Kerensky government of Russia, and, if so, how much money has been thus expended, and what authority is there for such expenditure?

Answer. No funds of the United States have been so used. The funds of the United States were used solely for the purchase of obligations of the Russian Government in accordance with the Liberty loan acts. The funds paid by the United States to the Russian Government to purchase its obligations became the funds of the Russian Government. Among the expenditures of the Russian Government from its funds, as shown by the below-mentioned reports, are disbursements to support or maintain the Russian Embassy in Washington.

Question 2. Was money advanced from the Treasury of the United States to establish a credit on behalf of the Kerensky government, and, if so, in what amount, and for what purpose was it used?

Answer. As set forth in the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1920, in pursuance of the authority of the Liberty loan acts, the Secretary of the Treasury did from time to time, with the approval of the President, establish credits in favor of the provisional government of Russia, but no such credits were established subsequent to the fall of the so-call Kerensky government in November, 1917. Advances were made to the said Russian Government on the following dates and in the following amounts:

1917.

July 6	$35,000,000
July 13	10,000,000
Aug. 1	2,500,000
Aug. 22	2,500,000
Aug. 24	37,500,000
Aug. 30	10,000,000
Sept. 25	15,000,000
Oct. 2	22,200,000
Oct. 11	20,000,000
Nov. 1	31,700,000
Nov. 15	1,329,750
	187,729,750

The proceeds of the advance of $1,329,750 made on November 15, 1917, were simultaneously applied by the Russians to the payment of interest to the Government of the United States. No advances were made after November 15, 1917.

As shown in Exhibits 26 and 28, on pages 338 and 342 of the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1920, respectively, the expenditures reported by the Russian Government for the period April 6, 1917, to December 31, 1917, were as follows:

EXPENDITURES.

Munitions, including remounts	$58,698,646.58
Exchange and cotton purchases	53,186,352.70
Other foods	1,706,909.48
Other supplies	49,338,982.34
Transportation	2,155,769.40
Shipping	1,324,678.54
Interest	4,129,761.64
Maturities	5,000,000.00
Miscellaneous	3,041,568.89
	178,582,669.57

Subsequent to January 1, 1918, further expenditures for similar items were reported to the amount of $50,658,684.89. The total expenditures reported for the entire period from April 6, 1917, to December 15, 1920, were therefore $228,641,354.46. The Russian representatives have reported receipts since December 31, 1917, of $25,466,962.83. Certain of these are doubtless refunds of payments included among the expenditures, and others may be the proceeds of goods purchased by means of the expenditures. There is reason to believe, however, that a large portion of the receipts are the proceeds of materials purchased by the Russians out of resources other than United States advances.

Question 3: What amount of money, if any, does the Kerensky government owe to the Government of the United States, how is it secured, what rate of interest does it bear, and when does it mature?

Answer: For its advances to Russia, as stated on page 55 of the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1920, the Secretary holds obligations of the Russian Government corresponding in amount and bearing the respective dates set forth in the foregoing table of advances. Said obligations are in the form of certificates of indebtedness payable to the United States without deduction as to principal and interest for taxes of the debtor Government in gold coin of the United States of the present standard of weight and fineness at the Subtreasury of the United States in New York or at the Treasury of the United States in Washington. They are signed in the name of the provisional Government of Russia by a representative of that Government designated to the Treasury by the Department of State as being authorized to sign them in the name and on behalf of that Government. Certain of the certificates were payable at fixed dates of maturity, all of which are now past, so that they are now held as demand obligations. The remainder were expressed to be payable on demand. Certain of them were expressed to bear interest at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum and the others at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, being the same rates borne by the obligations issued at that time by the United States Government. By arrangement similar to that made with other Governments interest has been charged on all Russian obligations since May 15, 1918, at a rate equivalent to 5 per cent per annum on the total amount thereof. As stated on page 57 of my annual report, the amount of interest heretofore paid on the above-mentioned Russian obligations is $4,595,564.15, being the interest up to November 15, 1917, in full, together with a partial payment of $1,865,925.08 on account of the interest which became due May 15, 1918, and partial payments of $1,399,877.43 on account of the interest which became due November 15, 1918. As stated on page 58 of the annual report, the Secretary holds a special fund of $1,808,506, which is equal to the unpaid balance of the interest matured on Russian obligations on May 15, 1918, and which it is believed ultimately can be applied in discharge of that balance and a similar fund of $335,095.07, which it is believed will be applicable upon the unpaid balance of interest which became due November 15, 1918. As shown at the same page of the report, the interest accrued and remaining unpaid on the above-mentioned Russian obligations for the half years ending November 15, 1918; April 15, 1919, and May 15, 1919, October 15, 1919, and November 15, 1919; April 15, 1920, and May 15, 1920, and October 15, 1920, and November 15, 1920, amounts in all, after deduction of the special funds above mentioned, to $21,187,741.90. For the interest which became due November 15, 1918, the Treasury holds an obligation of that date executed in the name of the provisional Government of Russia, payable on demand with interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, and for the interest which became due subsequently, the Treasury holds formal undertakings executed by the Russian representatives on behalf of the provisional Government of Russia that said Government promises to pay the respective amounts so becoming due on demand with interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum. As shown on pages 65, 66, and 67 of the report, the Treasury has received as custodian from the Secretary of War, on account of sales of surplus war supplies a Russian obligation dated August 8, 1919, for $406,082.30, payable June 30, 1922, with interest at 5 per cent, on which the sum of $10,179.87 has been received on account of interest accrued for the period from June 30, 1919, to December 30, 1919, and has also received from the American Relief Administration, on account of relief, pursuant to act approved February 25, 1919, Russian obligations dated July 1, 1919, for $4,465,465.07, payable on June 30, 1921, with interest. No interest has been paid on these obligations.

Question 4. After the downfall of the Kerensky government, did the Government of the United States purchase war material or other supplies from the officials of the Kerensky government with funds of the United States, and if so, what was the nature of the supplies, how much money was paid for the same, and was the purchase made at a time when the Kerensky government was indebted to the United States, and if so, in what amount?

Answer. It is my understanding that subsequent to November 15, 1917, the Government of the United States purchased through its various departments and agencies certain materials from the Russian representatives. The correspondence in my office indicates purchases as follows:

Rails and accessories	$9,188,318.92
Machine guns	1,572,021.00
Motor trucks and parts	214,500.00
Lenses	4,270.00
Ammunition	68,236.28

I believe there were also other purchases, the total amount of which was only a small fraction of the foregoing. This Government also paid the Russian representatives $1,921,597.48 charter hire for ships. These items include, as I understand it, substantially all the payments made by departments of this Government. Exact figures can be obtained only by reference to the departments and agencies concerned. Such payments would appear in the Treasury records only in the accounts presented to the auditor by the various disbursing officers who made them, and could be ascertained only by a physical examination of the accounts and vouchers. This would require months of work by many people, is impracticable, and was not, as I understand it, contemplated by the resolution. The funds mentioned above in this answer were placed in the liquidation account. The cargo of certain Russian ships diverted from Murmansk and Archangel to England was sold in England and purchased, in part, by and for the use of the American Expeditionary Forces. The special funds referred to above as being held to cover interest payments are composed of proceeds of these cargoes.

Question 5. Has the Government of the United States taken any steps to reimburse itself for money advanced or loaned to the Kerensky government?

Answer. Except to the extent above stated, I am not aware that the Government of the United States has taken any steps to reimburse itself for money advanced or loaned to the Russian Government.

As of December 1, 1917, the unpaid balance on contracts made by the Russian Government with our people was something over $102,000,000. The contracts were in all stages of performance. The funds on hand of the Russian Government in the United States amounted to about $56,000,000. At the end of December, 1917, as a result of the payment, cancellation, or reduction of contracts, the unpaid balance on contracts in America was reduced to less than $50,000,000. The liquidation has since been completed, liability under said contracts discharged, and a substantial amount of property shipped to Russians in territory not under the control of the bolsheviks.

These matters were dealt with at length by Mr. Polk, then Under Secretary of State, and Mr. Leffingwell, then Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in hearings before the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department of the House of Representatives in the summer and autumn of 1919, and were also considered in the hearings on Russian propaganda before a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate in the winter and spring of 1920. For the information of the Senate copies of the statements by Mr. Polk and Mr. Leffingwell are attached.

Respectfully,

D. F. HOUSTON.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. H. Overhue, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13225) providing for the allotment of lands within the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, Mont., and for other purposes; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SNYDER, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, and Mr. CARTER were appointed managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7775) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message further announced that the House agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9281) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the House agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10515) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message further announced that the House agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11554) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the House agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 15441. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 15962. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HALE presented a resolution of the Legislature of Maine, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

STATE OF MAINE, 1921.

Memorial to Congress by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Eightieth Legislature of the State of Maine, urging the amendment of the Federal water power act so that Maine's water powers shall be saved for the benefit of Maine people.

Resolved, That the Senate and House of the Eightieth Legislature of the State of Maine now in session,

Believing that the future health and prosperity of the citizens of this State depend in a large measure upon the proper development and use within the State of the water powers which nature has placed within our boundaries; and

Believing that the Federal water power act recently passed by the United States Congress may result in the transmission beyond the borders of the State of the hydroelectric energy generated therein, thereby causing serious and irreparable loss and injury to the health and prosperity of the State and to the future growth of industries therein,

Respectfully urge upon the Congress now in session the necessity of amending the said Federal water power act in order that there shall be no Federal interference with and control of the water powers lying within the borders of the State of Maine; and

The secretary of state is directed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to both branches of Congress and to our Senators and Representatives therein.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 15, 1921.

Read and passed finally.

CHARLES P. BARNES, Speaker.

IN SENATE, February 16, 1921.

Read and passed finally.

CHARLES E. GURNEY, President pro tempore.

Approved February 16, 1921.

PERCIVAL P. BAXTER, Governor.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF MAINE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Frank W. Ball, secretary of state of the State of Maine, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of the resolve of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine in legislature assembled with the original thereof, and that it is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have caused the seal of the State to be hereunto affixed. Given under my hand at Augusta this 23d day of February, in the year of our Lord 1921, and in the one hundred and forty-fifth year of the independence of the United States of America.

[SEAL.] FRANK W. BALL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. WOLCOTT presented memorials of Anna G. Walsh and Mrs. William Green, of Wilmington, Del., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials of Rev. Ignatius Weisbruch and sundry Capuchin Fathers of St. Joseph's Church, of Hays; St. Fidelis Society, of Victoria; and Local No. 1681, Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, of Flush, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PENROSE presented a memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of House bill 15420, to fix the metric system of weights and measures as a single standard for weights and measures, which was referred to the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. MOSES presented resolutions of Dollard des Ormeaux, No. 308, of L'Union St. Jean-Baptiste d'Amerique, and St. Antoine, No. 91, of L'Union St. Jean-Baptiste d'Amerique, both of Woonsocket, R. I., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. GERRY presented a resolution of the general board of L'Union St. Jean-Baptiste d'Amerique, protesting against the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution of the general board of l'Union St. Jean-Baptiste d'Amérique protesting against the passage of the Smith-Towner bill.

The supreme board of l'Union St. Jean-Baptiste d'Amérique, a fraternal society incorporated under the laws of the State of Rhode Island, numbering over 40,000 members, American citizens either by birth or by naturalization, residing in the following States: Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, New York, Illinois, and Michigan, protests against the passage of the Smith-Towner bill creating a Department of Education, etc.

The creation of a Federal department of education will add enormously to the burdens of the Federal Treasury, will increase present taxes, and greatly enlarge the number of Federal employees. The bill as framed is indirectly equivalent to a certificate of incompetency to all the superintendents of education of the various States of the Union.

The Federal control of education is, to say the least, against the spirit of our Constitution. It is undemocratic, in that it aims at centralizing at Washington all matters pertaining to education. It is socialistic, in that it is based upon the false theory that the right to educate children belongs to the State and not to the parents.

We contend that the majority of the people is opposed to the passage of such a bill.

We do not approve of the interference by the Federal Government with our educational system, State or municipal.

We highly condemn the introduction of politics into matters educational.

We feel that the States are fully able, financially and otherwise, to support their schools, to adequately compensate their teachers, and to properly teach the doctrine of true American citizenship.

We believe that the remedy to illiteracy lies in a more rigid enforcement of State laws, in the opening of new evening schools, and that persuasion will do more than compulsion for the education of our citizens.

We deny that the knowledge of spelling and writing is essential to good citizenship; in this connection we unhesitatingly invite an investigation of the literary attainments of those of our citizens who died during the late war on the battlefields of Europe. In this connection also we submit that the agitators, the traitors, the anarchists, the bolshevists which this country has known in the past two or three years were, generally speaking, men highly educated.

We therefore regret the uneasiness brought about by the Smith-Towner bill throughout the length and breadth of our country, and we respectfully urge our representatives, both in the House and Senate, to oppose its passage.

ELIE VEZINA,
General Secretary.

WOONSOCKET, R. I., February 16, 1921.

THOMAS BAYTON AND BERTHA M. HARTT.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3984) for the relief of Thomas Bayton and Bertha M. Hartt, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 818) thereon.

CLAIMS OF R. S. HOWARD CO. AND OTHERS.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Claims, reported a resolution (S. Res. 466) as follows:

Resolved, That the bills making appropriation to pay the R. S. Howard Co., of New York City, N. Y., its loss and damage incurred and suffered by it in complying with United States Navy commandeer order No. N-3255, dated June 18, 1918 (S. 4075); the Acme Die Casting Corporation, of New York City, N. Y. (S. 4260); the Sirio Match Co., of New York City, N. Y. (S. 4261); Fairbanks, Morse & Co., of New York City, N. Y. (S. 4262); the Thermal Syndicate (Ltd.), of New York City, N. Y. (S. 4263); the Drapery Hardware Co., of New York City, N. Y. (S. 4264); Charles B. Chrystal (S. 4265); the William Wrigley, jr., Co. (Inc), of New York City, N. Y. (S. 4266); and the P. L. Andrews Corporation (S. 4417), now pending in the Senate, together with all accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

JOINT COMMISSION ON POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I present a report of the Joint Commission on Postal Service created by the act of April 24, 1920, which was authorized to investigate all present and prospective methods and systems of handling, dispatching, transporting, and delivering the mails, and the facilities therefor; and especially all methods and systems which relate to the handling, delivery, and dispatching of the mails in the large cities of the United States. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and as a document.

Mr. SMOOT. Which would the Senator prefer?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not care which, but perhaps as a document.

Mr. SMOOT. That will be the best.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be printed as a document.

ROCK RIVER, WIS., BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 5032) for the construction of a bridge across Rock River at or near Shirland Avenue, in the city of Beloit, Wis., and I submit a report (No. 819) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. It is a bill which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is very anxious to have passed this evening in order that it may go to the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Beloit, in the State of Wisconsin, be, and the same is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rock River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the point where Shirland Avenue, in said city of Beloit, crosses the said Rock River, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARBITRARY AND LAWLESS ACTS OF OFFICERS.

Mr. BORAH introduced a bill (S. 5039) to protect persons in the exercise of certain privileges and immunities guaranteed and secured by the Constitution of the United States, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I introduce the bill at this time realizing, of course, that we can not expect legislation upon the subject at this session of Congress. Nevertheless, I think it may be advantageous in making progress to have the bill introduced and go to the committee so that those who are interested in the subject may be informed of the nature of it. Mr. President, the civil rights of the private citizen have of late often been challenged and many times wholly denied. This condition has been on the increase for the last quarter of a century. More and more there has been a disregard of the great guaranties of the Federal Constitution so far as the rights of the private citizen are concerned. The facts in support of this judgment are at hand and overwhelming. Men in authority, officers and their agents, have made arrests without warrant, broken into private dwellings without authority, and practiced brutality toward citizens guilty of no offense. The private citizen under such conditions is practically without recourse. This practice seems to be greatly on the increase. Lawlessness in public office and in public places fattens by what it feeds upon.

I do not think we get anywhere, however, by merely criticizing particular individuals or by denouncing for a day a particular public officer. In fact, when such practices have become ingrained in our system, no particular officer is individually responsible. The situation deserves general consideration and permanent treatment. I have therefore introduced this bill, which is designed to protect the private citizen in his constitutional rights, particularly against the arbitrary and lawless acts of public officers. It seems to me that it fairly gets at the situation and would help greatly to remedy this growing evil. In any event, it will serve as a measure around which possibly a better measure may be constructed.

There is no one whose duty it is to be more scrupulous of the obligations of the Constitution or more regardful of the constitutional rights of the citizen than the officer intrusted for a brief season with great authority. Lawlessness among those whose duty it is to enforce and uphold the law breeds lawlessness, and not only that, it begets distrust of and disaffection for the Government itself among the people generally. A high and sincere regard for law, a profound respect for our Constitution must begin with those who are intrusted with the execution of the law. Obedience to the law is the primal pillar upon which free institutions rest. When this spirit of obedience is broken down, law itself becomes in a sense a mockery.

I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF RIVER AND HARBOR ACT.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN introduced a bill (S. 5040) to amend section 13 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LUDWIG C. A. K. MARTENS.

Mr. MOSES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The resolution (S. Res. 464) was read, as follows:

Whereas through the action of Louis F. Post, Assistant Secretary of Labor, a warrant of deportation issued against L. C. A. K. Martens, self-styled ambassador of Russian soviet government, has been canceled:

Resolved, That the Attorney General be requested to inform the Senate whether, in his opinion, such cancellation comports with the evidence adduced in the proceedings against the said Martens, and whether such cancellation will operate to permit the return of the said Martens to this country, and to submit to the Senate a transcript of the evidence in the case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. REED. I think the resolution ought to be amended. Instead of having the opinion of the Attorney General, I should like to have the evidence submitted. I ask the author of the resolution to change it so that it will include a copy of the evidence.

Mr. MOSES. I have no objection to such a change being made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The modification will be stated.

The READING CLERK. At the end of the resolution add "and to submit to the Senate a transcript of the evidence in the case."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

ROSE SMITH DUDLEY.

Mr. PHIPPS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 465), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Rose Smith Dudley, widow of Charles R. Dudley, late enrolling clerk of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the fortifications appropriation bill may be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16100) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the committee amendments shall be considered as they are reached in the reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Hale	McKellar	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Harris	McLean	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Harrison	McNary	Smoot
Capper	Heflin	Moses	Spencer
Culberson	Henderson	Nelson	Sterling
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Sutherland
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Thomas
Dillingham	Kellogg	Phipps	Townsend
Edge	Kendrick	Pittman	Trammell
Elkins	Kenyon	Poindexter	Underwood
Fernald	Keyes	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Fletcher	King	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Gay	Knox	Robinson	Warren
Gerry	La Follette	Sheppard	Williams
Glass	Lenroot	Simmons	Willis
Gooding	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.
Gronna	McCumber	Smith, Ga.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. ASHURST] is absent by reason of illness in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KELLOGG. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head "Engineer Department," on page 2, line 24, after the word "wharves," to strike out "the sum of" and insert "a sum not exceeding," so as to read:

For construction of mining casemates, cable galleries, submarine-mine storehouses, cable tanks, and other structures necessary for the operation, preservation, and care of submarine mines and their accessories, and for providing channels for access to submarine-mine wharves, a sum not exceeding $50,000 of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1921 is made available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 8, on page 3, the last paragraph read being as follows:

For contingent expenses incident to the construction of seacoast fortifications and their accessories, under the Engineer Department, $25,000.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire of my colleague whether or not the appropriations for the salaries and compensation of those engaged in administering the provisions of this bill are not made in other bills? If that is true, what is the reason for a contingent expense account in this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to my colleague that this appropriation is always carried in the fortifications bill. Last year we gave the department $50,000 for the same purpose. This year the appropriation has been cut in half. The estimate for this year was for $50,000. We had an appeal made to us to increase the House appropriation to $50,000, but the committee decided not to do it, and instead gave them $25,000.

Mr. KING. If my colleague will permit me, I desire to say that recently, before the Committee on Naval Affairs, Admiral Sims testified to the effect that fortifications no longer were needed upon our coasts except for naval bases, because of the development of the submarine and of the airplane; in effect that it was a waste of money to make wholesale appropriations for fortifications upon the coast.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to my colleague that this bill only carries $8,000,000, and that is for the purpose of caring for fortifications that we have to-day. There is no new project in the bill. The bill simply provides for the preservation and care of those we already have.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of my colleague whether or not, in view of the recent development of the submarine and the airplane, it would not be a wise idea to abandon some of the obsolete fortifications which we now have upon our coasts?

Mr. SMOOT. That could hardly be done at this time, I will say to my colleague. We are not now prepared with the other defenses, and it would be very unwise at this juncture to cut the appropriation lower than it has been cut. If my colleague will compare this bill with the bill of a year ago or two years ago, he will see that there is not anything left in the pending measure except simply the substance that is absolutely required. Outside of the $8,000,000 appropriation, my colleague will also notice that we propose in this bill to turn back to the Treasury an unexpended balance of $250,000,000.

Mr. KING. I observe that out of the appropriations, which, of course, were made during the World War, and the termination of that war coming sooner than expected, we are left with a large appropriation unexpended.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 5, line 12, to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to sell as soon as possible after the approval of this act, upon such terms and under such conditions as he may deem most advantageous to the best interests of the Government, 2,000 of the tractors owned by the War Department: Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to transfer and deliver to the Secretary of Agriculture for distribution among the highway departments of the several States for use on roads constructed in whole or in part by Federal aid 1,250 tractors owned by the War Department.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to ask the Senator from Utah to give the reasons for proposing to strike that language out of the bill? I think that is a very important provision.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will state the reasons which the committee had for striking that provision out of the bill, and I hope the Senate will pay attention to them. When the bill passed the other House and came to the Senate, the subcommittee met the next morning at 10.30 o'clock for the consideration of the bill, containing the two provisos which had been adopted in the other House. The matter was so important that the Secretary of War telephoned to me immediately his attention was called to the items and asked to be allowed to appear before the subcommittee in opposition to them, stating that if adopted by Congress they would very seriously interfere with the War Department and its equipment.

The facts are, Mr. President, that the War Department had on hand the morning the Secretary of War appeared before the committee 6,752 tractors; there are now in use of those tractors 3,190; the requirements for the National Guard are 2,007, making 5,197 tractors which, under conditions as they exist to-day, are being used and are to be used for the National Guard.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understood, the morning that the Secretary appeared before the committee he stated that there were being used by the Army and National Guard there 3,190 tractors——

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. And he estimated at that time that 2,007 additional would be needed when the National Guard was expanded. The National Guard now numbers some 50,000, and it is proposed to expand it to 125,000. This is shown by the current Army appropriation bill. It seems to me that the Secretary's figures are manifestly wrong. They could not use 2,007 additional tractors for the National Guard, because tractors are now being used by the National Guard and the number is included in the 3,190 shown in the Secretary's figures.

Mr. SMOOT. The committee not only had the testimony of the Secretary of War, which was believed to be correct by the committee, but Gen. Williams also says that these figures are absolutely correct. Before we get through I may take occasion to read the letter from the general.

The average life of a tractor in use in the Army is five years. I am going to take the time to read the testimony of the Secretary of War before the committee, because it is not very long. I will say that if the policy of the War Department is carried out we will not have nearly the number of tractors that are required; we will be short thousands of tractors.

Again, Mr. President, these tractors are very costly machines. They are made, as Senators know, for the hauling of heavy guns uphill and downhill and over streams. The very best kind of a machine is required for that work. These tractors are not adapted to agricultural purposes or for work in connection with road building. That was testified to by the Secretary of War, by Gen. Williams, and by all the other officers familiar with the subject. The Secretary testified that in some cases where these tractors had been delivered and subsequently got out of order it had cost as high as $1,000 to repair them. They are specially made machines, very heavy and very costly, and it is very expensive to maintain them.

Furthermore, they have distributed already $93,000,000 worth of these machines. We could have purchased——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator tell us how they were distributed?

Mr. SMOOT. To the different States of the Union.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In that connection I have just received a telegram asking that tractors be turned over to the State in connection with road building, and for the purpose of transporting repair shops used to keep in repair the machinery and tools employed in road building. The telegram says that the State requires at least one of these big machines, whatever they may be called, to haul around the shop used in connection with the repair of road machines owned by the State. I wanted to ask the Senator in that connection whether any of these tractors have been distributed for road building purposes to any of the States?

Mr. SMOOT. There have been distributed $93,000,000 worth of them.

Mr. GRONNA. Can the Senator give the number of tractors so distributed?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether that fact is stated in the testimony, but I am going to read the Secretary's testimony now, and that will give the details just as they were told to us.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senator to have it read at the desk.

Mr. KELLOGG. The $93,000,000 worth to which the Senator refers were not tractors.

Mr. SMOOT. All I know is what I glean from the testimony.

Mr. KELLOGG. They were automobiles and trucks. No tractors have been distributed at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not talking about automobiles and trucks. I will say to the Senator that trucks are not involved in this item at all. There is an amendment, as I understand, to the Army appropriation bill, which will be considered immediately after the passage of this bill, authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer automobiles and trucks under certain provisions to the States; but the item now under discussion refers only to tractors, and not to automobiles or trucks.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question. To what use do the Army officers put these tractors?

Mr. SMOOT. As the Secretary has said, if the Army did not have these tractors it would have to have horses, as was formerly the case, to draw the guns. The horses would have to feed all the time, and the expense would be an immense item, as the Senator knows. Tractors now are used in the place of horses, which formerly were employed in the drawing of artillery.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. They are used, then, for hauling the heavy ordnance?

Mr. SMOOT. The heavy ordnance; yes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. And they are not the trucks with which we are familiar, which are used for carrying heavy material?

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all; they are made for nobody but the War Department; it is a special type of machine made for them for the purpose I have indicated.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, two weeks ago, or such a matter, the War Department gave an exhibition in Rock Creek Park of the new tractors to which the Senator from Utah refers. There were various types of those tractors, some of them being integral with the gun—that is, they were a unit with the gun carriage—others were tractors made to be hitched to the gun or to the gun carriage as horses used to be hitched to the gun carriage for the same purpose; in other words, they have two types, one being a unit and the other being several units.

The exhibition was given over very rough ground, and I was one of the few members of the Military Affairs Committee who went down to see it. Its superiority over previous methods of transporting heavy artillery in particular, although it is equally good for light artillery, was remarkable. There was no elevation in the park immediately adjacent to the place of the experiment that was too great for those units to go over. One tank, for example, went up a hill—very slowly, of course—but the hill must have had a slope of 30 degrees. It was very steep. Then, among the exhibits was a little Ford tractor, having four wheels, with the tractor engaging the four wheels instead of two; and the smaller type of tractor could easily turn around within its own length.

Mr. SMOOT. Not only could it turn around within its own length, but, if the Senator knows how narrow the bridge over Rock Creek on Connecticut Avenue is, those tractors could turn around within that space almost twice.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If I may ask, are the tractors contemplated in the proposed amendment to which the committee did not agree of the caterpillar type?

Mr. THOMAS. All tractors, I think, are of the caterpillar type.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Not the Fords.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; the Fords of which I speak are. That was a newly invented method, and it was applied to a little Ford machine for the purpose of showing its superiority over other types of tractors.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Was it a continuous belt?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; a continuous belt. The short turn is made by operating only one side at a time and keeping the other out of commission; and the performances of an acrobat in a circus were about the nearest analogy that occurred to me in seeing them operate. With regard to the expense of their operation, of course, I know nothing, although some of the officers said it was no more than with the old method and not as expensive as the former use of horses.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. My interest in it was this: From the fact that the amendment placed in the bill in the House was stricken out by the Senate committee, I inferred that there was not a sufficient amount of these tractors or that they were not suitable for road purposes. What surplus have we on hand?

Mr. SMOOT. As I said, they have on hand 6,752, and they are using to-day 5,197. There will be a surplus of 1,555 tractors altogether; and then, if the Senator will follow me in this testimony, the Secretary of War outlined the fact that those 1,555 are not nearly enough for their purposes, and that the average life of one of these tractors where they are used is only five years.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Of course I shall follow what he has said subsequently; but my general information was that there was a vast surplus of this material that was of no use now to the Army that could be advantageously used in the construction of highways, and that this was for the purpose of authorizing them to transfer these machines to public road building.

Mr. SMOOT. No one would be more interested in that than I. These two provisions went in on the floor of the House. No hearings at all were had, and there was no chance for the War Department to say how they affected the War Department. This testimony will show how they affect the War Department.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think there is some little confusion about this matter. I had introduced an amendment to the Army appropriation bill allocating to the States the surplus automobiles and trucks, which I think has been brought forward by the committee and recommended favorably. It seems to be understood in the country that this provision refers to trucks rather than tractors. These tractors, as the evidence before us shows, can hardly be used for the purposes that the highway commissions think they can. These tractors are specially made for the Army, for a special purpose, and the Secretary of War was very explicit in his testimony that he probably did not have enough now and that if he had to furnish horses to draw these guns the expense would be enormous.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will my colleague permit me to interrupt him? Have not some of these Army tractors been distributed among the States for road-building purposes?

Mr. OVERMAN. They have been distributed until now there are only 6,000 on hand.

Mr. SIMMONS. Are not those that have been distributed of the same type as those that we are now asking to have distributed?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think so.

Mr. SMOOT. Some of them are, but it is demonstrated, the Secretary says, that they are very expensive, and when broken down out in some of the Western States he testified that it sometimes cost $1,000 to repair them, more than a tractor would cost.

Mr. OVERMAN. I doubt whether they could be repaired at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know about that, but I know that some of these tractors have been assigned to the States for use in highway construction; I know that they have been used, and I think some have been used in the State of my colleague and myself, and I have not heard of any complaint of their insufficiency or inadaptability. On the contrary, in the last few days I have received a telegram from the director of highway construction in my State asking me to lend my support to the proposition to authorize the Government to make additional distribution of them.

Mr. OVERMAN. I, too, have a similar telegram, and there were allocated to the States a large number of these tractors, which are in use and are very serviceable, but I think the selection was made by the War Department of such tractors as could be used on our roads. These are tractors of a peculiar kind, so the Secretary of War testifies, an Army type of tractor that is not made for road use. It is a design gotten up for the Government. I think all the ordinary tractors that were on hand have been allocated and distributed to the States.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I understand my colleague to say, if the Senator from Utah will permit me, that the type that it is proposed in this amendment to authorize the distribution of is different from the type that have heretofore been distributed.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I understood from the Secretary of War as to the type of tractors on hand.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought the types were the same.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish the testimony might be read, so that Senators can understand exactly what the Secretary of War says about it, and that will explain the whole situation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it would be far better for us to make a direct appropriation of money now to buy tractors and give them to the States than to give them these tractors. They can not be made quickly; they are made specially; and if a war should come on, or any trouble should arise, we would have to have them on hand, so the Secretary says.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to read the testimony of the Secretary of War.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is the testimony of the Secretary printed?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it has not been printed. It came up here, and I expected the bill to come up day before yesterday, and we have not had time to have the testimony printed. I reported the bill right from the committee.

I will read the Secretary's testimony.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Secretary's testimony is brought in here at the last minute, with no chance to get a report that he has previously made and authorizations that he has previously made for the use of these tractors.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator and also to the Senate that when the Secretary came before the subcommittee he brought Gen. Williams and two or three other officers of the Army along with him to insist upon these items going out.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question: When did this change take place in the type of tractors used by the Army? That, to my mind, is the crucial question.

Mr. WARREN. Why not have the Secretary's statement read? Then we will know what we are talking about.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the testimony be read.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Wyoming will pardon me, my inquiry is entirely proper and legitimate, and despite the impatience of the chairman of the committee, I wish an answer from the Senator from Utah, who, I think, knows what he is talking about.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not say what type of tractor was delivered, and I can not say when the changes were made. I suppose they were made just as the war developed and the changes that were necessary were discovered. There has been a general growth in the development of tractors, as there has been in other instruments of warfare.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me further, I want to say that unless there has been a change in the type since the tractors were originally assigned to the States I can not agree with the Senator's contention that these tractors are unsuited to road construction.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that the Senator would not send to one of the States for road construction a tractor that has cost the Government $2,500 knowing that the Government must have the tractor, when the Government could make an appropriation of $750 to buy a tractor to do the work. That is the whole proposition.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is not the point at all.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah if he has a list of the makes of the tractors?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I have not.

Mr. GRONNA. There are Senators here who, perhaps, know as much about tractors as the Secretary of War does, and perhaps more. I want to say, for the information of the Senator from Utah, that there are any number of people in the West who paid not only $2,500 but $4,000 for a tractor.

Mr. WARREN. And even $10,000.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; and even $10,000. The Senator from Utah has just made the statement that you can buy a tractor for $750. That is true, of course; but that is not the type of tractor that is used for farming on any sort of a large scale, because that type will carry only two small plows, and there are tractors used by farmers carrying as many as 10 plow bottoms. It does not pay to operate a tractor that carries less than six plow bottoms.

Mr. SMOOT. There may be a few farmers like that, but we are not looking after that class of farmers. They will take care of themselves.

Mr. GRONNA. But the Senator from Utah made the statement that those tractors are not practical tractors for the farm. I may not know as much about farming as some other people, but I know more about it than the Secretary of War, and I perhaps know more about tractors than the Secretary of War; and if I had a list of the makes of the tractors, I could tell the Senator from Utah whether or not they are practical for farm work.

Mr. SMOOT. All I know is that every tractor they have on hand has been made specially for the War Department.

Mr. GRONNA. That would not indicate that they could not be used for farming, because that would have reference only to the carriage of the tractor—a carriage for a binder, or for a plow, or for a thrashing machine. Those are only the carriages and have nothing to do with the machine itself.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, before the Senator reads the testimony, I should simply like to state that on any kind of road building no tractor would be available that was not a great deal heavier than the ordinary tractor that pulls three or four plows, because that is the heaviest possible kind of a load in shaping up a road, and the heaviest possible tractor; and I will venture the assertion that there is not a tractor made in America for $750 that would be worth its purchase price for road purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply referred to a cheap tractor as compared to these very expensive tractors.

The Secretary's testimony was as follows:

The first of these provisos directs the War Department to sell 2,000 tractors owned by the department, and the second proviso directs the War Department to distribute through the Agricultural Department for use on roads an additional 1,250 tractors.

Senator SMOOT. Mr. Secretary, how many of these tractors have you?

Secretary BAKER. We have on hand in the War Department now 6,752 tractors. If you will permit me, I will tell you where they are located and what they are doing.

Senator SMOOT. I wish you would, because the question is asked many times on the floor of the Senate.

Secretary BAKER. There are now issued to the Regular Army and National Guard, and therefore in actual use by the Army and the guard, 3,190 tractors.

When the National Guard has been expanded as is provided by law and by expectation an additional 2,007 tractors will be necessary to be issued to them, which will make a total of 5,197 and will leave a balance of 1,555.

Now, if the 3,250 which are provided by these two provisos are sold and distributed there will be a deficit of 1,695 tractors. That you will understand is a deficit over the number now actually issued and in use in the Army and the guard plus the number necessary to equip the guard authorized and in process of formation. It would leave us 1,695 tractors short of the number necessary for the Army actually in existence plus the National Guard authorized to come into existence.

Senator SMOOT. Do you think you could get along if we took out the amendment that was adopted in the House.

Secretary BAKER. Both provisos.

Senator SMOOT. Supposing we disagreed to the second proviso that was adopted in the House:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to transfer and deliver to the Secretary of Agriculture for distribution among the highway departments of the several States for use on roads constructed in whole or in part by Federal aid 1,250 tractors owned by the War Department.

Secretary BAKER. Neither amendment ought to be passed. Neither proviso ought to stay in.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator will yield to me, I will say that so far as I am concerned I do not ask to have the first proviso reinstated. I do not care whether they sell them or not. If we can have a separate vote on the second proviso, the Senator need not spend any time discussing the first.

Mr. SMOOT. I want the Senate to know about both of them. There may be somebody who may want to recede on the first.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not see any necessity of taking up the time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope very much the Senator will proceed. This is a matter which affects the Military Establishment, and ordinarily this subject should have been treated by the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is the committee which should have had it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is why I am very anxious that the Senator should proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from Minnesota that I agree with him that it should have been treated in the Committee on Military Affairs. But on the floor of the House these two amendments were put in. There was no estimate for them at all. There was no estimate and no recommendation from the department that they should go in, but somebody on the floor of the House moved that they go in, and they went into this bill.

I will say to the Senator from New York that as far as I am personally concerned as chairman of the subcommittee having the fortifications appropriation bill in hand I never would have put it into this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does not belong there.

Mr. SMOOT. It does not belong there. I continue reading from the testimony. The Secretary proceeded:

Let me deal with them separately.

The first proviso which is in the bill authorizes the sale of 2,000 tractors. These are specially constructed artillery tractors. They are very expensive. They are not a commercial type of tractor. They are very expensive to repair. The companies which made them have undertaken to make them commercially usable and have failed to be able to sell them for commercial use. Other tractors are just as good and not so expensive for the kinds of use that the public have for tractors; so if we should sell 2,000 of these tractors we would have to sell them for a very small price and get next to nothing for them, because they are not commercially as desirable as tractors that are less expensive to repair. We would get a very small price for them.

Senator OVERMAN. There was a provision in the Army appropriation bill requiring you to sell. Will that conflict with this?

Secretary BAKER. I do not get that, Senator.

Senator OVERMAN. I introduced an amendment yesterday providing that you should distribute what you could and then sell the surplus.

Secretary BAKER. The motor cars and trucks are a very different proposition. This deals with the special items of 5 and 10 ton tractors. We have no other tractors left in the Army besides these, except a few obsolescent ones.

Senator SMOOT. Does your amendment apply to tractors, or apply to motor trucks?

Senator OVERMAN. To all

Senator SMOOT. Motor trucks?

Senator OVERMAN. Motor trucks.

Secretary BAKER. If it applies to tractors and deals only with surplus, there will be no difficulty; but if it deals with those that are actually on hand now, there is no surplus of tractors, but instead of that there is an existing deficiency of tractors in the Army.

The second proviso, which was added in the House, deals with the distribution to the Department of Agriculture. We have already distributed through the Department of Agriculture to the States more than $93,000,000 worth of property usable in the construction of roads. These tractors of which I am speaking are too valuable to be used in that way. When the train or track of one of these tractors breaks the entire track has to be replaced at a cost of $1,000, and for $1,000 they can buy a traction engine that will do most of the things that they would have one of these tractors doing. It is too highly specialized a tool to be used for that purpose.

Now, may I for a moment give you the larger aspect of it?

The Army reorganization bill of June 4, 1920, directs the War Department to be ready for the immediate mobilization of an organized army of a million men, to be in such condition that we would be immediately able to mobilize an army of a million men. In our theory of reserves, in anticipation of any such emergency as that, we have, quite logically I think, said that those things which are slowest in production should be kept most nearly in adequate supply. Those things which we can go out into the streets and get, or get something nearly as good, we need not keep in such large supply. Tractors of this type, that are able to pull a 155-millimeter cannon, are highly specialized. They are not made except for us, and if we were to start in with orders for those we would not get the first one delivered under six months, and it would be nine months before we could get enough of them made to equip a million men, plus those we have. So that it is a supply we ought constantly to have on hand up to the theoretical mobilization provided by the National Army reorganization act.

The number of tractors necessary for the initial equipment of an army of a million men is more than 10,000, and we have only 6,700 now.

Senator SMOOT. Are these tractors under cover?

Secretary BAKER. All under cover.

Senator SMOOT. Where are they located?

Maj. MOODY. The majority are in the hands of troops. The others are principally at Rock Island, Ill., Erie Proving Ground, and distributed at certain Army reserve depots which would be used in the event of mobilization.

Senator SMOOT. Could the space occupied by these tractors be used for any other purpose?

Maj. MOODY. I am not familiar with that; but, as I understand it, there is ample covered space now provided for the storage of material of this type.

Secretary BAKER. I can only tell you about Rock Island. I have seen that. We have moved a lot of things from Rock Island, and have gone forward on the theory of making it a single-purpose arsenal, a more strictly limited arsenal for the construction and repair of tractor vehicles and artillery carriages, and things of that sort. There is plenty of room at Rock Island for what we are doing—plenty of room to cover these tractors.

Now, I think this may be of value in answering the question: The alternative is this: In the annual cost of upkeep of tractorized artillery as against horse-drawn artillery, we are now saving $3,000,000 a year by having these tractors, as against what we would be required to have if we had horses. If we did not have the 10,000, or 20,000, as the case may be, of tractors necessary for the mobilization of a million men, it would mean the immediate purchase of large numbers of horses, and vastly greater upkeep cost.

Senator SMOOT. Eating their heads off all the time and requiring men to curry them?

Secretary BAKER. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. How many tractors have you on hand now?

Secretary BAKER. Altogether, 6,752.

Senator OVERMAN. How many are necessary for the Army?

Secretary BAKER. The number necessary for a mobilized army of a million men is 10,800 to start with, and 20,800 for the first year.

Senator OVERMAN. Suppose you do not mobilize?

Secretary BAKER. If we did not mobilize at all, we have in use by the Army 3,190, and the National Guard which is in process of formation will need an additional 2,007, which makes 5,197, and leaves only 1,555. The life of a tractor is five years. In the next five years we will have to replace 3,190 tractors now in use; so that in five years, if we give away a single tractor, we will have to buy a tractor to replace it.

Senator OVERMAN. Here is the amendment I spoke of—

Then Senator OVERMAN read an amendment, which has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, affecting automobiles and trucks. I continue reading:

Secretary BAKER. That is perfectly unobjectionable. There could be no objection to that.

Senator SMOOT. I think we understand it.

(Whereupon, at 11 o'clock a. m., the subcommittee proceeded to the consideration of other business.)

Mr. President, that is the testimony of the Secretary of War. Has the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] the letter from Gen. Williams?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I have not.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will have to send for it. I think there is one in my office. I thought I had it here. That, Mr. President, is why the Committee on Appropriations struck these two items from this bill, because if we distribute these highly specialized tractors to the different States, it will be but a short time before we will have to buy similar highly specialized tractors, and it would be very much better to buy the regular tractor, so that the repairs could be made wherever they are, in the State in which they are, than to use a special tractor made for the War Department, which in some cases, the Secretary says, costs $1,000 to repair.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to verify the figures so as to get the correct ones in my mind. I understand from the Senator's remarks that we now have several thousand of these tractors, probably 3,000, which are idle.

Mr. SMOOT. No; we have 1,555 idle.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Besides 2,000 which are occasionally in use by the National Guard, or assigned to the National Guard.

Mr. SMOOT. No; yet to be assigned to the National Guard.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They are idle at the present time?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know where they are.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to ask the Senator if these tractors are not becoming obsolete?

Mr. SMOOT. The Secretary says not and Gen. Williams says not, because they are made especially for this purpose.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They are made for this purpose; but, after all, the matter is comparatively in its infancy, and within five years they are likely to be obsolete. Would it not be better to put them to some use during this time of obsolescence than permit them to rust and remain idle?

Mr. SMOOT. If any trouble should come, Mr. President, the Secretary says this type of tractor can not be made as tractors are made generally. They are a special type, made only for the War Department, and there could not be any delivery short of six months, so the Secretary of War says. It is not like a tractor made for general use.

Mr. SIMMONS. He does not say they are made only for the War Department. He simply says they are specialized. They may, and I think do, use specialized tractors for road work. He did not say they were made especially for the War Department.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; he said they were made especially for the War Department.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not so understand it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will find it for the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It seems very improvident to allow these tractors to remain idle when they are urgently needed for public work and when, of course, in a few years probably the War Department will be demanding a better type of tractor. That is the case with every mechanical device.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to call attention to this fact, that there are only 3,190 of these tractors that the Secretary of War even claims to be in use. The whole number is 6,752, and there are now used, in both the Army and the National Guard, 3,190, and the Secretary of War puts in an additional 2,017 for the National Guard. The Secretary of War has the idea of a million men in his mind.

Mr. SMOOT. No; not at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. Read the testimony. He says 2,017 for an expanded National Guard. The only ones in use now, for both National Guard and the Army, number 3,190.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. But giving him his 2,017 for the National Guard, there is a balance of 1,555 which are still unused. The second proviso only asks that there shall be distributed 1,250, so that he will have 300 more than he needs, even with an expanded National Guard. Those are the facts about the matter, the facts the Secretary of War testified to. He has not any expert knowledge about tractors.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is exactly as I said—that there are in use to-day 3,190 tractors.

Mr. McKELLAR. Over half of them are not in use to-day. Over half of the tractors we have are not in use.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose the Senator knows better than Gen. Williams and the Secretary of War. All I can say is what they testified to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am quoting them.

Mr. SMOOT. Here is what they said. The Senator must have quoted it, because I handed him the testimony.

Mr. McKELLAR. I quoted from the testimony.

Mr. SMOOT. The Secretary said:

> There are now issued to the Regular Army and the National Guard, and therefore in actual use by the Army and the guard, 3,190 tractors.

Mr. McKELLAR. Precisely.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I said.

Mr. McKELLAR. What does he say about the 2,017? He says it is for the use of an expanded National Guard. They are not in use by the National Guard now.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not what the Senator said. He said only half of the 3,190 are in use.

Mr. McKELLAR. I said of the whole number.

There are 3,190 in actual use to-day. Then he said:

> When the National Guard has been expanded as is provided by law and by expectation, an addition of 2,007 tractors will be necessary to be issued to them, which will make a total of 5,197 and leave a balance of 1,555.

Those are exactly the figures I stated.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. WADSWORTH] if the new type of tractor that has been referred to here this morning is of the same character as those of which the Senator from Utah is now speaking?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Some are, and some are not.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Those now being used are of a somewhat more modern type than those owned by the Military Establishment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Those to which the Senator from Utah refers are the most modern type of artillery tractors. Those which the Senator from Colorado saw the other day are an experimental type built for the special purpose of carrying the gun rather than hauling the gun behind it. The tractors which are on hand now are the last word in military tractors, and our Artillery, including the National Guard, is being equipped with them in all calibers above 6 inches.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But the point I am making is this: The Committee on Military Affairs went out for the purpose of seeing a demonstration of a type of tractor different from the type we now have.

Mr. WADSWORTH. A tractor designed not for all purposes but only for special purposes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Whatever special purpose that may be, it would be a substitute for those we have on hand now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very few.

Mr. SMOOT. All the tractors that have been delivered, about $93,000,000 worth of them, as testified by the Secretary of War, were tractors, of course, of the oldest type, but now they have got right down to the 6,752 of the modern type of tractors.

Mr. SIMMONS. All of them?

Mr. SMOOT. All of them.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will permit me, what is the character of the tractors that have already been delivered to the road-building departments of the States?

Mr. SMOOT. They were all of the first make of tractors and even some of the modern in the last order that was made.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How many of the highly expensive tractors have been delivered to the States?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not say.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Senator does not know what proportion of them have been delivered?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Nor their ability to do the road work better than any of the other tractors?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know that, but I do know that the Secretary of War has said that in some cases it costs a thousand dollars to repair one of them when it breaks down.

I wish to call attention again to the fact that the life of a tractor is five years and that is all, and if we give these tractors away we shall have to purchase more tractors. It would be far better, if we are going to give tractors to the different States, to go and buy a tractor that is fitted particularly for the work of road building rather than to take a specialized tractor made for the use of the Army.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, if the Secretary of War intended to convey the idea, as stated by the Senator from Utah, that $93,000,000 worth of these tractors had been delivered to the States, of course he is mistaken. About $1,500,000 worth of tractors of the 20-ton type have been delivered to the States, and 10 or 15 old tractors that were not fit for use have also been turned over to the States. That is all the tractors the States have received from the Government.

Now, as a matter of fact, the tractors mentioned in the second proviso were ordered returned to the United States to be delivered to the States for road-building purposes. I will state to the Senate the report of Col. Meyers and the orders of the Secretary of War for their return.

Before doing so, let me say that Col. Bowlby, who was in the transportation service of the Regular Army during the war, and, I think, Col. McCord, both of whom are now in the Agricultural Department—Col. Bowlby as Chief of War Materials Division—were thoroughly familiar with the nature of the tractors, and they state that they are perfectly suitable for use in building roads, for hauling scrapers and plows in wet and soft earth in the grading and construction of roads, and if there is any way of buying for $750 or $1,000 a tractor that would do that work I have never heard of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator state that it is necessary to spend $6,000 to get a tractor to do that work?

Mr. KELLOGG. The 10-ton truck costs only $5,000.

Mr. SMOOT. These are 5-ton and 10-ton trucks.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think 5-ton trucks cost that much.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then the statement of the Senator is open to question.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will venture to say that the Secretary of War himself does not know much about it. He depends on officers under him in the War Department.

In June, 1919, a request for road-building equipment in the Engineer depots in France was made through Mr. Monte Appel, special representative of the Secretary of War, and on June 9 Mr. Appel stated:

I have discussed the matter with the Secretary. He has instructed me to say that the War Department will deliver to the Department of Agriculture, out of the surplus in the United States or in France, the equipment and supplies which you list as an attachment to your letter.

Attached to the letter was a list of equipment, headed by the following: Five hundred and twenty-four 5-ton caterpillar tractors and 1,035 10-ton caterpillar tractors.

On June 20 Mr. Appel, as acting special representative of the Secretary of War, wrote as follows:

Herewith for your files copy of telegram to the United States Liquidation Commission directing the return to America of the equipment to be turned over to the Agricultural Department.

A portion of the telegram reads:

JUNE 20, 1919.

Under existing legislation which authorizes the War Department to deliver to the Agricultural Department any surplus equipment or materials on hand, the Secretary of War directs that the following equipment now in France be returned to the United States for delivery to the Agricultural Department: Five hundred and twenty-four 5-ton caterpillar tractors; one thousand and thirty-five 10-ton caterpillar tractors.

That was in June, 1919. The States had made requisition for one thousand and fifty 10-ton tractors and two hundred and twenty-eight 5-ton tractors, and the States were promised, under the authority of the Secretary of War, those tractors, and they were returned to the United States for that purpose.

Relying on that, many of the States went ahead with the procurement of their material and other machinery necessary to construct the roads.

In November some question arose with regard to delivery——

Mr. WADSWORTH. What year?

Mr. KELLOGG. 1919; a little over a year ago. The War Department has not sold any tractors, and the figures compiled at that time apply now. A report upon the whole subject was made by Col. H. C. Merriam, General Staff, Acting Chief Equipment Branch, Operations Division, which I will ask to insert in the RECORD at the close of my remarks.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What is the date of the report?

Mr. KELLOGG. December 2, 1919.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What is the officer's name?

Mr. KELLOGG. Col. Merriam.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is he on the General Staff?

Mr. KELLOGG. Colonel, General Staff, Acting Chief Equipment Branch, Operations Division.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Was his report ever approved by higher authority?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not know whether it was or not. I am not in the confidence of the War Department, but I wish to give the Senate the information that I have.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Apparently the Senator is in the confidence of the Colonel, but I should like to know whether that report was adopted as the report of the General Staff?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not know whether it was or not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What standing has it in the War Department?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not know. I am not presenting it to the War Department. I am presenting it to the Senate. Col. Merriam states, among other things, in this report as follows, and I shall submit the whole letter for consideration:

The Ordnance Department as early as last April established the policy of retaining all 5 and 10 ton tractors, * * *.

The existing orders on the amount of equipment of this nature to be retained are that, based on the 1918 tables of organization, enough material shall be kept to equip an Army of 20 combat divisions with corps and Army troops.

That is not a million men, and the Secretary of War knows that he can build tractors as fast as he can train soldiers. The report states the number of tractors——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator say that we had that experience during the last war?

Mr. KELLOGG. I think we had.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator mean to say that we built tractors as fast as we trained soldiers?

Mr. KELLOGG. As fast as they were needed, apparently.

Let us see what Col. Merriam says is necessary to equip 20 combat divisions. He gives it as 4,484 tractors, and we have about 7,000. Of course, I am not an expert, as the Senator from New York is, and he knows better about this than I do, but Col. Bowlby furnishes me the information that 20 combat divisions would amount to about 385,000 or 390,000 men, and that the present Army reorganization bill authorizes only 175,000 men or about 45 per cent of that number. If only 4,484 tractors are necessary for 390,000 men, of course it stands to reason that about 45 per cent of that number would be necessary for 175,000 men.

The fact is, I think, that the War Department has never been willing to let go of anything when it got it. Is it possible that under the present Army bill the War Department needs tractors for 20 combat divisions? But assume that it does. Col. Merriam's report is based on that assumption; but he still reports that these tractors ought to be delivered to the States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does he say how many tractors are to be assigned to a division?

Mr. KELLOGG. No; I think he states the aggregate number in full for the 20 divisions.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is rather an important item.

Mr. KELLOGG. He says:

There are approximately 6,894 tractors available to meet these requirements. The Department of Agriculture has requested to date 1,067 tractors, which if turned over to them will still leave a surplus over the table of organization requirements, revised to include the recommendations of the caliber board, of 239 tractors.

That is, they could still deliver the 1,067, supply the 20 combat divisions, and also supply 1,774 tractors for use for various purposes by the Corps of Engineers for pontoon bridges, road construction work, and so forth.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, Col. Merriam does not seem to take into consideration the National Guard at all in his calculation. That seems to me to be a very important consideration.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is manifest, of course, that tractors will not be needed for 20 combat divisions. Does the Senator from Florida believe, if we do not so need them, that such tractors as may be necessary can not be used for the National Guard?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They can not be used for both the National Guard and the Regulars at the same time.

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly not; but if we only need tractors for 10 combat divisions, which is more than 175,000 men, the other tractors which might have been used by the other 10 combat divisions could certainly be used for the National Guard. There would then be enough, according to this report, for the National Guard, for all the Army we are authorized to raise under the Army appropriation bill, for training purposes, and otherwise.

Col. Merriam says:

Mr. Bowlby stated it would place them in a very awkward position, as they had already obligated themselves to the States to deliver the tractors, and the States in turn had canceled or withheld their orders for similar equipment, which they had intended to procure from other sources.

It is perfectly evident that that is true. Furthermore, Col. Merriam says in this letter—which I will put into the record—among other things, that the storing of these tractors is very unsatisfactory. Speaking about the storing of the tractors, he further says:

This is unsatisfactory for many reasons, principally in that we have not sufficient covered storage facilities and that some material deteriorates more when in exposed dead storage than when in careful daily use. This applies particularly to that type of equipment in which the Department of Agriculture is particularly interested, such as concrete mixers, road rollers, sprinkling carts, tractors, transits—

And so forth. At the end of his letter he states:

Under the provisions of a policy of this nature there would be no difficulty in turning over to the Department of Agriculture all the tractors they desired.

Mr. President, I do not say that the Secretary of War approved it or that the General Staff approved it. It is a fact well known to Senators, I think, that Gen. March never was willing to let go of anything, and that he always insists on keeping more material and supplies than are necessary for the War Department. Of course, I have no doubt that Mr. Baker, as Secretary of War, relies on Gen. March.

What I do not understand is the position of the men who had this in charge at the time and whom the Secretary of War authorized to order this equipment to be delivered to the States, according to the promise to the States that the tractors should be delivered. The conditions are the same now as they were then, except we now know that there is no need of tractors for 20 combat divisions. They have not sold any of the tractors. It is admitted that it will be, I think, five years before the remainder of the tractors will be needed, and undoubtedly long before five years have elapsed we shall have the War Department coming to Congress saying there are improved tractors and that we ought to get the most up-to-date tractors for the use of the Army.

It seems to me, under the circumstances, that these tractors ought to be delivered to the States according to the promise made in 1919. I do not believe that this number of tractors is necessary for any Army which we are authorized to maintain under the Army appropriation bill or which in any human probability we shall need. These tractors are needed to-day in road-construction work. Officials of the Agricultural Department who were previously in the War Department say these tractors are proper for this use and ought to be available for this use and will be of great service to the States in the construction of roads.

Mr. President, I do not ask that the first proviso be retained; I do not care whether the War Department sells any of these tractors or not; but I am told by Col. Bowlby and Col. McCord, of the Agricultural Department, that many of these tractors are out of doors and are exposed to the weather.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Every one of them is under cover, and most of them are at Rock Island. There is covered storage for every one of them.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Senator from New York know that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I know that from yesterday's conversation with the Chief of Ordnance, who is in direct charge of this matter, and not Col. Bowlby or the General Staff.

Mr. KELLOGG. If they are in storage—and I hope they are—certainly they will deteriorate in five years, and they had better be used than to be lying idle, when the War Department will probably never use them.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Does he understand that it is the policy of the War Department to keep on hand at all times equipment of all kinds that may be necessary for an Army of a million men?

Mr. KELLOGG. Is the question addressed to me or to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will address it to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I did not hear the question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask does the Senator understand that it is the policy of the War Department to keep on hand at all times sufficient equipment of all kinds to provide for an Army of a million men?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I have no such understanding.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, why is it thought necessary to keep on hand tractors sufficient to provide for an Army of a million men?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We have not any such number of tractors on hand.

Mr. SIMMONS. But I understood from the statement of the Secretary of War that he was estimating for tractors for an Army of a million men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is wrong as to that. The Secretary said that it would take 10,000 tractors for a million men the first year and 20,000 for the second year. We have on hand only 6,752.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, if 10,000 are necessary for a million men for the first year, why are 6,752 necessary for a much smaller number of men?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator overlooks the fact that 2,007 are required for the National Guard, which is to be expanded.

Mr. SIMMONS. An additional number may be needed for the National Guard when it is expanded, but how long it is going to take to expand the National Guard to a point where they will need 2,000 additional tractors I do not know myself; but a member of the Military Affairs Committee has indicated to me that it will be probably six or seven years before the National Guard will be expanded to such a number that it will need anything like 2,000 tractors.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say that, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the Senate agreeing to the first proviso if we can have a vote on the second proviso. I present to the Chair that parliamentary inquiry, whether we can have a separate vote on the two provisos.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; there can be a separate vote on agreeing to each of the provisos.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask unanimous consent that the letter of Col. Merriam, to which I have referred, may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DECEMBER 2, 1919.

Memorandum for the Chief of Staff:

Subject: Transfer of Artillery tractors to the Department of Agriculture.

1. The question of turning over to the Department of Agriculture the 5 and 10 ton Artillery tractors, for which they have submitted shipping instructions, has been presented for settlement, and it is thought advisable again to place this matter before the Secretary of War.

2. It was brought to the attention of the Secretary of War some time in June by Lieut. Col. McCord, then of the Ordnance Department, now of the Department of Agriculture, that a surplus existed of 5 and 10 ton tractors. Based on this information, the Secretary of War directed that a certain number of these tractors be placed at the disposal of the Department of Agriculture, and a copy of the letter containing his instructions is attached.

3. The Ordnance Department as early as last April established the policy of retaining all 5 and 10 ton tractors. This policy was concurred in by the caliber board, which was approved by the Chief of Staff. The statement made by Lieut. Col. McCord that a surplus of 5 and 10 ton tractors existed was both incorrect and made without authority.

4. The existing orders on the amount of equipment of this nature to be retained are that, based on the 1918 Tables of Organization, enough material shall be kept to equip an army of 20 combat divisions with corps and army troops.

5. The following analysis shows the actual requirements for such an army and is in accordance with the provisions of the 1918 tables, except that one regiment of 75-millimeter guns in each division is tractor drawn, and includes in army Artillery one brigade of 194-millimeter guns. Each army Artillery howitzer brigade is assumed to consist of two regiments of 9-inch and one regiment of 9.2-inch howitzers.

	5-ton (including 2½-ton).	10-ton.
20 divisions	2,900	.....
5 corps troops	400	120
1 army troop	128	936
	3,428	1,056

6. This corresponds closely to the number of tractors issued to units in France, and it is possible for a motorized organization to function with such an allowance.

7. It has been recommended by the caliber board and the Chief of Coast Artillery that this allowance be substantially increased. If these recommendations are carried into effect the total table of organization requirements will be three thousand four hundred and twenty-eight 5-ton tractors and two thousand one hundred and sixty 10-ton tractors, a total of 5,588. These figures also provide sufficient tractors for one of the regiments in the howitzer brigades being equipped with the 240-millimeter howitzers.

8. There are approximately 6,894 tractors available to meet these requirements. The Department of Agriculture has requested to date 1,067 tractors, which, if turned over to them, will still leave a surplus over the table of organization requirements, revised to include the recommendations of the caliber board, of 239 tractors.

9. It would seem from this that nothing should stand in the way of the Department of Agriculture receiving these tractors. The Chief of Ordnance, however, has brought up the following instances where tractors are required and for which no provisions are made in any existing tables of allowances:

Corps of Engineers (for pontoon train and road-construction work)	150
Vocational training (agricultural)	200
Vocational training (motor vehicle)	216
Ordnance tractor schools	120
Motor Transport Corps (assumed requirements for 1 tractor per 100 tracks)	200
Equipment of intermediate armament of seacoast fortifications	348
R. O. T. C	140
	1,774

10. If it is thought advisable to provide these for the purposes indicated, it places the total requirements at 7,362, as against 6,894 available, or a shortage of 468 tractors.

11. A conference was arranged with the Department of Agriculture (Mr. Bowlby) with a view to ascertaining how seriously their work would be handicapped in the event of it being found inadvisable to turn over to them the tractors which they desired.

12. Mr. Bowlby stated it would place them in a very awkward position, as they had already obligated themselves to the States to deliver the tractors, and the States in turn had canceled or withheld their orders for similar equipment, which they had intended to procure from other sources. Labor conditions are such that it is impossible to secure deliveries of this kind of equipment in less than 10 or 11 months, and the work on the Federalized roads will be delayed accordingly. He further stated that if it was not practicable for the War Department to turn over this equipment and relinquish all rights to it, the Department of Agriculture would be pleased to receive it with the understanding that the title was still vested in the War Department and constituted a part of the war reserve. The Department of Agriculture would be responsible for its upkeep under an inspection controlled by the Army.

13. It would seem that the failure on the part of the War Department to place these tractors at the disposition of the Department of Agriculture might have far-reaching results, and it is suggested that the matter might be adjusted so as to be satisfactory to both departments, somewhat along the following lines: We have enunciated the policy of retaining equipment for an Army of 20 combat divisions, with the necessary corps and Army troops. Of this equipment, that pertaining to the seven regular divisions should logically be placed with the organizations in the divisional camps, and the equipment of the divisions assigned to the Canal Zone, Hawaii, and the Philippines, by reason of the difficulties of transportation, should be stored in those places, even in the complete absence of personnel other than caretaking detachments. The equipment of the remaining 10 divisions and the corps and Army troops, except the mobile brigades of Coast Artillery, would ordinarily be stored in certain designated depots. This is unsatisfactory for many reasons, principally in that we have not sufficient covered storage facilities and that some material deteriorates more when in exposed dead storage than when in careful daily use. This applies particularly to that type of equipment in which the Department of Agriculture is particularly interested, such as concrete mixers, road rollers, sprinkling carts, tractors, transits, etc., all of which are used in road construction, an activity of primary interest to the Army itself. It seems, then, that an understanding might be arrived at between the War Department and other departments of the Government whereby such equipment of 10 divisions and of the corps and army troops, for which a useful place can be found by other departments, might be turned over to them on certain conditions. The receiving department would, of course, be charged with the proper maintenance of any property turned over to it and responsible for its speedy return in case of emergency to any point indicated by the War Department. A rigid inspection system would safeguard the interest of the Army, and under this scheme much of the property which is essential to the general welfare of the country in peace and for the efficiency of the Army in war would then serve at all times in the place of greatest advantage. Whatever disadvantages are contained in this proposal will more than be compensated for by the increased good will toward the Army, and perhaps Congress will be less reluctant to appropriate funds for the procurement of equipment to be utilized in this manner than if it were used purely for military purposes.

14. Under the provisions of a policy of this nature there would be no difficulty in turning over to the Department of Agriculture all the tractors they desired.

H. C. MERRIAM,
Colonel, General Staff, Acting Chief Equipment Branch, Operations Division.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the discussion which is going on seems likely to continue for some little time. I wish, therefore, to call up the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill, in order that the bill may be sent back to conference for action on the amendments still in disagreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 10, 17, 18, 20, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 45, 46, 47, 48, 52, 54, 55, 56, 58, 59, 62, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 73, 79, 83, 84, 86, 96, 99, 100, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 113, 116, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 130, 131, 135, 140, 153, 154, 155, 156, 159, and 161.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 12, 19, 23, 40, 41, 51, 53, 57, 61, 63, 70, 71, 74, 75, 77, 85, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 97, 98, 112, 115, 117, 118, 119, 128, 129, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 157, 158, and 160, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "eleven"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$11,917.50"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,811,857.50"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 139: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 139, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$550,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 16, 21, 22, 28, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 42, 43, 44, 49, 50, 60, 72, 76, 78, 80, 81, 82, 87, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 111, 114, 120, 121, 127, 132, 133, 134, 136, 137, 138, 141, 142, 143, 149, 150, 151, 152, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, and 168.

F. E. WARREN,
REED SMOOT,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JAMES W. GOOD,
WALTER W. MAGEE,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 49, 72, and 136. They involve unimportant changes, one being an amendment concerning the removal and reconstruction of the fence around the Botanic Garden, striking out the provision as to the official who shall superintend the work. Another relates to the appropriation for the Lincoln Memorial, reducing the appropriation provided by the Senate some $17,000. The third amendment relates to a fishery matter, and is a reduction in the amount provided by the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I was talking with another Senator when the Senator from Wyoming made his motion, and I did not get the first part of his statement.

Mr. WARREN. The proposition is this: We have submitted the first report from the conference committee, which discloses many amendments still in disagreement. The three amendments to which I have referred constitute insignificant items. The House has agreed to those amendments with certain amendments to them proposed by it, and I have moved to concur in the amendments made by the House to the Senate amendments and to send the others back to conference and so notify the House, so that there may be a further conference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that I understand the conference report, which is a partial report, does not include the items in reference to the hospitals and as to the Muscle Shoals project, which is amendment numbered 60. Those two amendments, of course, will have to go back to conference, being still in disagreement. The House has by a reasonably narrow vote of 193 to 182, or a majority of 11, disagreed to the Muscle Shoals amendment. I take it, of course, that if the bill goes back to conference on a perfunctory motion, the Senate conferees may yield; but if the Senate further insists by vote, the Senator will endeavor to carry out the wish of the Senate in reference to these items.

I think we should have an expression of the Senate at least on one of them, in which I am interested, because, I take it, of course, if the Senate does not insist, that that will end the matter; and if the Senate further insists, I take it that the conferees without instructions will sustain the position of the Senate and insist on the House taking further action. I ask the Senator if I am correct in that?

Mr. WARREN. The motion now before the Senate is merely on concurrence in the three amendments. I then propose——

The VICE PRESIDENT. May not the Chair make an inquiry? Is there not an agreement as to part of the amendments in controversy?

Mr. WARREN. That is set forth by the report which was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ought not that to be agreed to or disagreed to?

Mr. WARREN. We agreed to the report yesterday, according to the RECORD as I read it this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No.

Mr. WARREN. Does not the RECORD disclose that, and that I moved an agreement?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Why, no. The Senator from Alabama objected at once on yesterday.

Mr. WARREN. He objected to the further consideration of the report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; the Chair is right. The Senator probably did not catch what I said. I have no objection to the adoption of the conference report now as to the partial agreement, but yesterday I did object. The Chair is right, and it went over. I have no objection now to the adoption of the partial conference report. It is the items in dispute to which I am addressing myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then, if there is no objection, we will conclude the record by agreeing to the conference report so far as it is an agreement. Now we have the decks clear.

Mr. WARREN. Has the Senator any objection to the three items which I mentioned?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. None at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then this message should come down. The Chair lays before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives.

The reading clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES.
February 25, 1921.

Resolved, That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 42, 43, 44, 50, 111, 114, 120, 121, 127, 137, 138, 143, 149, 150, 167, and 168 to the bill (H. R. 15422) entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes," and agrees to the same;

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the sum inserted in line 4 of the matter proposed and insert in lieu thereof "$345,720";

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4, after "necessary," insert a period and strike out the remainder of said amendment.

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 136, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$10,000."

That the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 16, 21, 22, 28, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 60, 76, 78, 80, 81, 82, 87, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 132, 133, 134, 141, 142, 151, 152, 162, 163, 164, 165, and 166.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, before action is taken, I want to say that the report does not speak the truth. By an error of the clerks, it was reported to the House that the Senate conferees had receded as to amendment No. 10, when the truth of the matter is that there was a disagreement. I went to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House and asked him to have the record speak the truth. He said he was glad to do so, and proposed to do it, but two leading Members of the House of Representatives objected. They objected to the record speaking the truth—a course which I condemn in most unmeasured terms.

There are many important items in this bill, and it is very important that the bill should pass, as it contains appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government. While ordinarily I should be prepared to make a further fight on this matter I am assured by the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations that this matter that now goes out by reason of this error on the part of the clerks shall be considered in the next appropriation bill in April, the deficiency bill, which will come up soon after the extra session is called; so I have had to be satisfied with that.

Mr. HARRISON. What is amendment No. 10?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is in regard to a public building at Wilmington, N. C. There was a disagreement instead of a recession on the part of the Senate; but the clerks made the error, by some misunderstanding, and the chairman of the House committee was perfectly willing to correct it; but two leading Members of the House objected—objected to making the report speak the truth—and there we are.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the partial conference report has been agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And the question now is on the three items to which the Senator from Wyoming has referred?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. President, I move that we further——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we are on the fortifications appropriation bill now, and I want to get through with it before we take up anything else.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does this require unanimous consent?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood that the Senate had taken up the conference report on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. SMOOT. That is agreed to now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There surely was unanimous consent given to consider this matter, or it would not have been here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Why, to be sure.

Mr. SMOOT. Has it not been considered?

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are considering it now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We are considering it now. I do not think the Senator will make much progress in this Congress if he is not going to let us settle these questions as they come up.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator certainly is mistaken. I thought the matter was settled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No. When there is a request for the consideration of a conference report, it must be to consider all of it, and not a little bit of it.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not mean that. I meant that I thought the consideration of the conference report was completed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not want anything brought up here to interfere with the fortifications appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This still has to do with the conference report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I understand that there are probably 20 or 30 items left that are still in dispute. There is one item in which I am particularly interested. I will say to the Senator that I do not propose to take any undue time in its consideration. I think the Senate understands it pretty well; but in order that the conferees may understand the position of the Senate—and I have no doubt that, of course, the chairman of the committee will abide by the will of the Senate, whatever it is—I want to move that the Senate further insist on amendment No. 60, relating to the appropriation of $10,000,000 to continue the work on the Muscle Shoals Dam.

As I said a while ago, this matter went to the House of Representatives. The House disagreed by a reasonably close vote—a vote of 182 in favor and 193 against—and it is now in disagreement. I do not want the Senate conferees to yield on this item until it goes back to the House for another vote and is put into a conference report; and under those circumstances I think the Senate conferees are entitled to a record vote in the Senate on this question.

Mr. President, I am not going to occupy the time of the Senate in arguing this case over again. I merely want to say, for the sake of the record, that this does not relate to matters ordinarily in disagreement between the two Houses, such as new legislation; but here is a proposition that has been provided for by law. It is being carried out because the mandate of the law ordered it. There has been allocated to the project $17,000,000. More than $12,000,000 has already been spent, probably $14,000,00 at this time, that if abandoned must ultimately go down stream, and that can be saved if the project is finished, and according to all the testimony the money can be saved to the Government and a project made available that will pay the Government more than 5 per cent on its investment.

I think it would be an unprecedented thing for a legislative body to do, with a proper estimate, when one of the departments is building a great dam in accordance with law, deliberately to sacrifice over $12,000,000 of Government money. If the House intends to take that step, I think the Senate of the United States at least should insist once more on its amendment, and require that there shall be no doubt about where the responsibility rests if this item is not going to stay in the bill.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the matter.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Gooding	Lenroot	Smoot
Borah	Gronna	Lodge	Spencer
Brandegee	Hale	McCumber	Stanley
Calder	Harris	McKellar	Sterling
Capper	Harrison	McNary	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Heflin	Nelson	Swanson
Culberson	Henderson	Overman	Trammell
Curtis	Hitchcock	Phipps	Underwood
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Edge	Kellogg	Robinson	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	Kendrick	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	Kenyon	Shields	Warren
Fletcher	Keyes	Simmons	Watson
Frelinghuysen	King	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Gay	Kirby	Smith, Ga.	Willis
Gerry	Knox	Smith, Md.
Glass	La Follette	Smith, S. C.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I desire to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], is detained from the Senate on account of sickness in his family. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LENROOT. I shall take only a few moments upon this motion. But I think Senators ought to clearly understand that if carrying this motion will have any effect, it will only have the effect of defeating the sundry civil appropriation bill for this session. If Senators want to do that, let them vote in the affirmative upon the motion to insist, because I am satisfied, from what I know the situation to be, that it can have no other result.

Upon the merits of the proposition, Mr. President, the further this matter is gone into the worse it gets. If this shall be defeated at this session, I prophesy it will never come up again as a proposition of producing fertilizer for farmers.

Mr. President, since this matter was debated in the Senate, and since the Senate took the action it did, hearings have been held by a House committee upon this subject, and the printed testimony is contained in a pamphlet consisting of some 250 pages. I wish every farmer in the United States could read this pamphlet. If they would, none of them would be in favor of this proposition as a fertilizer proposition under existing circumstances.

Mr. President, Col. Cooper has been called by those in favor of the proposition as their chief witness. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has quoted him day after day on this floor in support of this proposition. I want to read two or three lines from the testimony of Col. Cooper given before a subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations on February 14, less than two weeks ago. He was asked this question by the chairman:

Suppose Congress should say to you, "Col. Cooper, take this plant to-day"; would you take it?—

With the $12,000,000 the Government has already put into it—

Will you take it, Col. Cooper, with the Government making a gift to you of the $12,000,000 already put in?

Col. Cooper's answer was:

No, sir.

The chairman then asked this question:

Suppose we should say to you, "We will run the thing until the $17,000,000 is expended and then turn it over to you."

What was Col. Cooper's answer to that, proposing for the Government to make a present of $17,000,000 on this dam—they asked the colonel whether he would take this dam with this $17,000,000 expenditure? His reply was:

I would not go across the street for it.

That is the answer, sir, of your chief witness in support of this proposition. But he did not stop there. He was asked another question, and this was the question:

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose we should say, "We will put in $17,000,000 more"; would you take it?

In other words, "We will expend $34,000,000 on this dam and then make a present of it to you, if you will agree to complete it; would you take it?"

Col. Cooper's answer was:

No, sir.

Mr. President, in view of this record, is there a Senator of the United States, who has any regard for the Treasury of the United States, who can vote in the affirmative upon this motion?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senate has heard quite frequently the bitter attacks made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] upon this great Muscle Shoals project. I have heard him first and last about a half dozen times, and I am now firmly of the opinion that he is to all intents and purposes opposed to the completion of the Muscle Shoals Dam. Col. Cooper said in his testimony at the former hearing that the idea of abandoning this Muscle Shoals project was inconceivable. He has never withdrawn that statement. I do not know what his opinion is about using the nitrate plants for making fertilizer. He said, I believe, that he was not an expert on the matter of making fertilizer. But I do know that the Government has already expended about $80,000,000 and that Col. Cooper has said that when completed this project will pay 5 per cent on the money invested, and I do know that this is the finest power site in the world. The nitrate plants are almost completed. By the use of the water power being provided at Muscle Shoals in operating the nitrate plants we will save 6,500,000 tons of coal per annum, and when this whole project is completed it will make the river navigable for 17 miles and free this Government from dependence upon a foreign power for its nitrates in time of war. The suggestion that we should abandon this great project is utterly ridiculous.

Mr. President, I will not consume any more of the time of the Senate in discussing this matter. I want to see the Senate stand by its former action upon this proposition, and by so doing declare its opposition to throwing away $80,000,000 of the people's money because the Du Pont powder king and the nitrate importers of this country do not want the Government to have its own nitrate plant.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I want to say just one word in answer to the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Col. Cooper has repeatedly said that he would have nothing to do with this plant, because he was a Government engineer; he would not take it. But he has said in his testimony that the plant was capable of raising 5 per cent on every dollar of the $50,000,000 invested by the Government, if it cost that much. There is no use to be misleading on this proposition. He has not said he would refuse to take it because he thought it would be a failure. There were other reasons why he would not take it, in answer to the question.

Now, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I can not permit the statement of the Senator from Alabama to go without just a word.

Col. Cooper did not in any way place his testimony upon the proposition that he would not consider it because he was in the employ of the Government. I will read one further question, which will clearly demonstrate that. The chairman said:

Eliminating personalities, do you think that any private capital could be obtained if one-half of the expense of $50,000,000 was paid by the Government?

Col. COOPER. I would not say "yes" or "no" without carefully analyzing it. That is too big a question to be answered offhand.

It has nothing to do with Col. Cooper's personal relations with the Government. He would not, as an engineer, one who secured the money for the Keokuk Dam, and could secure other money if it was a good business investment—he would not look at it, he said, if the Government gave him the $17,000,000 invested and put seventeen million more on top of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. President, just let me say a word to the Senator. I do not want this record to go without proper reflection. I am not questioning that the Senator is reading correctly the cross-examination of Col. Cooper, but I think he is reflecting in the record an angle that Col. Cooper never intended.

Col. Cooper, as you will see if you refer to his other testimony, has made the statement I have repeated. More than that, he has stated that, as an individual, as a private enterprise, you would have to pay 7, 8, 9, or 10 per cent interest to get the money for a project of this kind, whereas the Government interest is figured at 5 per cent, the cost of raising Government money. That makes all the difference in the world. But I do not care to delay the Senate in a controversy like that.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity to read this testimony from which the Senator from Wisconsin has quoted. But I heard the statement of Col. Cooper before the Committee on Appropriations, and I recollect that the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] was present at the time.

Not only did Col. Cooper state he would have nothing to do, so far as investments were concerned, with the Muscle Shoals project, but he said he had taken himself out of the business in seven States in the South because of the fact that he had been working as a Government official. That was the reply he gave before the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that the Senate further insist on its amendment numbered 60 to House bill 15422, the amendment making an appropriation of $10,000,000 for continuing the construction of locks, dams, power houses, and appurtenances authorized by the national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). Mr. President, I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. He is not present now, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I have been informed by that Senator that if present he would vote as I shall vote, and he has released me from my pair. Therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. HENDERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. Being unable to secure a transfer, I am compelled to withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). If I were at liberty to vote upon the pending question, I should vote "nay," but I have agreed to pair with the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], who is ill and can not come to the Chamber to-day.

Mr. MCKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE]. By authority, I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. MCLEAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. That Senator is not able to attend the session to-day. If he were present and I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea," but under the circumstances I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. EDGE. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. Not being able to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. MCCUMBER (after having voted in the negative). I understand that the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr.

THOMAS], with whom I am paired, has not voted. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I find that I can transfer my pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]. I therefore make the transfer and vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 31, as follows:

So Mr. UNDERWOOD'S motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to ask the Senator a question with reference to amendment numbered 87. That is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and amended on my motion, under which authority is given to consolidate certain land offices, one in the State of Nebraska and two in the State of Washington. I wish to state that as it is printed——

Mr. WARREN. I will state to the Senator before he goes any further that there is a misprint there, and the matter to which he refers will be included in the bill. The matter is still in disagreement, but I have an idea it is only because of that fact. I have no doubt it will be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am glad to hear that. I could not conceive of any reason why the House conferees should object. I am glad to have the statement from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. OVERMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16100) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the so-called tractor amendment is still the pending question, and I wish to be heard on it for just a few moments.

During the last few days several Senators have been to me, as they have been to other members of the Committee on Military Affairs, asking about the situation with respect to tractors. I have been compelled until very recently to confess a large degree of ignorance about it and to ask them what legislation is pending with respect to the tractor supply of the Army. Thus I learned that the subject is being treated in the fortifications bill. I mention these incidents, which have occurred in the last four or five days, to illustrate the utter absurdity of having two committees of the Senate exercising jurisdiction over the current supplies of the Army.

The inquiries were so frequent that I took advantage of a visit made to me yesterday by Gen. Williams, Chief of Ordnance, who, incidentally, came to see me about a matter in the Army appropriation bill not related to this at all. I asked him to tell me just what the situation was with respect to tractors, stating that I had received many inquiries from Members of the Senate, that there was a good deal of confusion apparently, and that I desired to be put straight upon the matter. He then told me that there were on hand something over 6,000 tractors, the number testified to by the Secretary of War; that 3,190 of them had been issued to the Regular Army and that 2,007 were necessary for issue to the National Guard in compliance with existing law as National Guard units are organized and admitted to federalization, leaving, as he said, in the neighborhood of 1,500 tractors in the hands of the War Department.

Most of these tractors are stored at the Rock Island Arsenal, under very good conditions of storage; all of the 1,500 tractors are under cover at the present time and are being properly taken care of. I took especial pains to ask the Chief of Ordnance upon that point. I think there can be no doubt whatsoever as to the correctness of the figures recited in the testimony of the Secretary of War and confirmed to me by the Chief of Ordnance. I place entire reliance upon the Chief of Ordnance, for he is the man who manufactures the tractors, stores them, and issues them, and he knows, if anybody in the United States knows, how many tractors there are.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator enlighten the Senate as to the use that the National Guard will make of the 2,000 tractors which are held for subsequent assignment to the National Guard?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to know how much during the year they will be in use.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will inform the Senator as to that.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has quoted from a letter written by a colonel of the General Staff, not an Ordnance officer, not an officer who has anything to do with manufacture, storage, or issue of tractors. Unfortunately for his case the letter is dated back in 1919, and its conclusions are based upon a state of affairs which do not exist to-day in any degree whatsoever with respect to the Army, its strength, its policy, or its distribution.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Senator claim that the Army is larger to-day than it was in 1919?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not.

Mr. KELLOGG. Or that we have any less number of tractors than we had in 1919?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not, except as to those that have been worn out in the meantime.

Mr. KELLOGG. There are very few of those.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The letter of Col. Merriam mentions 20 combat divisions as being the strength of the Army. Undoubtedly the colonel referred to the strength of the Regular Army when he gave those figures, for he fails to mention the National Guard at all, and the strength of 20 combat divisions was merely a number which was being discussed at that time in the War Department. Since that letter was written Congress has decided what kind of an Army we are to have, how large an Army we are to have, so far as its maximum figures are concerned, and has added, as a part of the basic law, provisions which make the National Guard, in effect, a part of the Army of the United States.

The letter is completely out of date; it has no bearing whatsoever upon the present situation.

In addition to that, the estimate by Col. Merriam of the number of tractors needed for a division is also out of date, for since that time it has been determined, and I think very wisely, that an additional use of tractors should be made. With the improvement of the tractor for strictly military purposes it is found that it can do, under the average conditions, everything that a six-horse gun team can do, and also that it is much cheaper to maintain than are six horses, for while the tractor is not working it does not have to be fed, while the horses have to be fed 365 days in the year and three times a day, whether they are working or not. It is estimated that a very large saving can be made by the use of the tractors instead of horses in certain branches of the Army work. The use of tractors, therefore, has been extended. That has been done and determined upon since Col. Merriam wrote his letter, with the result that 3,190 tractors are now deemed necessary for the present needs of the Regular Army.

Now, about the National Guard. The National Guard is organized and maintained upon the same tables of organization as is the Regular Army. A division of the National Guard is to consist of just as much Infantry, just as much Artillery, and Signal Corps, Engineers, trains, and all other branches of the service as is the case in the Regular Army. The reorganization act, which has been passed since Col. Merriam wrote his letter, prescribes definitely that the National Guard shall be organized in divisions exactly as the Regular Army is organized; that it shall be equipped just as the Regular Army is equipped.

The National Guard has elements in it of Artillery, and some of those elements are that kind of Artillery which it has been discovered can best be equipped with tractors, so tractors have already been issued to the National Guard under the law; more must be issued as new units of the National Guard are organized and recognized and given Federal status. It is estimated, and I think accurately, that 2,007 tractors will be needed in the National Guard under the program now laid down under the law, which will make a total of 5,197 tractors actually in the hands of the troops.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] asked me what the National Guard does with tractors. For example, in every division of the National Guard, as in the Regular Army, there is at least one brigade of Field Artillery. The Artillery regiments equipped with the 6-inch howitzers use tractors instead of horses. The enlisted men of the National Guard are taught how to run the tractor; how to take care of it. They are given training which makes it possible for them to take the tractor and move the guns wherever they have to be moved. They have to know just as much about the tractor, or nearly as much about it, as the soldier in the Regular Army is supposed to know about it. When the regiment goes to the summer training camp it takes its tractors, its guns, its equipment, and drills with them.

In addition to the ordinary training these men have to go through to enable them to run the tractor, the law provides that there shall be at least 48 drills during every year for the men in the National Guard other than the drilling done at the annual encampment. They have to drill with these tractors, and if the tractors are not issued to the National Guard, then those regiments can not be maintained at all; there will be no means of training the men.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am very much interested in the statement the Senator from New York is making, and I want to ask him a question for information: I understand the Senator to say that 3,100 tractors are now in use by the Army and the National Guard?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; that is in the Regular Army alone.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought the Senator said that that included also the number issued to the National Guard as now constituted?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no; 3,190 have been issued to the Regulars alone.

Mr. SMOOT. This is what the Secretary of War said——

Mr. SIMMONS. Pardon me, I want to understand what the Senator from New York has said and not what the Secretary of War has said, because I have great confidence in the statement of the Senator from New York about these matters. Then, I understand the Senator from New York to say that now 3,100 are only sufficient for the Regular Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. The 2,000 of which the Senator spoke will be required for the National Guard?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; 2,007.

Mr. SIMMONS. They are required not for the National Guard as constituted but for the National Guard as it is to be expanded?

Mr. WADSWORTH. As it is being expanded from day to day under the provisions of the law.

Mr. SIMMONS. To what extent will it have to be expanded to require all of these 2,007 machines, and how long a time will be required for this expansion?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under the Army reorganization act the National Guard is given until the end of the year, as I recollect, 1924 to reach the tables fixed in the law—about three and a half years.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, my attention has just been called to the fact that the Secretary of War—and that was my recollection of what the Secretary of War had said—in the testimony read by the Senator from Utah made the following statement:

> There are now issued to the Regular Army and National Guard and are in actual use by the Army and the guard 3,190 tractors.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was mistaken in my previous statement; I apologize to the Senator and to the Senate for having made that statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, Mr. President, the situation is this: Three thousand one hundred and ninety tractors are sufficient for the Army and the National Guard?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; that would not follow.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the number that is now distributed to them; and I was assuming that was probably fairly sufficient, because the Secretary of War has on hand a much larger number of tractors than that, and if more were necessary for the Army and the National Guard than that number, I assume they would have been assigned to their use.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is the situation, may I say to the Senator: I was mistaken in saying that 3,190 had been issued to the Regular Army alone; but I am perfectly positive in the assertion that of the 3,190, comparatively few have as yet been issued to the National Guard, because the units of the National Guard that would use tractors are in the course of organization. I happen to know of some of them, and I know that some of them have received this equipment; some have not. In the Militia Bureau will be found the table of prospective admissions of units of the National Guard under the Federalization scheme; and in the next few months a large number of units are going to come in. They are being recruited by the State authorities now; many of them are recruited up to the required strength—Infantry, Field Artillery, Cavalry, Signal Corps, Engineers, and the other branches of the service. When they are ready to come in the Congress is under obligation to live up to the law which the Congress itself passed and give them the equipment. It is upon that that the need for the 2,007 is estimated.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the fact remains that the Secretary of War, with 6,750 tractors, has allocated or assigned to the Army and the National Guard only 3,190 tractors.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Those are actually in the hands of troops.

Mr. SIMMONS. That leaves, then, about 3,500 tractors in the possession of the War Department that have not been assigned?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but they are obligated.

Mr. SIMMONS. In what way are they obligated?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are obligated, under the basic law, to the National Guard.

Mr. SIMMONS. But not to the National Guard that already exists?

Mr. WADSWORTH. But that is only a small fraction of what is coming in.

Mr. SIMMONS. The point I am making is that I must assume that the Secretary of War, with all these tractors on hand, has assigned all that are necessary for the Army and the National Guard as it now exists. Assuming that there are left 3,500 tractors now for the National Guard as it shall be expanded, I want to ask the Senator from New York to what extent the National Guard would have to expand and how long it would take it to expand to the extent that would make these additional 3,500 tractors a necessary part of its equipment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the law provides that at the expiration of a certain number of years—I think it is at the end of 1924—the National Guard shall be at a strength of 800 officers and enlisted men per Member of Congress. That is in the neighborhood of 425,000 men. Now, we can not tell whether the National Guard by voluntary enlistment would ever reach that maximum. That is the maximum put by Congress; but the provisions of the law are to the effect that the National Guard shall be organized into appropriate divisions on the same tables of organization as the Regulars. Even if we do not have 425,000 men, which, of course, contemplates peace-time strength divisions, the number of tractors as well as the number of guns would not be decreased. Merely the number of men in a regiment or a battery might be decreased, the number being skeletonized; but you have got to have the equipment there, and it is calculated that within the next few years, within the next two and a half years, 2,000 more tractors will be issued to National Guard troops.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me ask the Senator a further question. We have a Regular Army now of somewhere near 200,000 men, I take it; have we not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. To-day it is just about 240,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. What is the strength of the National Guard at present?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The strength of the National Guard to-day is 80,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. That makes 280,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but that 80,000 is growing every day very rapidly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, will the Senator give the Senate his estimate of how long it will take the National Guard, if it continues to grow and expand as rapidly as it is growing now, to be recruited up to the maximum limit now provided in the law?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know that it will ever reach the maximum limit, but it will reach its appropriate strength and within a reasonable distance of that limit in about three years.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, if there are only 80,000 in the National Guard now, and if it be true, as I stated a little while ago I thought it must be, that the Secretary of War at least thought that 3,190 were sufficient for the Army and the National Guard as now constituted——

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Secretary of War did not testify to that. He said that that is the number actually issued.

Mr. SIMMONS. But, I say I assume that having this surplus on hand, if more were necessary they would have been issued.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the number in actual use, not issued.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It amounts to the same thing.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is 3,190 for an Army of 200,000 plus a National Guard of 80,000. How long does the Senator think it will be before the National Guard will be recruited up to the point where there will be in it 280,000 enlisted men?

Mr. WADSWORTH. About three years.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then it will be three years before all of these additional 2,000 tractors will probably be needed on account of the expansion of the National Guard?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and that counts nothing for wastage.

Mr. SMOOT. Wear and tear.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think, in reply to the Senator's question, that the 2,007 tractors, if they are allowed to remain in the Government's hands, will be issued to the National Guard in the next three years. The 1,500 that will be left over will just meet the wastage for the next five years. Therefore, if we direct them to transfer to the Agricultural Department 1,250 tractors now owned, the appropriation bill a year from now will have to carry an item to buy new tractors. In other words, you can not distribute these tractors and hope to escape buying new ones within two years, and that is a great pity.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. This is what the Secretary of War says:

> If we give away a single tractor, we will have to buy a tractor to replace it.

That is his testimony.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is perfectly true that there are 1,500 idle tractors to-day over and above this estimate, but they will not be idle long.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to know from the Senator whether the number of tractors to a division is more or less than in the case of the divisions we had in France?

Mr. WADSWORTH. More.

Mr. KELLOGG. Why is that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Because they have developed the tractor better, they know how to run it better, and they have found that they can do with it things that they did not think they could do with it in the late war. That is conceded by every artillery officer and ordnance officer that I have ever talked with. The use of the tractor is growing, and already all armies are using it in greater proportions than they did during the war.

As to these tractors themselves, it is perfectly true that they can do road work. No State would ever buy them, and no contractor would ever buy them to do road work, because you can get equally good ones for less money, tractors even better adapted for road work than these. These tractors, for the work which they would be put to on roads, are a good deal heavier, and their engine is more powerful, of a higher horsepower than commercial tractors. They cost more. No spare parts for these tractors can be purchased in the open market. They were made for the Government alone upon Ordnance Department specifications. Unless you also invade the stock of spare parts in the hands of the War Department when you turn over tractors to the States, the first time a tractor in the hands of a State broke down it would be useless. The State could not go and buy the necessary spare parts. The contractors that made them for the War Department are no longer making them.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In order to explain what I am trying to get at, the Senator will permit me to read a telegram I have received from the State engineer:

> State highway department has been endeavoring for the past two years to secure 5 and 10 ton tractors and mobile machine shops.

That is the point in what the Senator has just said that attracted my attention.

> These mobile machine shops from the War Department, needed to keep in repair some 300 trucks, already received. Understand the Norris amendment to the Army appropriation bill authorizes distribution of these articles.

And then they ask my support, and so forth. Now, in view of the objection to which the Senator has alluded—that if some part of these machines should break it would have to be remade, since they can not buy it, they can not duplicate it—is it possible for these mobile machine shops to make repairs on these particular tractors?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not enough of a mechanic to answer that question with entire assurance that the answer would be correct. I have seen the mobile repair-shop units. They are platforms arranged on a large truck, with sides that are contrived so as to let down on supporting rods, and they make a platform, I should think, 10 feet square, and on that are mounted small planes and lathes; and I have always been told, as other people have been told, that those mobile machine-shop units can take the field and go along with the trains of an army and make the minor repairs made necessary by the breakdown of trucks and wagons and various pieces of machinery. They could not supply a new part, however. The trouble with the Artillery tractor in the hands of a commercial undertaking is that if the part be broken in such a way that it requires a new part, you can not get the new part.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Does the Senator know whether or not any of the States have had distributed to them any of these mobile machine shops?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know, nor do I know how many the War Department has.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have been trying to find out the number of these tractors that the Government has already given to the States.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator from New York will permit me, I can state what the Agricultural Department claim. They have about 30, or thereabouts, of the 20-ton tractors. They have 10 or 15 old 5 or 10 ton tractors which were, you might say, scrapped, and they have been repaired, but they have never received any of these modern 5 or 10 ton tractors.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. So none have been distributed, then, to the States?

Mr. KELLOGG. No. I should like to make the further statement that I am informed by Col. McCord and Col. Bowlby, of the Agricultural Department—they are in the War Department, of course, but are detailed to the Agricultural Department—that the War Department has the extra parts for repair of these tractors; and of course if the tractors are turned over, they can turn over the extra parts as well.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Why, of course, we can turn over anything.

Mr. LODGE. We can turn over these traveling machine shops.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; we can turn over the traveling machine shops; we can turn over anything.

Mr. LODGE. Everything that the War Department has.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let us take the clothing out of the quartermaster's stores and turn it over to somebody. The question is, How soon will we have to spend money to replace it?

I know, of course, that the prospect of getting something for nothing from the War Department is very inviting to a State, or to a State highway commissioner, and they send telegrams to their Senators and Members of Congress asking them to support this or that amendment or resolution to distribute some War Department stores, tractors, trucks, automobiles, mobile repair shops, and spare parts. They have no idea how many there are on hand. They do not care. Anything that they can get is "velvet" to them; but I merely plead that we shall not pass an amendment here which will make it absolutely necessary within two years, if we are to live up to the law, to appropriate more money for tractors. You can not get anything for nothing in this world very long.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to ask the Senator a question. Did I understand him a little while ago to say that no more of these parts would be manufactured?

Mr. WADSWORTH. None are being manufactured of the spare parts; no.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has the Government already on hand a sufficient supply for the machines that it now owns?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has its own spare parts; yes. They were delivered with the tractors by the contractor who made them.

Mr. SIMMONS. If a part of these tractors are distributed to the States, is there any difficulty about the Government furnishing the parts that are needed for those tractors?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, I suppose not. They could furnish the oil and the gasoline, too.

Mr. SIMMONS. We can easily amend this proposition, if necessary, so as to provide that with these tractors a proportionate part of the spare parts shall go to the States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That could be done, of course, if we wanted to distribute them.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that is a difficulty that can be easily overcome.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Massachusetts will pardon just one further question. I understood the Senator to say a little while ago that a certain number of these tractors—I do not now remember what number—were needed for the purpose of supplying the obsolescence of these machines that are now in actual use by the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. To replace machines that are worn out.

Mr. SIMMONS. How many does the Senator contend are necessary for that purpose?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I only have the opinion of the Chief of Ordnance himself. He told me that if the Government was permitted to keep the ones they have now on hand, the stock on hand would last five years.

Mr. SMOOT. That conforms to the testimony of the Secretary of War, because he said that if we had these 3,195 tractors we have distributed, if there was not another tractor purchased during that time, in five years the Government of the United States would have to purchase 3,195 tractors.

Mr. SIMMONS. That means this, as I understand it, that the life of these tractors is five years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. About that; yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. And the Government has purchased and has on hand enough to take the place of such of those tractors as may be out of commission at the end of five years?

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the entire stock will be exhausted in five years.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Government is making no provision for the manufacture of any additional number of these tractors?

Mr. WADSWORTH. None. There is no provision in the fortifications bill or in the Army appropriation bill for new tractors, and if we leave them alone there will be no appropriation next year, or the next year, or the next year, or the next. But if you distribute 1,200, we will have to appropriate year after next.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I take it there is no doubt whatever that if we make sufficient appropriations the Government can make tractors.

Mr. WADSWORTH. All it wants.

Mr. LODGE. And spare parts also, I suppose?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly; we can go on doing it.

Mr. LODGE. We can supply everything to the States, but we must not supply the man.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. That is a question of discretion. I honestly believe that if the second proviso—which is the one, I believe, which is now being insisted upon—is adopted in the next Army appropriation bill we will find an item for new tractors. I do not know whether these Senators who are insisting upon the distribution of these tractors now will then be willing to appropriate money to provide for tractors to take their places. If they are not at that time willing to purchase more tractors or to commence to purchase more tractors, then it means that we shall not live up to the provision of the law which says that the National Guard shall be equipped as is the Regular Army.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if these tractors were needed for the Army, manifestly we ought not to dispose of them. In any event, manifestly we ought not to agree to the first proviso, which directs the sale of certain tractors. I do not think we can do that.

But there is no reason in the world, under the proof, why we may not distribute the 1,250 tractors as stipulated in the second proviso.

The Military Affairs Committee has not considered this matter, because it went to the Appropriations Committee; why, I do not know, but it has gone there, and we have to take it as it comes to us.

As a matter of fact, the only testimony, apparently, that has been taken in the Appropriations Committee is the testimony of Secretary Baker. That is all the testimony presented, at all events. Even under Secretary Baker's evidence, as I shall point out in a moment, there is no reason in the world why these 1,250 tractors should not be distributed among the States.

There has been testimony taken upon this subject. It was taken in the House, before the House Appropriations Committee, and I want to read for just a moment, for the consideration of the Senate, what the House committee brought out. It is found on page 164 of the hearings. I read:

NUMBER OF TRACTORS IN SERVICE.

Mr. SLEMP. I should like to ask you a few questions, General. Of the 7,000 tractors which you mentioned you have in the Army, how many are now in actual use?

Maj. HARMON. There are in service of the 5-ton, 1,992, and of the 10-ton, 579. That statement does not mean that those are issued to the troops as a part of their war equipment, but they are actually out of storage and in use for some purpose.

Mr. SLEMP. How many 2½-ton tractors are there in service?

Maj. HARMON. About 12 in use at the Infantry School, about 56 at the Field Artillery School at Fort Sill, and 1 at Fort Snelling, the balance scattered among other stations except 19 in storage at Rock Island Arsenal; a total of 117.

Those are the ones the Senator from New York spoke of awhile ago.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Those are the 2½-ton tractors, are they not?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; 2½-ton tractors.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We have very few of those. They do not count as equipment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I read further:

Mr. SLEMP. That would leave you, then, about 3,000 to 4,000 other tractors?

Maj. HARMON. Yes, sir; about 4,000.

Mr. SLEMP. Where are they?

Maj. HARMON. They are in storage at the Savannah proving ground—5 and 10 ton and 19 of the 2½-ton.

Maj. MOODY. The present record shows 117 2½-ton tractors, 3,791 of the 5-ton tractors, and 2,554 of the 10-ton tractors as now being on hand.

Mr. SLEMP. Are the remaining ones not in service surplus or reserve?

Maj. HARMON. They are in reserve; none surplus.

Mr. SLEMP. Of the nearly 2,500 that you have in the service, how many are for the use of troops, how many for facilities around camps, posts, etc.?

Maj. HARMON. I can just give you an estimate of that, sir. There are 1,260 with troops and the balance for other purposes.

Mr. SLEMP. To what extent have you motorized the regiments?

Maj. HARMON. Eighteen regiments have been motorized, 12 being manned by the Field Artillery and 6 by Coast Artillery troops.

Mr. SLEMP. You have done that largely this present fiscal year?

Maj. MURRAY. Yes, sir. Three of the Field Artillery regiments were motorized at the recommendation of the Westervelt Board. Maj. Moody can give you the exact date—it was early in the fiscal year—and the other two a little more recently.

Mr. SLEMP. You have enough of the 5-ton tractors with which to motorize some more if you desire?

Maj. MURRAY. Yes, sir.

Maj. MOODY. The approved policy of the War Department is that where the 2½-tons are not on hand necessary to motorize the five regiments to use the 5-ton.

Mr. SLEMP. How many more regiments could you motorize if you desired to do so?

Maj. MOODY. I do not know exactly, but we have more than enough on hand to motorize the entire peace Army, I think, without question.

There can not be any mistaking this testimony. This is the testimony of a man who knows what he is talking about:

If necessary, the 10-ton could be used with the 155-millimeter howitzers, releasing the 5-ton for the 75-millimeter.

Mr. SLEMP. If that was done, would you have much of a reserve?

Maj. MOODY. Based on an estimate for an Army differing in form only slightly from the form of the last reorganization bill for an Army of about 1,500,000 men, including auxiliary troops, the total estimated number of tractors, including reasonable war reserve for replacement, based on war conditions—about 4 per cent per month—is 14,500 2½-ton, 16,500 5-ton, and 10,800 10-ton, which shows that the total number of 6,452 being retained by the War Department is, from a war standpoint, not a particularly large number, although it is more than enough to equip any peace Army which we are likely to have.

This is a man who is an expert, who is not depending upon the information of other people, like the Secretary of War, or depending upon suggestions from other people who want to keep them there, as the Secretary of War evidently desired. But it is the testimony of a man in the business himself, in the department, and he says they have more now than enough to equip any peace army which we are likely to have. I continue reading:

Mr. SLEMP. The tractors become obsolescent if kept four or five years, and perhaps could not be used at all; that is, their use would be so expensive that you would not want to use them?
Gen. PEIRCE. I think it would be better to use them than to have none at all.
Mr. SLEMP. I do not know.
Maj. MOODY. Wherever they can be used in place of horses there is unquestionably an advantage.

Now, Mr. President, does the Secretary of War deny those facts and figures—that we have more than enough? No; he does not. Instead of his figures denying it, he affirms the proposition. What are the figures, according to his testimony? We now have on hand 6,752 of these tractors, according to the testimony of the Secretary of War; now issued and in use in the Army, 3,190. The 2,017 he speaks of——

Mr. SMOOT. Two thousand and seven.

Mr. McKELLAR. The figures show the number to be 2,017. It is immaterial whether it is 2,007 or 2,017. They are for the purpose of an expanding National Guard. Mind you, 3,190 are for our present standing Army, of 240,000 men, and our National Guard of 80,000 men. It is proposed to raise the National Guard in 1922 to 125,000 men. We have so appropriated, and we know the number we are going to have. It is not for several hundred thousand men in the National Guard. We have appropriated the money for 1922, for an increase of 45,000 men only in the National Guard. If the whole Army of 280,000 men which is going to be reduced to 175,000—nay, it is going to be reduced to 162,000 by July 1, 1922—if the whole Army, plus the National Guard of 80,000, are using only 3,190 tractors now, it is preposterous to talk about the use of 2,007 additional for an expanding National Guard. If Mr. Baker's figures are worth anything at all, they prove the proposition that we have at least 1,555 tractors for which the Army has not now and will not have any possible use. Why should we leave them there? We are business men. Why talk about giving something to the States? We are doing nothing of the kind. We are trustees. We hold this property for the benefit of the people of the United States. We have at least 1,555 tractors for which the Army will not have any use. The only efficient use to which they can be put is to distribute them among the States for road purposes, and I do not see how the Senate can do otherwise than to take that action, under the facts as given here by the Secretary of War, whether you take the Secretary of War's figures or whether you take the figures of this efficient officer of the Army, who has charge of these tractors, and has charge of the business, and came and testified before the committee with reference to it as an expert. We have at least 1,250 tractors we might distribute among the States for road purposes, where they can d· the maximum amount of good.

There is some talk about their not being efficient for road purposes. These tractors are the most efficient tractors that could be used for road purposes. It takes a different kind of tractor, a heavier tractor, for road purposes, than it does for ordinary purposes on the farm. These are admirably adapted to road purposes. We have no use for them in the Army. I say now that if we had the slightest use for them, either present or in the near future, I would not hesitate a minute—I would vote against this proviso; under those conditions it should not go in, because I think the Army comes first with Army material. But it is clear from these figures and from this proof that we could easily distribute 2,000 tractors without hurting the tractor service of the Government; we could distribute 2,000 of them to the benefit of the American people by aiding in building roads so necessary to happiness and profit.

Just one other word. We are talking about saving. We have this material, which is absolutely useless to the Army, and will be. We know perfectly well it will in a measure be obsolete and will not be used by the Army five years from now. They are using only a few hundred now, all told. Two thousand five hundred only have been issued.

The Army is not using them. More than that have been ordered issued, but they are not actually using them. There is not one-third of the stock that the Army has on hand that it is actually using now, and yet when the bill has already passed the House, passed under expert testimony given by officers of the Army in charge of the work, when action is taken based on that testimony, at the very last moment the Secretary of War comes before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, that has naught to do with the Army except as every Senator and every committee has to do with the Army—I mean has no direct control over it as has the Military Affairs Committee—and without any other consideration except the testimony of the Secretary of War, which is general when looked at from the legislative standpoint, an amendment is brought in to strike out the proviso. Senators, it ought not to be done.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. McKELLAR. We should vote down the amendment of the Senate committee and leave the provision as it is. I now yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. This is the first I have heard of the proposition just made by the Senator. I desire to know something about the source of the Senator's information, as I have been out of the Chamber.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have just read to the Senate the hearings before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations of the Sixty-sixth Congress, held last month.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Senator has anticipated or misanticipated my question. I did not even finish it. If I understood the Senator's statement, the particular tractors in question are most valuable for road-building purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Most valuable for road-building purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But are obsolete as far as the Army is concerned.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no. They are excellent tractors and perfectly efficient for Army purposes; but here is the point that I make: The Army has some 6,700 of them, and it needs only about 3,000 of them.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. As far as that goes, it looks to me as if they have made a showing that they are in use and that the deterioration and decay of those not in use would make it necessary to replace them eventually, according to the argument made on the other side. I confess I have great sympathy for the attitude of the Senator from Tennessee, but I wish to be justified in that, because we are aiming at the same thing.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have already read the evidence of Maj. Harmon, the expert of the department, in which he goes over the whole matter. The Senator was out of the Chamber at the moment, but I should like to hand the hearings to him and let him read them. After he reads that testimony he may be absolutely sure that when he votes to keep the proviso in the bill for 1,250 tractors he will be voting exactly right.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have the information I want, and I know how I shall vote.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, after that testimony was taken to which the Senator has referred, the Secretary of War did appear before the committee, but the amendment about which the Senator complains was not put in by the committee. It was put in on the floor of the House. The committee that heard the testimony to which the Senator has referred refused to put the item in.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Tennessee a question, if the Senator from Utah will allow me. Did I understand the Senator to say that provision is made in the appropriation bill for expansion of the National Guard during the present fiscal year?

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill which we have just had reported out from the Committee on Military Affairs authorizes pay for a National Guard of 125,000. There are but 80,000 members of the National Guard now.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is for the year 1922.

Mr. McKELLAR. For the fiscal year 1922, beginning next July.

Mr. SIMMONS. If that be so, and the Army is reduced to 160,000, as contemplated, the Army and the National Guard together would be 285,000 men.

Mr. McKELLAR. Two hundred and eighty-seven thousand is the exact figure.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Army and the National Guard, as the latter now exists, are 280,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; the National Guard and the Army, as they now exist, comprise 320,000 men, 240,000 in the Regular Army and 80,000 in the National Guard.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then counting 240,000 in the Regular Army and 80,000 in the National Guard, the Army as now constituted, and the National Guard as now constituted, are larger than the Army when reduced as required by law and the National Guard increased to the limit just indicated by the Senator will be at the end of the fiscal year 1922.

Mr. McKELLAR. The very point I have attempted to make in what I said before is that, instead of allowing 2,007 for an expanded National Guard——

Mr. SIMMONS. They will need less than they have now.

Mr. McKELLAR. They will need less than they actually have now, which is 3,195 in both the Regular Army and the National Guard. In other words, in the present Army of 320,000 men they have either issued or expect to have issued or have arranged to have issued 3,195 tractors. Manifestly when we lessen that force from 320,000 to 286,000 we do not need additional tractors.

Mr. SIMMONS. We need less.

Mr. McKELLAR. We need less, if anything.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the point I was trying to make in the colloquy I had with the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. McKELLAR. Assuming that they would be the same, that they will not reduce the present military force, there would still be 3,500 surplus tractors, and for that reason we have in any aspect of the case 1,250 tractors to give to the various States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee knows very well that the National Guard to-day only has 80,000 enlisted men.

Mr. McKELLAR. I counted them as 80,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the Senator goes on and argues that the 80,000 men are not going to be increased.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; I did not. The Senator did not listen to me. We have appropriated for a National Guard of 125,000 men for the year 1922, and that number is going to be increased. One hundred and twenty-five thousand added to the 160,000 which we will have in 1922 will make 285,000, by a simple calculation, which is very much less than the present Army and National Guard, which are composed of 240,000 Regulars and 80,000 National Guardsmen. I think the figures are perfectly plain.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator certainly did not make it plain to me, and I do not understand the situation as he seems to understand it. The National Guard will be reorganized on the basis of 800 men for each Member of the House and Senate. That would give the National Guard when fully enlisted 440,800 men. The Senator can not say there will be only 125,000 members of the National Guard next year.

Mr. McKELLAR. I said that we have only appropriated for that number. I can turn to the Army appropriation bill and show that we have appropriated more than the House has appropriated. We increased the amount fixed in the bill as it passed the House, and we appropriated for 125,000. I just took for granted that without appropriations they are not going to increase the number above 125,000.

Mr. SMOOT. There have not been very many in the National Guard because the States are not prepared to provide the men for them. The legislatures are now in session, as the Senator knows, and I have not any doubt that the legislatures of the States will provide for the National Guard from now on.

Mr. McKELLAR. We hope so.

Mr. SMOOT. When that is provided for then just as fast as the men enlist in the National Guard under the provisions of the law they will have to be given tractors. There is no doubt from the testimony given here by Gen. Williams, who has this matter in hand, and also by the Secretary of War, that every tractor that is given away by the Government of the United States will have to be replaced by a new tractor. I desire to have the Senate understand that.

We will be asked to appropriate for that purpose in the very next appropriation bill that will come here. If we give these away we will have to buy new ones to replace them. When Senators vote I wish to have them vote with a clear understanding that that is the pending proposition. I am ready to vote.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, it is true that we have tractors on hand now for an Army of at least 650,000 men. I wish to say that I do not believe the Army and the National Guard together will amount to that number in the next six or seven years.

Mr. SMOOT. All I know is that we have 3,190 tractors in use to-day. They are not stored; they are not under cover. They are in actual use to-day. We also know that there will be 2,007 for the National Guard, and that makes 5,197, leaving on hand, without taking into consideration the wear and tear that is bound to take place, 1,555 tractors.

Mr. President, there seems to be no objection to striking out the first proviso in the paragraph the committee propose to strike out. If there is no objection, I should like to have that part of the committee amendment agreed to now and then have a separate vote on the additional proviso.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is, down to the words "Provided further" in the matter proposed to be stricken out?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is no objection to that at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRONNA in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the portion of the committee amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 5, lines 12 to 17, inclusive, the committee proposes to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to sell as soon as possible after the approval of this act, upon such terms and under such conditions as he may deem most advantageous to the best interests of the Government, 2,000 of the tractors owned by the War Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I demand the yeas and nays on the amendment proposing to strike out the second proviso.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before that is done, I wish to ask the Senator a question. In the present state of the art of building tractors, considering the marvelous improvements that have been made in the building of tractors within the last five years, the progress of which has been simply wonderful, does not the Senator know that within five years such improvements will be made that the kind of tractors that we have now and which we could use now for road-building purposes would not be used in the Army at all, but would be considered obsolete?

Mr. SMOOT. Every year some of these tractors will be worn out. The testimony is that their average life is five years. The accidents that will come and the wear and tear in the use of the tractors will displace all of the tractors that we have now, and the Government of the United States, between now and the end of the five years about which the Senator talks, will have to buy new tractors to replace every one that is in use to-day. There are very few manufacturers of this kind of tractors. As the Secretary of War has said, they are made for the United States alone and the improvements that may be made more than likely will be suggested by the War Department itself. When any of the purchases are made hereafter it will be of tractors up to date, and all that we have on hand now are the last word in tractor building.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is, the last word five years ago.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Gooding	Lenroot	Smoot
Brandegee	Gore	Lodge	Spencer
Calder	Gronna	McKellar	Sterling
Capper	Hale	McNary	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Harris	Nelson	Swanson
Colt	Harrison	New	Thomas
Dial	Heflin	Overman	Townsend
Dillingham	Jones, N. Mex.	Phipps	Trammell
Edge	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Underwood
Elkins	Kellogg	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Fernald	Kendrick	Robinson	Warren
Fletcher	Kenyon	Sheppard	Willis
Frelinghuysen	Keyes	Shields
Gerry	King	Simmons
Glass	La Follette	Smith, S. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. SMOOT. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, we are about to vote on the pending amendment. I wish to explain to the Senate that the amendment of the Senate committee proposing to strike out the first proviso has been agreed to. A separate vote is now to be had on the second proviso which has been placed in the bill by the other House. The Senate committee have reported to strike out that proviso, and the question now is whether the committee shall be sustained. The second proviso provides for turning over to the State 1,250 of these tractors. A vote "yea" will sustain the committee, and a vote "nay" will sustain the provision as it came from the other House requiring the Secretary of War to turn over the tractors to the Agricultural Department for road-building purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, a vote "nay" means the 1,250 tractors will be distributed. Those Senators who are in favor of distributing the 1,250 tractors will vote "nay."

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have not been able to listen to all of the debate on the pending question. I am certainly not in favor of compelling the War Department to turn over to the States for the construction of roads or to turn over to any other institution tractors which are actually needed in the War Department. I am very much in favor of turning over to the States to be used in the construction of roads trucks or tractors which are not needed by the War Department. Unfortunately I have not been able to be here, as I have said, and to listen to the arguments in reference to that matter, but I understand by striking out the proviso the matter goes to conference?

Mr. SMOOT. A vote "nay" is that the language shall remain in the bill as it came from the other House, so that if the committee shall be rejected there will be no conference on the matter.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the committee amendment is rejected, the House provision remains in the bill, but if we agree to the committee amendment, the matter then goes to conference?

Mr SMOOT. It then goes to conference.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is what I mean. I should like to have the question properly settled. I hardly think it is safe in this proposed legislation to direct the Secretary of War to turn over any of the equipment which the War Department needs for conducting the operations of the Army. Therefore, not knowing about this situation, I am going to vote with the committee to strike out the House provision, with the understanding that the matter will go to conference so that the question may be settled. I do not know of any other safe course for me to follow under the circumstances, for this is a direction to the War Department to dispose of these tractors whether they are needed by the War Department or not. Therefore I must support the committee amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have listened to the discussion of the pending question, and I wish to put into the RECORD the reasons why I shall vote to retain the House provision and against the Senate committee amendment.

As I understand, we now have, in round numbers, about 6,000 of these trucks.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have 6,700 of them.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We have, the Senator from Tennessee informs me, 6,700 of these tractors. About half of that number is now not in commission, and according to the testimony of the Secretary of War they will be kept in "cold storage" pending the enlargement of our Army by the expansion of the National Guard or by other means.

If I remember correctly, only a few days ago by a vote of this body we made provision for a decrease in the size of the Army from its present strength, so that in place of there being more of these tractors in use within the five years of the life of those now used we shall have a smaller body of men in the Army than we now have, barring the National Guard.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not barring the National Guard.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am informed by the Senator from Tennessee that with the full quota of the National Guard and the Regular Army reduced below its present strength we shall have a smaller number than we now have.

Mr. SMOOT. The full quota of the National Guard, I will say to the Senator from South Carolina, is 440,800, and to-day we have with the Army and the National Guard 320,000 men.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina will yield to me for just one minute, there need be no mistake about the matter. We have now 240,000 in the Regular Army and we have now 80,000 in the National Guard; that is 320,000 men. In 1922 we shall have, on an average, 175,000 men in the Regular Army, and we have appropriated for 125,000 in the National Guard. Those figures give us 300,000, or 20,000 less in 1922 than we now have. So what is the use of trying to juggle the figures? It is very plain we shall have a less force even when we add the two bodies together.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not care so much about that phase of it as I do this practical, common-sense view. We have now with our present Army twice as many tractors as we need. The roads of the country are as essential for the people as the Army can ever be, and yet it is proposed that we shall keep in "cold storage," upon the possibility of our mobilizing our forces, tied-up capital that will be worth millions of dollars in the improvement of our highways. What is going to become of the capital invested in these tractors that are standing in "cold storage" waiting for us to enter a war?

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Does the senior Senator from South Carolina yield to his colleague?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. I should like to ask my colleague if it is not true, as a rule, that machinery rusts out about as quickly as it wears out?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is entirely true. Not only that, but every Senator on this floor knows that the last word in the development of the internal-combustion engine has not been spoken; the automobile and the tractor are in the very dawn of their development. Who would dare say that an up-to-date tractor in 1921 would be an up-to-date tractor in 1926? In the meantime, however, we are to take thousands of dollars of the public money, tie it up in tractors, and put them in "cold storage" to wait for a contingency, and when it does arise we may find the tractors which have been in "cold storage" obsolete, and have to invest in some other form of tractor. You have from two to three thousand that you do not need now. According to the figures furnished here and the arguments that have been made, you may not need them within the five years; and why this opposition to putting these machines on the roads, and letting them be used for the public benefit? They were bought with public money. They were constructed for the purpose of benefiting the public. Why do we sit here and refuse to permit them to be used because the Secretary of War says that a contingency might arise where an old one would wear out, and you would have to buy a new one? I will make the prediction now that within two years they will come to Congress to substitute a new model for the one they have now.

Since we have voted to decrease our Army, and have made appropriations that will result in not increasing the National Guard for from two to three years, why we sit here and tie up this available capital and refuse to devote it to a good public service is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I realize the force of all that the Senator from South Carolina has said. The same argument was presented to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and we secured what we thought was a solution of the problem. The Senate has already adopted this paragraph in the Post Office and Post Roads appropriation bill, which is now with the President:

> That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered at his discretion, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to loan to any State of the Union, when so requested by the highway department of the State, such tractors as are retained and not distributed under the act approved March 15, 1920, for use in highway construction by the highway department of such State: Provided, That all expenditures for repairs and upkeep of tractors so loaned, and the expenses of loading and freight, shall be paid by the State, both in transfer to the State and return to the Army.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator read the first part of that provision again?

Mr. TOWNSEND. "That the Secretary be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered"——

Mr. BORAH. To loan?

Mr. TOWNSEND. To loan.

Mr. BORAH. But the discretion rests entirely in him?

Mr. TOWNSEND. In the Secretary of War.

Mr. BORAH. Yes—well, we will never get any.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Now, let me complete what I started to say.

The argument that was made to the committee was that the Secretary of War did not feel that he should part entirely with all claim to this machinery. He felt that if this machinery were loaned out to the States, and they were bound to keep it in repair, and pay the expenses of shipping, and so forth, these tractors would be where they could be obtained within a reasonable time in case of emergency. Nothing else was asked of us at that time, and we supposed, at least, that we were granting the request of the States for the purpose of getting permission to use these tractors. Until this matter came up, when I came in on the floor of the Senate, I had never heard of any other proposition. I had never heard that there was any complaint made that the States would be denied the use of these tractors for road building; and if that is the case, we did a vain thing in passing the Post Office appropriation bill with this provision in it, which, I repeat, we supposed was in response to the demands of the highway departments of the various States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have no doubt that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads acted in perfect good faith in passing the bill with the particular clause in it which has been read, and likely supposed that they were doing all that at that time had been suggested to them as being necessary; but it is quite apparent from the debate which has gone on here to-day, under the direction, as you might say, of the Secretary of War, that the time would never come when the Secretary of War thought it was safe to part with any of these tractors. That would likely be true not only with the present Secretary of War but that seems to be an attitude of mind of all Secretaries of War. They are always expecting some dire emergency to arise in military affairs which prevents them from parting with anything which they can get their hands on with the idea of using it in the expected emergency. That is characteristic of the departments here which have to do with preparing for war. It is perhaps a good characteristic in time of war, but it may be safely modified, I think, in time of peace.

Mr. President, as I understand the situation, these tractors are being held purely on the theory that an emergency might arise when they would be needed by the War Department. At the present time a surplus of them are not being used, and will not be used except in case an emergency may arise, or in case some replenishment is necessary by reason of some wearing out, and so forth. It seems to me that as this is all public property, and as we must provide both departments with what they need in this respect, it is but the part of wisdom and expediency to take the tractors which are now on hand, and which may become obsolete, and which may never be used, and utilize them at the place where they can best be used; and then when the emergency arises we can take care of the situation. I do not anticipate such a dire military emergency as that we shall not be able to secure an up-to-date tractor when the time arrives.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. During the last few minutes my attention has been called by a member of the Appropriations Committee of the House, which had charge of the matter, to the fact that there is in this bill an appropriation to continue the manufacturing of tractors, to be found on page 4 of the bill, under the item of $750,000. Judging from what has been said here by the Senators who do not want these tractors distributed, we would have supposed that the manufacture of these tractors had been cut off. I was further informed by this member of the Appropriations Committee of the House, who had charge of it, that many of the tractors that we now have are not the kind of tractors that are desired by the Army, and the manufacture of these tractors can, therefore, continue.

In that connection I am going to ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD the testimony of one of the officers with reference to that matter to be found on pages 156 and 157 of the House hearings.

I thank the Senator for allowing the interruption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. SLEMP. Will you get any tractors?
Maj. MOODY. We actually have one running.
Mr. SLEMP. What is that type?
Maj. MOODY. That is a 2½-ton tractor.
Mr. SLEMP. How many of those have you?
Maj. MOODY. We have two actually running.
Mr. SLEMP. They have gone through a test?
Maj. MOODY. No, sir; they are just now being sent to Aberdeen for a test. We have a trailer caisson, to be drawn behind tractors, and we have one of those running at Aberdeen; we have a design for a tractor for corps artillery, which would be about a 7 or 8 ton design, practically completed. The order has been placed for construction, and, with good luck, will be running by the end of June, but if not the funds which we have allotted will carry over and the construction will run on into next year, but from funds which have been allotted and which we are not now asking the committee to appropriate.
Mr. SLEMP. That money will have to be expended by the 1st of July or it will lapse.
Maj. MOODY. No, sir; it carries over into 1921, and it is possible that some of the money from 1921—that is, money appropriated last year—will not be expended by June 30, because we have not hesitated to slow up the work where we thought we were making any mistake. The figures I gave and which Col. Jenks gave were on the assumption that all will be expended by June 30, and if things move as rapidly as they are moving now it will be; but it is impossible to tell whether any will be carried over or not. A tractor for Army artillery is actually under construction at the Rock Island Arsenal and should be finished by June 30.
Mr. SLEMP. What weight is that?
Maj. MOODY. That is about 15 tons. Then there is a small vehicle, known as the reconnaissance tractor, being constructed for replacing the individual horse, the motor cycle, and things of that sort, and that, I think, will be a pretty good machine.
From the first preliminary models of that, we do not expect to get more than the engineering data, and some parts of the first model were left purposely defective in order to save funds, or we improvised them out of matériel on hand. Item No. 13 is a hand-drawn caterpillar cart, and that development we consider complete. There has been a certain amount of experimental work under item 16, covering experimental and development work not on specific items, one item of that being the development of an air-cooled engine. In that we made an experimental cylinder which did not cost very much, and on the basic data we will be able to go ahead with the construction of an air-cooled engine. There are a number of other small items that have been handled in the same way. No. 17 covers light armor plate, on which there has been a certain amount of development work done. The indications are that they are doing quite well with that development. Last year the estimate carried four different types of tractors, but which we have combined into three, with a considerable saving resulting.
Mr. SLEMP. Generally speaking, the types you are working on are the 2½-ton and 15-ton tractors?
Maj. MOODY. And there is one in between, or the 7-ton tractor. I think we have given them better names than we had last year. We call them the divisional, corps, and Army types.
Mr. SLEMP. The divisional is what?
Maj. MOODY. That would be the 2½-ton to match the 75-millimeter gun; the corps will be the 7-ton, matching the 155-millimeter howitzer, and the Army would be the 15-ton, matching the very heavy types of mobile artillery.
Mr. ANTHONY. Is there any commercial type of tractor made that suits the purpose of drawing field artillery?

Mr. BORAH. I thank the Senator for putting something into my remarks which will be illuminating, as that is the testimony of the officers who know concerning this matter. I assume, however, that the condition with reference to the tractor, the matter of experiments and invention, and so forth, like all other things that are now undergoing investigation, is such that in all probability a year from now or two years from now at most these tractors will perhaps be out of date. There is only one thing which seems to be permanent and eternal as far as invention is concerned, and that is the battleship; but so far as all other things are concerned, this is a progressive world, and the world does move, and we shall undoubtedly be experimenting and improving upon these things. In all probability and the chances are altogether that the tractors we now have two years from now will not be used at all by the Army.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the Secretary of War came before the fortification subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, of which I am a member, and stated to us that all the tractors now on hand would be needed for the Regular Army and the National Guard; that these tractors were built for war purposes and were not suited for road building, and that it would be a very great expense to change them for that purpose. The Secretary of War also stated that it took considerable time to build tractors and in the event of trouble with another nation, if we took these tractors from him, that it would leave the Army unprepared. When the Secretary of War, whether it is a Democratic or Republican administration, comes before Congress and informs us that certain measures would jeopardize preparedness in event of war, I am going to vote to protect our brave boys.

Mr. President, we have already passed in the Post Office appropriation bill legislation authorizing the Secretary of War to give to the States such of these tractors as may not be needed for military purposes, and I have confidence in that being carried out. The Secretary of War, after March 4, was a former distinguished Member of this body and has the confidence of all who served with him.

There is no Member of the Senate who has worked harder for good roads than I have, and I shall continue my efforts. I supported actively the appropriations for $100,000,000 for good roads, both in the committee and in the Senate, and it was a great disappointment to me that the Senate voted against making a further appropriation at this session of Congress. However, we have the assurance that good roads legislation will be passed at the extra session of Congress so as to be available for the next fiscal year, and at that time I think this appropriation should be more than $100,000,000. If the Secretary of War finds that he can not spare some of the tractors belonging to the War Department, we can then make an additional appropriation with which to buy tractors especially equipped for road construction, which are far more economical and far better for the use on roads than the tractors now being held by the War Department, which were built specially for war purposes.

Mr. President, I favor and shall support the resolution of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] for an agreement between Great Britain, Japan, and the United States for disarmament. I also favor the resolution of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] for a conference among all the nations with a view to having disarmament of all countries so that we can stop the tremendous expenditures for the Army and Navy, spend this money on good roads, and for the betterment of the people of our country and greatly reduce taxes. However, until we have a disarmament agreement with other nations, I am in favor of our country being prepared so that if war is forced on us we shall not have to sacrifice our brave boys because of our lack of preparedness.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I understand that there are now 6,700 of these tractors in the custody of the War Department. We are seeking to obtain the use of 1,250 of them to be employed in road construction. The War Department would still have 5,450 left for its use. I trust that the Senate will permit us to have these 1,250 tractors to be used in road construction in the various States. I think that it is as little as Senators can do.

Those who voted a few days ago to strike out the appropriation of $100,000,000 to carry on road construction can not afford, it seems to me, to vote against letting the States have these 1,250 tractors. This is asking very little, Mr. President. I want to do everything that is necessary to keep the country in a state of preparedness, but certainly the 5,450 tractors will be sufficient to carry on any work needed to be done, and if an emergency should arise, as the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] has pointed out, we have made provision a little further on in this bill for obtaining the number of tractors that may be needed.

It seems clear to me that we ought to vote to turn over these 1,250 tractors for use in road building, and I am going to vote for the proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. Being unable to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (after having voted in the negative). Mr. President, may I ask what amendment is pending? I think I was confused.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The second provision of the committee amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is the question upon agreeing to the committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the question has been divided, and the first part has been agreed to. This is the second proviso.

Mr. SMOOT. The question then is upon agreeing to the second proviso of the committee amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I voted under a misapprehension, then. I want to change my vote from "nay" to "yea."

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], which I transfer to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], who is detained from the Senate on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). First transferring my general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MOSES. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], and I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. He is absent from the Chamber, and I therefore am obliged to withhold my vote.

Mr. KNOX. Has the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. KNOX. Being paired with that Senator, and not being able to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. Not being able to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MCKELLAR (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. GERRY. I have a pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], on account of illness in his family, and the absence of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] on official business.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I desire to have the RECORD show that my colleague, the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], is detained from the Senate on account of illness in his family.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from Maryland voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am compelled to withdraw my vote, having a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON].

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Brandegee	Harris	Overman	Townsend
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Phipps	Wadsworth
Colt	Keyes	Poindexter	Warren
Culberson	King	Reed	Watson
Cummins	Lenroot	Smoot	Willis
Gooding	Lodge	Spencer
Hale	New	Thomas

NAYS—31.

Borah	Heflin	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Dial	Kellogg	Pittman	Sterling
Elkins	Kendrick	Robinson	Swanson
Glass	Kenyon	Sheppard	Trammell
Gore	Kirby	Shields	Underwood
Gronna	La Follette	Simmons	Williams
Harrison	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.

NOT VOTING—39.

Ashurst	France	McCumber	Pomerene
Ball	Frelinghuysen	McLean	Ransdell
Beckham	Gay	Moses	Sherman
Chamberlain	Gerry	Myers	Smith, Md.
Curtis	Henderson	Newberry	Stanley
Dillingham	Hitchcock	Norris	Sutherland
Edge	Johnson, Calif.	Owen	Walsh, Mass.
Fall	Johnson, S. Dak.	Paige	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	Knox	Penrose	Wolcott
Fletcher	McCormick	Phelan

So the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I understand that leaves the second proviso as it came from the House?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If in order at this time, I move to strike out, on line 22, page 5, the words "one thousand two hundred and fifty" and substitute therefor the words "five hundred."

Mr. MCKELLAR. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that the amendment be stated as it will read with the change in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from New York moves to amend by striking out the words "one thousand two hundred and fifty" and inserting in lieu thereof "five hundred," so as to read:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to transfer and deliver to the Secretary of Agriculture for distribution among the highway departments of the several States for use on roads constructed in whole or in part by Federal aid 500 tractors owned by the War Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I offer that amendment to make it possible for us to go two years without buying new tractors for the Army. If 500 are distributed, instead of 1,250, we shall not have to buy new tractors for two years. If the 1,250 are distributed, we shall have to buy new tractors next year.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this reduces the number of tractors that will go to the Agricultural Department for road purposes by 750. The House provided for 1,250, and this reduces it to 500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is not in his seat, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair, and being unable to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair and vote "nay."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). Repeating my announcement on the last vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MCKELLAR (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement I made on a previous vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair as I did previously, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement as to my pair and its transfer which I made on the last vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and I withhold my vote.

I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] on official business.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire whether the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a general pair with that Senator, and in his absence I withhold by vote.

Mr. GLASS. Making the same announcement as on the previous roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—27.

Brandegee	Harris	New	Thomas
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Townsend
Colt	Keyes	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Culberson	King	Reed	Warren
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Robinson	Watson

Edge	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phelan	Wolcott
Fall	Knox	Phipps
Fernald	McCormick	Pomerene

So Mr. WADSWORTH's amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 25, page 6, the last paragraph read being as follows:

The sum of $688,277.60 of the appropriation for "Aviation, seacoast defenses," contained in the fortification appropriation act approved February 14, 1917, shall remain available until June 30, 1922, for the payment of obligations incurred under contracts executed prior to June 30, 1920.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] in regard to the item of $688,277.60 for aviation. In view of the fact that the Army and the Navy have received large sums for aviation development, is it necessary to make a special and independent appropriation under this heading? An attempt will be made, and I think properly, to coordinate the activities of the War Department and the Navy Department with respect to aviation. This would seem to be a diffusion of that activity rather than a coordination of the activities of the Government.

Let me say that it seems to me the work of aviation, whether it relates to vessels or the land or comes under the head of fortifications, could best be done by one interdepartmental bureau, and I was wondering why it is necessary to have aviation carried in this bill as well as in the Army bill and in the Navy appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The committee received a letter from Maj. Gen. Charles T. Menoher with reference to this very item. I do not know that I have received a more pleasing letter or one pointing more strongly to the point that the amount ought to be increased. Really I had in mind asking that the amount be increased and letting it go to conference, because it is of such importance that they seem to feel it is wise and necessary, particularly on account of the Panama Canal, but I am not going to ask for an increase, because we are going to have an extra session of Congress right away, and if it becomes so urgent, as Maj. Gen. Menoher thinks, we can pass a deficiency appropriation bill at an early date in the extra session. Because my colleague asks the question, I take the opportunity of now stating that fact. I am not going to put the letter in the RECORD. This is just about as small an amount as we can possibly get along with and hold the service together at all.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] whether the work of aviation called for in the pending appropriation bill would be duplicated by the work of aviation provided for in the Army appropriation bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think not. It is not duplicated. It is merely scattered.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all. I will say to my colleague that it ought to be in one bill, but it has not been done in the past, and I do not know when the time will come that we shall be able to get the appropriations in one bill covering one service of the Government. However, we shall have to do it sooner or later.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 8, page 14, line 5, after "seacoast defenses," to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$3,141,408.52"; after line 6 to insert "Aviation, seacoast defenses, $71,604.73"; in line 9 to strike out "$6,000,000" and insert "$6,331,364.88"; in line 11 to strike out "$23,000,000" and insert "$24,000,000"; in line 12 to strike out "$17,500,000" and insert "$18,700,000"; in line 17 to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$1,500,000"; in line 22, after the numerals "1919," to strike out "$9,000,000" and insert "(act of June 15, 1917) $9,800,000"; in line 25 to strike out "$35,000,000" and insert "$36,300,000"; in line 26 to strike out "$8,000,000" and insert "$9,000,000"; on page 15, line 2, to strike out "$39,000,000" and insert "$40,200,000"; in line 3 to strike out "$400,000" and insert "(act of June 15, 1917) $475,000"; in line 6 to strike out "$18,000,000" and insert "$19,000,000"; in line 8 to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "(act of June 15, 1917) $1,500,000"; in line 10 to strike out "$10,000,000" and insert "$11,300,000"; in line 12 to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$3,500,000"; in line 14 to strike out "$51,000,000" and insert "$55,500,000"; in line 16 to strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$2,500,000"; in line 21 to strike out "$1,350,000" and insert "$2,682,490.15"; and in line 23 to strike out "$233,555,760" and insert "$250,807,628.28," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. Inland and port storage and shipping facilities, $2,682,490.15.
Total appropriations to be covered into the Treasury, $250,807,628.28.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. KENYON, and Mr. OVERMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. COLT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That as used in this act—

"The term 'United States' means the United States and any waters, territory, or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof except the Isthmian Canal Zone and the Philippine Islands; but if any alien, or any alien seaman, leaves the Canal Zone or any insular possession of the United States and attempts to enter any other place under the jurisdiction of the United States nothing contained in this act shall be construed as permitting him to enter under any other conditions than those applicable to all aliens, or to all alien seamen, respectively.

"The word 'alien' includes any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States, but this definition shall not be held to include Indians of the United States not taxed nor citizens of the islands under the jurisdiction of the United States.

"The term 'immigration act' means the act of February 5, 1917, entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States'; and the term 'immigration laws' includes such act and all laws, conventions, and treaties of the United States relating to the immigration, exclusion, or expulsion of aliens.

"SEC. 2. (a) That the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted under the immigration laws to the United States in any fiscal year shall be limited to 3 per cent of the number of foreign-born persons of such nationality resident in the United States, as determined by the United States census of 1910. This provision shall not apply to the following, and they shall not be counted in reckoning any of the percentage limits provided in this act: (1) Government officials, their families, attendants, servants, and employees; (2) aliens in continuous transit through the United States; (3) aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who shall later go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory; (4) aliens visiting the United States as tourists or temporarily for business or pleasure; (5) aliens from countries immigration from which is now regulated in accordance with treaties or agreements; (6) aliens coming from the so-called Asiatic barred zone, as described in section 3 of the immigration act; or (7) aliens who have resided continuously for at least one year in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, the Republic of Mexico, countries of Central or South America, or adjacent islands.

"(b) For the purposes of this act nationality shall be determined by country of birth, but the term 'country' shall not be held to include colonies or dependencies, which colonies or dependencies shall be considered as separate countries.

"(c) The Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor, jointly, shall, as soon as feasible after the passage of this act, prepare a statement showing the number of persons of the various nationalities resident in the United States as determined by the United States census of 1910, which statement shall be the population basis for the purposes of this act, but whenever such population basis is not applicable by reason of changes in political boundaries in foreign countries occurring subsequent to 1910 and resulting in the creation of new countries, the Governments of which are recognized by the United States, or otherwise in the transference of territory from one country to another, such transference being officially recognized by the United States, then the said officials, jointly, shall estimate the number of persons resident in the United States in 1910, who were born within the area now included in such new and other countries, and in the case of such countries such estimate shall be the population basis for the purposes of this act.

"(d) When the maximum number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted in any fiscal year under this act shall have been admitted all other aliens of such nationality, except as otherwise provided in this act, who may apply for admission during the same fiscal year shall be excluded: Provided, That the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted in any month shall not exceed 20 per cent of the total number of aliens of such nationality who are admissible in that fiscal year: Provided further, That aliens returning from a temporary visit abroad, aliens who are professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, nurses, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, aliens belonging to any recognized learned profession, or aliens employed as domestic servants may be admitted notwithstanding the maximum number of aliens of the same nationality admissible in the same month or fiscal year, as the case may be, shall have entered the United States; but aliens of the classes included in this proviso who enter the United States before such maximum number shall have entered shall be counted in reckoning the percentage limits provided in this act: Provided further, That in the enforcement of this act preference shall be given so far as possible to the wives and minor children of aliens who are now in the United States and have applied for citizenship in the manner provided by law.

"SEC. 3. That the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall, as soon as feasible after the passage of this act and from time to time thereafter, prescribe rules and regulations necessary to carry the provisions of this act into effect. He shall, as soon as feasible after the passage of this act, publish a statement showing the number of aliens of the various nationalities who may be admitted to the United States between April 1, 1921, and the end of the current fiscal year, and on June 30 thereafter he shall publish a statement showing the number of aliens of the various nationalities who may be admitted during the ensuing fiscal year. He shall also publish monthly statements during the time this act remains in force showing the number of aliens of each nationality already admitted during the then current fiscal year and the number who may be admitted under the provisions of this act during the remainder of such year, but when 75 per cent of the maximum number of any nationality admissible during the fiscal year shall have been admitted such statements shall be issued weekly thereafter. All statements shall be made available for general publication and shall be mailed to all transportation companies bringing aliens to the United States who shall request the same and shall file with the Department of Labor the address to which such statements shall be sent. The Secretary of Labor shall also submit such statements to the Secretary of State, who shall transmit the information contained therein to the proper diplomatic and consular officials of the United States, which officials shall make the same available to persons intending to emigrate to the United States and to others who may apply.

"SEC. 4. The provisions of this act are in addition to and not in substitution for the provisions of the immigration laws.

"SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect and be enforced on and after April 1, 1921, except sections 1 and 3 and subdivision (c) of section 2, which shall take effect immediately upon the passage of this act, and shall continue in force until June 30, 1922, and the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted during the remaining three months of the current fiscal year shall be limited to one-fourth of the number who are admissible annually as provided in section 2 of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

LEBARON B. COLT,
WILLIAM P. DILLINGHAM,
T. P. GORE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ALBERT JOHNSON,
WILLIAM N. VAILE,
JOHN E. RAKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, as this is an emergency matter I ask for the immediate consideration of the conference report.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator from Rhode Island if the conferees reached a complete agreement?

Mr. COLT. We are in complete agreement. The House has agreed to the report of the conference committee and has sent the report to the Senate. The House has agreed to the Senate amendments to the House bill; in other words, the bill as it stands now is exactly the Senate bill, except that certain changes in phraseology or grammer have been made in order to make the text clear.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the bill still maintain the 3 per cent basis?

Mr. COLT. Absolutely. The House has adopted the Senate bill and the only changes are verbal changes to clarify the text.

I ask that the conference report be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15943, the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15943) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

REPEAL OF WAR LEGISLATION.

Mr. STERLING. I have asked the Senator from New York to yield in order that I may ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 662, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 382) declaring that certain acts of Congress, joint resolutions, and proclamations shall be construed as if the war had ended and the present or existing emergency expired.

This was reached on last Thursday on the call of the calendar, and it was understood at the time, both by the then occupant of the chair and myself, that there was an objection to the present consideration of the bill, but it transpired afterwards that objection was not made at all to the consideration of the bill at the time, as was stated to me by the Senator whom it was thought had objected.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield for a question?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask the Senator from South Dakota if the report of the committee on this joint resolution is unanimous?

Mr. STERLING. I think it is, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas. There may be a little question as to an agreement in regard to one amendment that was made; I will not speak positively in regard to whether the report was unanimous as to that one amendment or not.

Mr. ROBINSON. There is no formal minority report?

Mr. STERLING. No; there is no minority report at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection if the joint resolution does not give rise to any debate. If it does, I shall have to claim the right of way.

Mr. STERLING. I do not think it will cause any debate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 382) declaring that certain acts of Congress, joint resolutions, and proclamations shall be construed as if the war had ended and the present or existing emergency expired; which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert a substitute therefor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. STERLING. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not care to delay the joint resolution by discussion, but in a matter of this importance I think we should have the amendment read.

Mr. STERLING. Very well; and I also wish to offer an amendment to the amendment after the reading of the committee amendment shall have been concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause of the joint resolution, as follows:

That in the interpretation of any provision relating to the date of the termination of the present war or of the present or existing emergency in any acts of Congress, joint resolutions, or proclamations of the President containing provisions contingent upon the date of the termination of the war or of the present or existing emergency, or on the existence of a state of war, the date when this resolution becomes effective shall be construed and treated as the date of the termination of the war or of the present or existing emergency, notwithstanding any provisions in any act of Congress or joint resolution providing any other mode of determining the date of such termination. And any act of Congress or any provision of any such act, that by its terms is in force only during the existence of a state of war or during a state of war and a limited period of time thereafter, shall be construed and administered as if the present war terminated on the date when this resolution becomes effective, any provision of such law to the contrary notwithstanding; excepting, however, from the operation and effect of this resolution the following acts and proclamations, to wit: Title 2 of the act entitled "The food control and District of Columbia rents act," approved October 22, 1919, the act known as the trading with the enemy act, approved October 6, 1917, and the first, second, third, and fourth Liberty bond acts, the supplement to the second Liberty bond act and the Victory Liberty loan act; titles 1 and 3 of the War Finance Corporation act as amended by the act approved March 3, 1919, and the act entitled "An act to prevent in time of war departure from and entry into the United States contrary to the public safety," approved May 22, 1918; also the proclamations issued under the authority conferred by the acts herein excepted from the effect and operation of this resolution.

And to insert:

That in the interpretation of any provision relating to the duration or date of the termination of the present war or of the present or existing emergency, meaning thereby the war between the Imperial German Government and the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the Government and people of the United States, in any acts of Congress, joint resolutions, or proclamations of the President containing provisions contingent upon the duration or the date of the termination of such war or of such present or existing emergency, the date when this resolution becomes effective shall be construed and treated as the date of the termination of the war or of the present or existing emergency, notwithstanding any provision in any act of Congress or joint resolution providing any other mode of determining the date of such termination. And any act of Congress or any provision of any such act that by its terms is in force only during the existence of a state of war between the Governments and people aforesaid, or during such state of war and a limited period of time thereafter, shall be construed and administered as if such war terminated on the date when this resolution becomes effective, any provision of such law to the contrary notwithstanding; excepting, however, from the operation and effect of this resolution the following acts and proclamations, to wit: The act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved August 10, 1917 (40 Stats., p. 276), the amendment thereto entitled "the food control and District of Columbia rents act," approved October 22, 1919 (41 Stats., p. 297), the act known as the trading with the enemy act, approved October 6, 1917 (40 Stats., p. 411), and all amendments thereto, and the first, second, third, and fourth Liberty bond acts, the supplement to the second Liberty bond act, and the Victory Liberty loan act; titles 1 and 3 of the War Finance Corporation act (40 Stats., p. 506) as amended by the act approved March 3, 1919 (40 Stats., p. 1313), and public resolution No. 55, Sixty-sixth Congress, entitled 'Joint resolution directing the War Finance Corporation to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, and for other purposes," passed January 4, 1921; also the proclamations issued under the authority conferred by the acts herein excepted from the effect and operation of this resolution: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as effective to terminate the military status of any person now in desertion from the military or naval service of the United States nor to terminate the liability to prosecution and punishment under the selective service law, approved May 18, 1917 (40 Stats., p. 76), of any person who failed to comply with the provisions of said act or of acts amendatory thereof: Provided further, That the act entitled "An act to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled 'An act to punish acts of interference with foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stats., p. 217), and for other purposes," approved May 16, 1918 (40 Stats., p. 553), be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and that said section 3 of said act approved June 15, 1917, is hereby revived and restored with the same force and effect as originally enacted.

Mr. CALDER, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. ROBINSON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator from South Dakota if the joint resolution which has just been read in any way affects the property now held by the Alien Property Custodian?

Mr. STERLING. It does not affect it except that it excepts from the provisions of the joint resolution the trading with the enemy act.

Mr. CALDER. So that no disposition at all is proposed to be made by the joint resolution of the German property which is now held in this country?

Mr. STERLING. None whatever.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator what effect this joint resolution will have upon men who have been convicted of violations of the law and who are now serving their terms?

Mr. STERLING. It will have no effect whatever.

Mr. THOMAS. I think this is a very important measure, and I feel that we should not pass such an important measure on the spur of the moment. I shall have to object to it for the present.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Colorado will not insist on that objection. It is very much desired that the joint resolution shall pass at the present session.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I request the Senator from Colorado to withhold his objection at least for a moment or two.

Mr. THOMAS. I withhold it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee what are the salient differences between the House provision and the Senate provision?

Mr. STERLING. The differences are in phraseology largely up to the point where reference is made to the War Finance Corporation act, in line 9, on page 4, with the exception that the Senate amendment also provides for excepting the entire food control act, whereas the joint resolution as it came from the House excepted only the amendment to the food control act and the rent commission act.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, both the House committee and the Senate committee in this repealing joint resolution make a general description of the acts repealed, and then except from its provisions certain acts. Why did not the committee specify the acts repealed instead of undertaking to repeal statutes by general language without specific reference to them and then continue in effect certain acts? It seems to me that the other course would have been the most logical and the easiest of application.

Mr. STERLING. I will say, Mr. President, that the committee thoroughly considered that matter. They considered it at the last session of Congress when several bills purporting to repeal particular acts were before the Judiciary Committee. We found it very difficult to follow that course.

Mr. ROBINSON. Was that because there was objection to repealing some acts mentioned in the bill?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; I will say——

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the importance of the suggestion that I am making. When I vote to repeal a statute I should like to know what statute I am voting to repeal.

Mr. STERLING. Very well.

Mr. ROBINSON. And the fact as stated by the Senator from South Dakota that it was found impracticable, if not impossible, to repeal certain acts specifically which the committee desire to repeal discloses, I think, that the joint resolution is repealing laws by general language that the Congress might not want repealed if we knew what we were doing.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Arkansas can disabuse his mind of any idea of that kind if he will read carefully the language of the joint resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. My observation in that particular is based upon the statement of the Senator from South Dakota. He said just a moment ago that the reason the committee did not repeal the acts specifically was that it was found when they undertook to pass upon the matter in the committee and considered each act separately that there was objection to repealing some of them. The point that I am making is that that is the way the statutes ought to be repealed; that the Congress ought to know what acts are being repealed; and that the other procedure would have been preferable.

Mr. FLETCHER. In other words, we are attempting to repeal laws which we can not specify.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; we are attempting to repeal laws that the committee which reported the joint resolution were unwilling to repeal.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Arkansas that the joint resolution is perfectly plain and states in terms what acts are in effect repealed. They are all acts that are framed for the "present war" or for the "present emergency" or "to last during the present emergency." We have adopted the language of the various statutes in repealing or construing this war-time legislation.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator has misunderstood the import of my suggestion. I am not claiming that the language that the committee adopted and reported is not adequate to accomplish the purpose he has in mind. The point I am making is that the better procedure would be to specify the acts repealed rather than to repeal all of them by general language and then except from the repealing provisions certain acts.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will yield if I have the floor, but I think the Senator from South Dakota has the floor.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say that, as I recall, there is only one act that is repealed. All that the joint resolution provides is that in all those acts of Congress which specify "the present war," "the existence of the present emergency," and so forth, it shall be deemed ended. It does not repeal a single law. It simply says that the effect of those declarations is that the war is at an end. There is only one law repealed in the bill, and that is the amendatory espionage act, the last act that was passed in amendment of the original law.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator states that there is only one act repealed?

Mr. NELSON. Only one act repealed. All that this joint resolution does is to take these various acts that were passed during the war that commence in this way—"during the present war," "during the existing emergency," and so forth—and declare that that period, that emergency, and that war shall be deemed ended. There is no direct repeal of any law. It simply states that in respect to those matters the war is ended, the emergency is ended; that is all.

Mr. ROBINSON. Evidently there is a very great difference between the chairman of the committee, who is now addressing the Senate, and the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, let me say that there is no difference whatever. We speak generally and in general terms of this as a repealing act. It is really a construing act, that construes these statutes passed during the war and for the purposes of the war, and that by their terms are for "the present war" or during "the existing emergency"; and the joint resolution declares that they shall be construed as if the war had ended, or the emergency had ended, from the time the joint resolution becomes effective. I stated that in my opening statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does this joint resolution repeal any act of Congress?

Mr. STERLING. It does not, in terms, except as stated by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Minnesota said that it repealed one act and then construed the others. The Senator from Minnesota said that only one act was repealed by the joint resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. There is only one act that is directly repealed in the joint resolution, and that is what I call the amendatory espionage act, the last radical act. I will call the attention of the Senator to the act, if the Senator from South Dakota will yield to me. It is the act of May 16, 1918, amending the original espionage act.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then, that act is repealed by this joint resolution?

Mr. NELSON. That is the only act repealed.

Mr. ROBINSON. But it is repealed?

Mr. NELSON. Let me say to the Senator that a part of that act was amendatory of section 3 of the original espionage act. Section 3 in the original act is restored; but all that is restored is this provision, if the Senator will allow me, section 3 of the original act:

> Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully make or convey false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States or to promote the success of its enemies, and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully cause or attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty in the military or naval forces of the United States, or shall willfully obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States, to the injury of the service of the United States, shall be punished—

And so forth. That is section 3 of the original espionage act. That section was greatly amended and revised by the amendatory act of May 16, 1918. That amendatory act we repealed—it was an amendment to this section 3—and greatly enlarged it; but in repealing that act we expressly restored this section 3, because it is a section that is in force only when our country is at war, and at no other time. The very language of it is—

> Whenever the United States is at war.

That section is retained in the original bill, and the only repeal in this joint resolution is the repeal of the amendatory espionage act.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think I understand now the substantial provisions of this joint resolution. It does appear, from the statement of the chairman of the committee, that this joint resolution does repeal one important act, and at the same time revises a section of another important act that had previously been repealed, notwithstanding the statement of the Senator in charge of the bill to the contrary.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Arkansas will not put into my mouth things that I did not say or intend to say.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no intention of putting anything in the Senator's mouth. If I misunderstood him, I regret it.

Mr. STERLING. I expressly stated a moment ago that in ordinary language we speak of it as repealing war-time legislation, but my statement to begin with informed the Senator that this was a construing resolution, construing these war-time acts, so that he could not have been misled at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will pardon me, he also said that it repealed no act, except in the sense that it construed a number of existing acts. I recall the statement of the Senator very well.

Mr. STERLING. If I said that, I spoke inadvertently, because it does repeal the act amending section 3 of the espionage act, just as stated by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the Senator for that statement. My sole purpose is to ascertain what is before the Senate.

I think this colloquy has demonstrated the wisdom of the declaration of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. For the present I object to the further consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well, Mr. President. I assume that we may proceed now with the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator in charge of this joint resolution proposes to abandon it for the session?

Mr. STERLING. No; not by any means.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. BORAH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Harris	McKellar	Spencer
Brandegee	Harrison	McNary	Sterling
Calder	Heflin	Moses	Sutherland
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Swanson
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Norris	Thomas
Colt	Kendrick	Overman	Townsend
Dial	Kenyon	Phipps	Trammell
Elkins	Keyes	Poindexter	Underwood
Fletcher	King	Robinson	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	Kirby	Sheppard	Warren
Gerry	Knox	Shields	Willis
Gooding	Lenroot	Smith, Ga.
Gronna	Lodge	Smith, S. C.
Hale	McCumber	Smoot

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I am going to make another appeal to the Senator from New York, and ask him if he will not consent that we may proceed with the consideration of this joint resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The only way the Senator can proceed with it is to move to take it up.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think I shall do that. I do not like to do so, but I move that we proceed to consider——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator did have it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I intend to keep it for just a few moments. I am perfectly willing to yield for a question, but not for the making of a motion.

Mr. President, I was entirely willing that the joint resolution in which the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] is interested should be taken up, and had an understanding with him that I would yield and temporarily lay aside the Army appropriation bill if he could put through his joint resolution in a reasonably short time. More than one-half hour has since transpired. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] have evinced opposition to the Senator's joint resolution. Both of them have indicated that they object to its consideration at this time. They have taken this attitude, which plainly indicates that the joint resolution can not be passed without extended debate. It is my duty as chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, and I am instructed by the Military Affairs Committee, to press the Army appropriation bill just as hard as I can.

It is now a quarter of 4, on the Saturday before March 4, and we have not much time. It will take some time to dispose of the Army appropriation bill, and it then must go to conference. If there are any amendments upon it, the amendments must be voted upon separately in the House one by one, if they are of a legislative character, and there is grave danger that the bill can not pass at all, and I do not dare neglect my duty in this regard. Therefore I can not give my consent to any further consideration of the joint resolution, knowing that it would consume a great deal of time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am very heartily in favor of the repeal of the war emergency acts, now that we are practically in a status of peace. I recognize the situation which confronts the Senator from New York, and I hope the Army appropriation bill will not fail. I think this other measure could be passed after the Army appropriation bill is disposed of.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And I shall be glad to support an opportunity for its consideration. But I do not think the joint resolution repealing the war emergency acts can be passed without reasonable consideration. It can not be put through without some debate and some consideration.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The situation is entirely clear, Mr. President. I think I am justified in refusing consent to the further discussion of the joint resolution in charge of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. There are at least three Senators who have already indicated that they would desire to discuss it at some length.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. ROBINSON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To whom does the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield first to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I do not desire to interfere with the proper consideration of the Army bill; but if we can have an understanding that when the Army bill is out of the way we can have a reasonable time to consider the joint resolution, there will not be any difficulty about it. But if we can not have that understanding, of course some of us feel more interested in the repeal of these laws than we do in passing the Army bill, because we have from now until next July to take care of that. If the understanding can be had, very well and good. I think that ought to be understood now.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to say that there is one other most important appropriation bill, next to the Army bill, which is the last one, and that is the Navy bill. In the absence of the chairman, I do not feel at liberty to consent to the request of the Senator from Idaho, because I think it would be the duty of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to call up that bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is a very good way of getting an opportunity to discuss the joint resolution in charge of the Senator from South Dakota, and that is to pass the Army appropriation bill this afternoon.

Mr. BORAH. There is another way, and that is to discuss it while the Army appropriation bill is up.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then we will not pass anything.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if there can not be an agreement it is altogether probable that we shall not pass anything. This joint resolution ought to be passed. If we could have an hour or two hours we could pass it, but if we wait until the 3d or 4th of March we know that it can not get through the House. We may just as well be frank about it. If we do not pass it this afternoon, or not later than Monday, it will not pass through the House. Therefore, we have to take our own course.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to pass the joint resolution the Senator speaks of.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator would like to pass it, the Senator knows how to pass it.

Mr. LODGE. If we can get an agreement as to time I am entirely ready to have it passed.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the passage of the Army appropriation bill, House joint resolution 382 be made the unfinished business.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is that joint resolution?

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator from Washington that it is the joint resolution repealing the war-time legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will make another request, in order to prepare for future action. I ask unanimous consent that at not later than 4 o'clock upon Monday afternoon we shall vote upon House joint resolution 382.

Mr. ROBINSON. And all amendments thereto?

Mr. BORAH. And all amendments thereto, to its final disposition.

Mr. THOMAS. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15275) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, still in disagreement between the two Houses, to the bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes; had agreed to the further conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. GOOD, Mr. MAGEE, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, managers of the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 15935) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask the Senate to resume the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15943) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York has asked unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendments, the committee amendments to be first considered. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Before the Secretary proceeds with the reading of the bill for action on the committee amendments, I desire in a very brief statement to set forth what the bill does in the matter of appropriations as compared with the appropriations of last year. I am well aware that many questions will be asked of the committee by Senators, and very properly so, as to the general treatment of the Army by this proposed bill.

Mr. President, it will be noted that for the first time in the history of Army appropriation legislation the Military Academy appropriation bill is merged with the Army appropriation bill. It was decided to do that in the interest of economy, both as to money and as to time expended on the part of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives. So, when we regard the total carried by this Army appropriation bill, we should not forget that it carries also the Military Academy items.

Last year, when we appropriated for the current year, we appropriated a sum for the maintenance of the Army and the War Department in the Army appropriation bill and for the Military Academy of $395,000,000. I am using round figures.

This year the War Department sent in estimates for the Army and the academy of $699,000,000. The House has passed the Army appropriation bill, including the Military Academy bill, carrying $331,000,000. The Senate committee has reported the House bill, increasing it to $364,000,000, an increase in round figures of $33,000,000 over the bill as passed by the House.

When we reflect, however, that the appropriations for this fiscal year, which were, as passed by the Congress last spring, $395,000,000, have been increased by deficiency appropriations to the extent of $54,000,000, we find the situation somewhat as follows:

For the current fiscal year there has been appropriated, either in the original appropriation bills or by deficiency appropriation bills, a total of $449,000,000. The Senate Committee on Military Affairs reports the Army appropriation bill with $364,000,000, a difference of $84,000,000, a saving of $84,000,000 as contrasted with the expenditures for this current fiscal year.

In reporting the bill, let me say to the Senate that the committee was unanimous as to each and every one of the items, and it is confident that should the bill be enacted into law it will not result in a deficiency for the next fiscal year. We are positive that the Army can be run for this sum of money, and we are also positive that this sum of money takes care of only the absolutely necessary activities of the Army.

We have had our experience, Mr. President, with respect to the appropriations of last year and the year before. In spite of the warning of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, deficiencies have occurred in both those years, which have come back to plague us. The Senate committee believes in an honest appropriation bill, which will meet the obligations of the Government, which shall hold, of course, in mind all the time the needs of economy, and when we propose to the Senate that $364,000,000 is necessary to run the Army for the next fiscal year we mean just what we say, and we believe that no more than that sum will be required for any of the purposes recited in this long bill.

As to the size of the force which these appropriations contemplate, the Army to-day contains in the neighborhood of 240,000 enlisted men. The Congress has passed a resolution finally, over the veto of the President, directing the Secretary of War to cease recruiting and to refrain from recruiting until the Army has been reduced to 175,000 men. I am speaking of enlisted men. That is the law to-day governing the size of the Army; at least it is the expression of the country as to the size of the Army after it has been reduced through the expiration of current enlistments; in fact, it is the law.

The House of Representatives, in passing the Army appropriation bill which is before us, appropriated a sum of money which they calculated would be sufficient to pay an Army averaging 150,000 men. The best estimates which we can secure showing the progressive reduction in the Army under the terms of the joint resolution indicate that the Army at the beginning of the next fiscal year, July 1 next, will contain 207,000 men. In order that the Army may average for the next fiscal year 150,000 men, the Army for the next fiscal year must be reduced far below the number of 150,000 men by the end of the fiscal year. Indeed, if the Army is to average 150,000 men for the next fiscal year, starting with a strength of 207,000 upon July 1, it will have to be reduced to the figure of 122,000 men at the end of the next fiscal year. In other words, the House appropriation for pay of enlisted men, if adhered to by the War Department—and we feel it will be in this next administration—will result in reducing the Regular Army, including its overseas garrisons and the soldiers in its insular possessions and all its other activities, to a total of 122,000 men on June 30, 1922.

The Senate committee has increased the item "Pay of enlisted men" so as to provide enough to pay during the next fiscal year an Army averaging in strength 175,000 men, exclusive of the Philippine Scouts. In order that the Army during the next fiscal year shall average for the 12 months of the year a strength of 175,000, it must be reduced by the end of the next fiscal year to 162,000 men, approximately.

So that if we compare the two bills in this regard we find that the House appropriation compels the reduction of the Army to 122,000, and the bill as reported by the Senate committee compels the reduction of the Army to 162,000.

Mr. BORAH. I do not quite understand that. Did the Senator say that ultimately under this bill the Army is to be reduced to 162,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is, by the end of the next fiscal year; in other words, we reduce the Army by our own proposals to a smaller number than the Congress has already fixed.

Congress passed a joint resolution instructing the Secretary of War to give up recruiting until the Army is reduced to 175,000. We go a little further in the appropriation bill, and appropriations for pay of the Army should in a very real measure govern its strength. We go a little further and provide, in effect, that at the end of the next fiscal year the Army shall not exceed in enlisted strength 162,000. In reaching that decision I think I ought to say to the Senate that some members of the committee believed very sincerely that the Army should not go below 175,000 under any circumstances during the next fiscal year. Other members of the committee believe it should be reduced to 150,000 and stay there after having reached that figure during the next fiscal year. So far as I am able to recollect, no member of the committee believed that the Army should be reduced to 122,000 at the end of the next fiscal year. There was a difference of opinion as between 175,000 as the minimum and 150,000 as the minimum, and we composed our differences by finally compromising on 162,000 men at the end of the next fiscal year. The committee's report in that respect, as in every other, was unanimous.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to understand the process. During the coming fiscal year, will the termination of terms of enlistment be such as to allow the military authorities to govern as to what shall be the strength of the Army, or is that proposed to be cared for by Congress?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not quite understand the Senator's question.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We have 240,000 enlisted men in the Army now. The law provides that the number shall ultimately be reduced to 175,000, but we are making appropriation now to take care of an Army beginning with 240,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Two hundred and seven thousand commencing July 1. It is 240,000 to-day, but it will shrink to 207,000 by July 1.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. For the fiscal year for which provision is now being made, the Senate proposes a sufficient appropriation to take care of an Army, beginning with whatever number we may begin with and coming down to 162,000 at the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and 175,000 will be the average strength through the 12 months of the next fiscal year.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The House appropriation would necessarily force a reduction to 122,000, so that the average would be 150,000. The question I ask is this: Are the terms of the expiration of enlistments of such a nature during that time the matter is in the hands of the military authorities to govern what shall be the number, whether 122,000 or 162,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the terms are in effect in the bill and are governed by the amount of money we appropriate for pay of enlisted men. They have to cut down.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. So they can be discharged, whether their term of enlistment has expired or not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There will be sufficient expirations during the 12 months of the next fiscal year to bring the number down automatically.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is just the point I am making, and for this reason: I was wondering why we should wait for a gradual diminution to 175,000 during the fiscal year and have the reduction to the standard of 175,000 at the will of the military authorities.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, the bill does not go into force and effect until July 1.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I understand.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We can not do anything in the bill applicable to the period between now and July 1, but the joint resolution is in full operation now. Not a man is being enlisted into the Regular Army to-day. Reenlistments are permitted, but even at that the Army will be reduced from 240,000 to 207,000 between now and July 1. Then it will continue to reduce under the terms of the joint resolution until it reaches 175,000 men. Then under the terms of the appropriation bill it must be reduced a little more in order that they shall have money enough to last through the year, and if they do that, which they must do, at the end of the fiscal year there will be 162,000 men in the Army.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then the next appropriation bill will take care of 175,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the theory, but, of course, we can not pledge the next Congress.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when is it anticipated that the Army will finally reach the size of 162,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Starting at 207,000 on July 1 next, it will reach 162,000 on January 21, 1922, and will stay there for the rest of the fiscal year.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the process of decreasing the Army goes on under the joint resolution we have passed until it reaches 175,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. That is mandatory?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. But the further reduction of the Army is dependent upon the fact that we only appropriate for 162,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The average is 175,000, and they will be compelled to let some more men go in order to have enough money to pay the troops.

Mr. BORAH. There is such a thing as a deficiency appropriation for those things.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There will not be.

Mr. BORAH. That is just what I desired to know. How can we know that there will not be a deficiency appropriation? How can we know that the Army will be reduced if it is merely dependent on the question of pay, because they can, as they very often do, incur the obligation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I believe the next administration will understand the intent of Congress and will not employ more men in the Army than we can pay out of the appropriations.

Mr. BORAH. Is that the only hope?

Mr. WADSWORTH. To me that is positive.

Mr. BORAH. I wish I had the Senator's faith.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have absolute faith.

Mr. McKELLAR. In addition to what the Senator said about decreasing the Army, there is also a provision, as the Senator will recall, on page 17 of the bill by which the Secretary of War is authorized in his discretion to grant honorable discharges to men now in the Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He is. Now, Mr. President, may we proceed with the consideration of committee amendments?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 2, line 17, to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That not to exceed $50,000 of the money herein appropriated shall be expended for the payment of salaries of civilian employees connected with the sale of war supplies and the adjustment of war contracts and claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 12, to strike out "the necessary fuel for heating the General Staff College Building and," and in line 13 to strike out the word "building" and insert "General Staff College Building," so as to read:

For expenses of the General Staff College, being for the purchase of the necessary stationery; typewriters and exchange of same; office, toilet, and desk furniture; textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers and periodicals; printing and binding; maps; police utensils; for lighting the General Staff College Building and grounds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 22, to reduce the total appropriations for General Staff College from "$25,000" to "$22,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 6, in the items for Office of Chief of Staff, to strike out "for the hire of interpreters, special agents, and guides."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 13, to increase the appropriations for Office of Chief of Staff from "$100,000" to "$300,000."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs why it became necessary to increase the House appropriation from $100,000 to $300,000 on that item?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think I am accurate in saying that the appropriation appealed to the Committee on Military Affairs as bringing back more value to the country than any other appropriation item in the entire bill, speaking proportionately. This item is for carrying on the entire intelligence work of the Army. Last year we gave them a total of $325,000. The House cut them to $100,000 in this bill, which means that they would have to abandon most important activities which are of immense value to the Government, not only to the War Department but to the State Department and the Navy Department.

I can not exaggerate the importance of the work these men do. It was never known prior to the war what an intelligence service was in our Army; in fact, we had none worthy the name. We had to learn it during the war. We learned it from our allies. To-day we believe we have, if not the finest intelligence service of any of the countries, certainly as fine, and to ruin it or to cramp it unduly is to expose us in the most dangerous way to elements to which we should never expose ourselves. These men do an invaluable work, and the committee most urgently recommend that this work of all others be not cut down.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the chairman of the committee whether they cooperate with the State Department or with the Labor Department, or whether they work independently of those departments.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They cooperate with them all. The committee believes they are most valuable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

EMERGENCY TARIFF—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New York, who has charge of the Army appropriation bill, if he will yield to me to call up the conference report on House bill 15275, the so-called emergency tariff bill, provided it does not lead to debate. If the report is going to lead to any debate, of course I shall not press it at this time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With that understanding, I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Hale	McNary	Smoot
Brandegee	Harrison	Moses	Sterling
Capper	Heflin	New	Swanson
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Overman	Thomas
Curtis	Keyes	Penrose	Townsend
Dial	King	Poindexter	Trammell
Fletcher	Kirby	Robinson	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
Gerry	Lenroot	Simmons	Warren
Gore	McCumber	Smith, Ga.
Gronna	McKellar	Smith, S. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is no quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The reading clerk called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. KENYON, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. SPENCER, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. UNDERWOOD answered to their names when called.

Mr. HARRIS, Mr. FERNALD, Mr. EDGE, Mr. WILLIS, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. ELKINS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. LODGE, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. PHIPPS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. Is there objection to laying the Army bill temporarily aside for the purpose of considering the conference report on the tariff bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection to that, Mr. President, but——

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, in view of the objection, of course, I shall have to withdraw the request. I do so cheerfully, and hope that the conference report may come up for consideration——

Mr. ROBINSON. There was no objection. The Senator is laboring under a misapprehension. I did not understand the Senator from North Carolina to object. He consented.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not object. I said I had no objection.

Mr. PENROSE. I understood the Senator to say that he wanted the report to go over until Monday.

Mr. SIMMONS. I meant I had no objection to laying the Army bill temporarily aside in order that the conference report might be called up, but I was going to ask when it was called up that it go over until Monday.

Mr. PENROSE. That is what I understood, and in order not to delay the proceedings, I suggest that we do not go through with that formality. I am much obliged to the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] for his courtesy, but I will withdraw the request, in the hope that the conference report may come up for consideration on Monday.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that there is no disposition on the part of Senators on this side of the Chamber to delay the consideration of the conference report; and if he desires, we will give him assurances that on Monday a vote may be taken not later than 2 o'clock.

Mr. PENROSE. That is satisfactory to me.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15943) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 9, line 19, in the items for office of the Chief Signal Officer, to strike out "experimentation and research for the purpose of developing improvements in apparatus and methods of signaling" and to insert "experimental investigation, research, purchase, and development or improvements in apparatus, and maintenance of signaling and accessories thereto, including patent rights and other rights thereto."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 10, to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That the amounts to be expended from this appropriation for the objects hereinbefore set forth shall not exceed the following respective sums: Salaries and wages, $600,000; engineering and research work, $150,000; miscellaneous expenses and emergency purchases, Hawaiian and Philippine departments, $25,000; signal equipment for organizations, $1,000,000; pigeon service, $5,000; meteorological service, $75,000; photographic and cinematographic service, $100,000; commercial and existing Government-owned telegraph and telephone service, $500,000; training Signal Corps troops, enlisted specialists and officers, $20,000; printing, $10,000; gasoline and oils, $20,000; nonunit Signal Corps supplies, $50,000; radio installations and maintenance on Army transports, $50,000; operation and maintenance, Camp Alfred Vail, $100,000; miscellaneous expenses and emergency purchases, corps areas, $25,000; Air Service field telephone expenses, $25,000; supplies to be procured through other departments of the Army, $50,000; mobile radio stations for Coast Artillery brigades, $25,000; and radio equipment for tanks, $5,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Provided, That not to exceed $600,000 from this appropriation may be expended for salaries and wages of civilian employees; and not to exceed $400,000 may be expended for commercial and existing Government-owned telegraph and telephone service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment, on page 11, line 5, by striking out "$600,000," and inserting "$300,000."

I shall be glad if the Senator will explain why it is necessary that so large a sum shall be appropriated for civilian employees. While I have the floor, to avoid consuming time later, I should like to call the Senator's attention to a matter to which my attention has been directed by a number of officers of the Army. They have conveyed the information to me that in the Army there are a very large number of civilian employees; indeed, they say there are now and have been in the past entirely too many. One officer told me that there were substantially 90,000 civilian employees in the Army, and that under the present administration of the Army it seemed absolutely impossible to have the enlisted men in the Army do the work which in the past has been performed by them; that the efforts to teach them in various kinds of schools had impressed a large number of enlisted men with the idea that they were not there for the purpose of drilling or doing work which heretofore appertained to men in the enlisted service of the country. There has been great complaint by many officers in the Army of the present system and of the large number of civilian employees. May I ask the Senator whether or not this bill tries to cure the evil which exists in respect to the matter of which I have spoken?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The evil to which the Senator from Utah refers is a very great one and must be cured. There have been entirely too many civilian employees retained in the service of the War Department in its various activities all over the United States. They are part of the enormous overhead imposed upon the Army itself. I may say right here that if we could reduce the overhead to a reasonable figure in proportion to the authorized strength of the Army, we would not hear so many requests for the reduction of the number of enlisted men. It is the overhead that costs.

So far as the Signal Corps item is concerned, may I say to the Senator that the Chief of the Signal Corps estimated for $1,398,000 for civilian employees? Finally he reduced that recommendation to $1,000,000, saying that that was rock bottom. The Senator will note that in the House text which has been stricken out, covering a number of items, the House thought that $600,000 was sufficient, and presumably they thought it was necessary. The Senate committee took the House figures; in other words, we have reduced the amount from an estimate of $1,397,000 down to $600,000 in one fell swoop.

If that is not enough, we will take off more next year; but it is a very drastic reduction.

Mr. KING. Will not the Senator consent to a reduction to at least $500,000, let it go to conference, and ascertain if further economies may not be effectuated?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We have taken off $796,000, and I think that is possibly enough for the time being.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that the estimates, particularly those submitted by the War Department, are entitled to no consideration whatever.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the $600,000 appropriation is entitled to consideration.

Mr. KING. But the estimates, as the Senator reminds me, were very much more than $600,000. It is not so much of the estimate that I was complaining——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under the sum allowed they will be compelled to discharge thousands of civilian employees.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I should merely like to say that the amount appropriated during the current year for this purpose was $938,000, so that the amount reported by the committee cuts off nearly $400,000 of the amount appropriated for the employment of civilian personnel.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a drastic cut.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether any of the officers of the Army or any of the enlisted men in the Signal Corps will perform any work whatever?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They will do the military work.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact that work has been done by civilians which ought to have been done by the officers and enlisted men of the Army?

Mr. LENROOT. Very much more than ought to be the case, of course.

Mr. KING. And is it not a fact that more than 90,000 civilians have been employed in the Army during the past year?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; more than that; the number has been 96,000.

Mr. KING. And they have been doing work which ought to have been done by officers and enlisted men, thus imposing upon the American people a tax that is almost intolerable.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Senator will follow this bill through carefully he will see that we have cut the estimates severely.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that, notwithstanding the cuts which have been made, the overhead is entirely too great, and I wish the Senator would consent to a further reduction with respect to the overhead. It seems to me that it is reprehensible that for an Army of the size that we have fixed we should have a bill here carrying over $360,000,000, costing nearly as much if not more than Germany's army cost when she had a million men in her army.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say that probably every member of the committee felt that the number of civilian employees in the Army was entirely too great. The subcommittee of seven, I think, had no difference of opinion about it, and they cut them off wherever they found that they could do it without destroying the service. Indeed, we have gone into that matter very fully. The reduction is very great; and I think if the Senator had known that, he would have agreed to the figures about civilian employees that we have recommended. They are not cut as much as we expect to cut them another year, but they have been very greatly reduced.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will read the bill, he will discover that the pay of the Army is substantially $80,000,000, and the appropriation for the support of the Army, food, and so forth, is substantially $60,000,000; so that it costs in overhead expense and for extraneous and other expenses a great deal more than it costs for support of the Army and paying their compensation. The overhead is entirely too great. It is disproportionate to the amount that the Army itself costs, and it costs a very tremendous amount.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that the cost of the Army has been decreased from $448,000,000—when we take into consideration West Point I believe those are the figures, or about that amount—to $362,000,000, or a saving of nearly $90,000,000 this year, provided that the bill as reported to the Senate is passed. We regard that as a very great reduction, and I am very happy to know that the total has been reduced to that extent.

Mr. KING. In view of the explanation of the Senator, I shall not insist on my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 11, line 20, to increase the total of the appropriation for Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system from "$140,000" to "$165,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 2, to strike out:

$19,200,000: Provided, That the amounts to be expended from this appropriation for the objects hereinbefore set forth shall not exceed the following respective sums: Pay and expenses of civilian employees, $4,000,000; engineering and experimental development, $4,000,000; instruction and operations of Air Service troops, $3,000,000; experimentation, conservation, and production of helium, $100,000; production of airplane equipment, $4,000,000; production of lighter-than-air equipment, $500,000; improvement of stations, hangars, and gas plants, $350,000; fuel and lubricants, $3,000,000; and miscellaneous expenses, $250,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

$23,000,000: Provided, That not to exceed $4,000,000 from this appropriation may be expended for pay and expenses of civilian employees; and not exceeding $400,000 may be expended for experimentation, conservation, and production of helium: Provided further, That not less than $5,000,000 thereof shall be expended for experimental and research work with airplanes or lighter-than-air craft and their equipment: Provided further, That not less than $7,000,000 shall be expended for the production and purchase of new airplanes and their equipment, spare parts, and accessories: Provided further, That claims not exceeding $250 in amount for damages to persons and private property resulting from the operation of aircraft at home and abroad may be settled out of the funds appropriated hereunder, when each claim is substantiated by a survey report of a board of officers appointed by the commanding officer of the nearest aviation post, and approved by the Director of Air Service: Provided further, That claims so settled and paid from the sum hereby appropriated shall not exceed, in the aggregate, the sum of $10,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, there is a misprint there, or rather an error in the drafting of the amendment. On page 15, line 4, the word "Director" should be stricken out, and the word "Chief" substituted, so that it will read:

Chief of Air Service.

That is the proper title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 15, line 4, it is proposed to strike out the word "Director" and insert the word "Chief", so that, if amended, it will read:

Chief of Air Service.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the chairman of the committee whether in line 14, page 14, the amount of $4,000,000 for civilian employees may not be reduced? It seems to me that that amount for the expenditure of $23,000,000 is entirely too much.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That also represents a very savage reduction in the amount asked by the Air Service and the amount spent this year. It ought to be understood, of course, that a proportionately larger number of civilians must be employed under this appropriation than in most of the other branches. The experimental work at Dayton is conducted in a plant which must of necessity employ mechanics and draftsmen and engineers. Many of those are civilians. The Air Service must always be dependent upon a limited number of high-type civilian employees to carry on the engineering and experimental activities at Dayton. They also have an immense amount of war-time material in storage which they have been trying to sell. Much of it is very difficult to sell. They ask for $5,852,000 under one head for civilian employees, and in two others of their items they ask for something like $2,000,000 beyond that. They have asked for well over $7,000,000 for civilian employees. We cut them to $4,000,000, just as the House did. I will say that the House Committee on Appropriations went into this matter with great care, and they established the maximum of $4,000,000, and our investigations confirmed their action, and we adhered to the same figures. It is a very great cut.

Mr. KING. I will ask the Senator if the $4,000,000 provided in line 14, on page 14, is not the amount required for civilian pay merely in the Air Service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. And for all the Air Service activities, including manufacture, experimentation, and engineering.

Mr. KING. I understood the Senator to state a moment ago that the House, after a very careful investigation, had fixed the sum of $4,000,000 for all civilian employees.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It did.

Mr. KING. The Senator meant only in the Air Service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes.

Mr. KING. Not in all the branches of the Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no; just for this item.

Mr. KING. I can only repeat that $4,000,000 seems entirely too much to pay for civilian help in the expenditure of $23,000,000. Nearly 25 per cent of the amount which we appropriate for the Air Service goes for civilian employees. I can not understand, Mr. President, the course that requires such a large proportion of the appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I should just like to say to the Senator that the Air Service is spending this year $8,500,000 for this purpose, and this is a cut of more than 50 per cent.

Mr. KING. All I can say is that those in charge of the Air Service ought to be censured for their lavish and prodigal use of the public funds. I think there will be no regret—indeed, there will be no regret with one Democratic Senator—if there shall be a very important change in the administration of the War Department of the Government.

I do wish the Senator would consent to reduce this $4,000,000 to $3,000,000. I think to expend $4,000,000 for civilian employees out of an appropriation of $23,000,000 for the Air Service is entirely too much.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator that the peculiar nature of this service calls for the employment of civilians of a very high class. For instance, among others they have a staff of 3,500 engineers. Those men have to be paid high salaries; and then they have machinists, and various experts like that, that are needed in the conduct of this service, and the further development of the machine and its operation.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator what we have to show during the past year for the work of 3,500 civilian engineers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think I can answer in part. That is, if the best flyers in this country are to be believed, one of the results of the employment of those engineers is the finest flying machines the world knows.

Mr. KING. How many machines have been produced during the past year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The machines to which I refer have been produced only in very small numbers, as experimental types; but in their tests, which have been most exhaustive, they have produced results as yet unequaled by the machines of any other country, and the Air Service is now putting them into production. All that work has to be done by engineers and scientific people in making these experiments and drawing the plans and specifications. It is the most technical undertaking, requiring great skill, and we shall always have to employ some civilians on it, and high-priced civilians.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that during the war we were told every day or two that these high-priced civilians and these mechanicians who were employed and these scientific men were going to give us the finest machines in the world. The war ended, and we had no machines.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 15, line 10, to strike out the additional proviso in the following words:

And provided further, That the Secretary of War is authorized to pay out of funds appropriated for the Air Service of the Army for the fiscal year 1920, the sum of $1,079.02 to Frank D. Kohn for the use and occupation, for the period from July 1, 1919, to January 9, 1920, of the lands upon which the Air Service engine and plane repair depot is now located near the city of Montgomery, Ala.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 20, after the word "staff," to strike out "$42,000,000" and insert "$46,000,000," so as to read:

For pay of officers of the line and staff, $46,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 24, to increase the appropriation for the pay of officers of the Officers' Reserve Corps from "$250,000" to "$750,000."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the necessity of that increase? I do not understand it. It is not covered by the report, as I see it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall be very glad to explain it. That increase in appropriation should be read in connection with the proviso that immediately follows it, which reads as follows:

Provided, That no portion of this appropriation shall be expended for the pay of a reserve officer on active duty for a longer period than 15 days, except such as may be detailed for duty with the War Department General Staff under section 3a and section 5 (b) of the Army reorganization act approved June 4, 1920, or who may be detailed for courses of instruction at the general or special service schools of the Army, or who may be detailed for duty as instructors at civilian military training camps appropriated for in this act, or who may be detailed for duty with tactical units of the Air Service, as provided in section 37a of the Army reorganization act approved June 4, 1920.

Let me say to the Senator from Idaho that the basic law provides, among other things, that there shall be added to the War Department General Staff committee, which draws up the regulations and the policies governing the National Guard, a number of officers from the National Guard and reserve equal to 50 per cent of the entire committee. That is a matter of law. Those officers have to serve more than 15 days. They are there now. There are about 12 of them. They have been selected from a list of officers submitted by the governors of the respective States. They are some of the leading National Guard reserve officers in the country. They must be paid. The House appropriation, among other things, would not permit that to go on, although that is a mandatory provision of law.

In addition to that, the Army reorganization law provides that reserve officers, with their consent, may go to Army service schools and take the special courses at those schools. Those courses are 60 or 90 days in length. That is one of the most important provisions in the military policy of the country—to permit reserve officers and guard officers to take advantage of the Army service schools and go to them and get this special instruction and then return to their respective States and impart that instruction to the National Guard troops in their commands. While they are at the schools, the law provides that they must be paid the pay of their grade. It is manifestly impossible for them to take the course at the schools in 15 days. They must spend more than 15 days there in order to complete even a portion of the course.

Then, the basic law also authorizes the Secretary of War to establish and maintain training camps for civilians, the size and extent of those camps to be governed by the appropriations made by the Congress from year to year. Those civilian training camps are a continuation of the famous Plattsburgh idea, which we all knew about back in 1915 and 1916. Now, it is manifestly a great extravagance to have none but Regular officers conduct the training at the civilian training camps. It would be foolish to carry officers on the permanent pay roll merely for the purpose of giving instruction at training camps for 30 days in a year. It is manifestly in the interest of economy, and also for the good of the whole program, to use a lot of reserve officers, who, with their consent, will go to these training camps and help instruct the civilians who volunteer to attend them. While they are there for the 30 days, under the statute, they must be paid the pay of their grade.

The House appropriation for the pay of reserve officers would not permit any of these activities. It might be sufficient to pay the officers serving with the General Staff here in Washington, but it certainly would prevent any reserve officers going to Army service schools, and hundreds of them are anxious to go. They volunteer to go to get the benefit of the course, and hundreds of them are willing to go to the civilian training camps and help out in that work.

The appropriation asked for under this heading was $1,530,000. It is fair to say, however, that in that estimate there was a provision for summoning 670,000 reserve officers to a 15-day training period.

The committee believed there was no necessity for summoning any such number. It should be remembered, however, that under the basic law every officer in the Officers' Reserve Corps is liable for 15 days' service every year. That he must perform if he is summoned by the President and Secretary of War. There are 70,000 reserve officers now. It would be manifestly impossible to summon any such number. The Treasury could not stand it. There is no idea that it should be done every year anyway, but even then, the department asked for 6,700 of them to be summoned for 15 days' training. In effect, we have cut that out, too, and by reducing the estimate from $1,530,000 to $750,000, they still can carry on those activities which the committee believe to be absolutely important and in thorough accord with the spirit of the new Army act, which makes all these men a part of the Army of the United States. When we once get that policy going, get it perfected, get it understood that the citizen soldier is the man this country is going to depend on in the future, as it has depended on him in the past, then we can reduce the number of professional soldiers. It is to make that possible that the committee has increased this appropriation over the House figure.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to call attention to the fact that the item in last year's bill read this way:

For pay of officers of the Officers' Reserve Corps, $2,751,000.

That was the amount we appropriated in 1920.

Mr. BORAH. What struck me was that the House has put in $250,000. I suppose they did that to discontinue the system entirely.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would have that effect. This amount, of course, compared with other sums in the bill, is very, very small. But centered in this very activity is the whole spirit of the new law. If we are not to permit reserve officers to go to the Army service schools and go to the training camps and sit on the General Staff here in Washington, we might just as well not attempt to organize any force of trained citizens.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 1, after the word "days," to insert:

Except such as may be detailed for duty with the War Department General Staff under section 3a and section 5(b) of the Army reorganization act approved June 4, 1920, or who may be detailed for courses of instruction at the general or special service schools of the Army, or who may be detailed for duty as instructors at civilian military training camps appropriated for in this act, or who may be detailed for duty with tactical units of the Air Service, as provided in section 37a of the Army reorganization act approved June 4, 1920.

So as to read:

Provided, That no portion of this appropriation shall be expended for the pay of a reserve officer on active duty for a longer period than 15 days, except such as may be detailed for duty, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 11, to increase the appropriation for pay of warrant officers from "$1,346,000" to "$1,413,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 13, after the words "one thousand," to insert "and fifty," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That this appropriation shall be used for the pay of not to exceed 1,050 warrant officers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 15, to strike out the proviso in the following words: "Provided, That no portion of this appropriation shall be used for pay of reserve officers," so as to make the paragraph read:

For aviation increase, to officers of the Air Service, $1,000,000.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator the meaning of the language found in lines 14 and 15? Is it to increase the number of officers or to increase their compensation above that which is prescribed now by law?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under the law, when an officer enjoys a flying status, and goes on duty as a flyer, he gets an increase in pay, presumably based upon the increased risk. That is in the law to-day. Whenever an officer goes on a flying status he gets an increase.

Mr. KING. I am familiar with that. But is this merely for the purpose of compensating for that increased risk?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KING. That is not carried in the general item of $46,000,000 for pay of officers, and so forth, on page 15?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. KING. Or any other provision carrying pay for officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no; there is no duplication.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 20, to increase the appropriation for pay of enlisted men of the line and staff from "$72,678,659" to "$83,000,000."

Mr. BORAH. I presume this is the item which takes care of the size of the Army. Would the Senator have any objection to its going over for the present?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator desire that it shall go over beyond the end of this week?

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator wants to finish the consideration of the bill to-night I will not ask it, but if the Senator does not intend to finish it to-night I would like to have it go over until Monday.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am going to make a desperate effort to finish the bill to-night.

Mr. BORAH. Let it go over for the present, then.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over for the present.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 21, before the word "discharge," to strike out the word "honorably"; in line 22, after the words "pay and," to strike out the words "traveling allowances" and to insert "transportation in kind to the railroad station at or nearest to the place of acceptance for enlistment"; in line 25, before the word "either," to strike out "such men or"; and on page 17, line 1, after the word "guardian," to insert "and the Secretary of War is authorized in his discretion to grant applications for discharge of enlisted men who have served one year or more with records satisfactory to their commanding officers, without regard to the provisions of existing law respecting discharges," so as to read:

The Secretary of War shall discharge from the military service with pay and transportation in kind to the railroad station at or nearest to the place of acceptance for enlistment all enlisted men under the age of 18 on the application of either of their parents or legal guardian, and the Secretary of War is authorized in his discretion to grant applications for discharge of enlisted men who have served one year or more with records satisfactory to their commanding officers, without regard to the provisions of existing law respecting discharges.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 6, to insert:

That nothing contained in public resolution No. 59 of the Sixty-sixth Congress shall be held to prohibit sufficient enlistments in any branch of the Army to bring such branch to not more than 62 per cent of the number prescribed therefor in the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator if the effect of the amendment just read would not be to nullify the provisions of the joint resolution providing for a reduction of the Army to 175,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President. This amendment, from line 7 to line 15, in effect is exactly what the Senate passed when it passed that joint resolution directing the reduction of the strength down to 175,000 men. The total authorized strength of the Army is 280,000. One hundred and seventy-five thousand is 62 per cent of that number. This provision will permit the War Department to maintain the several branches of the service at not to exceed 62 per cent of their respective authorized strength. The total of all the branches will be 62 per cent of the entire authorized strength. So, it makes no difference, but permits the War Department to keep the different branches balanced as to strength.

Mr. KING. I understood the purpose, but I was wondering whether the language of the joint resolution, not having it before me, would be construed to permit that, even though in so doing it went beyond the aggregate of 175,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would be impossible.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 20, to increase the appropriation for aviation increase, to enlisted men of the Air Service, from "$150,000" to "$300,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 22, before the words "enlisted men," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "one thousand," so as to read:

Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for increased pay on flying status to more than 1,000 enlisted men.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. One committee amendment has been omitted by an error. At the bottom of page 17 the item reads, "for pay of the enlisted men of the Philippine Scouts, $1,100,000." It should be changed as to the amount, to "$1,046,000," a difference of $54,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 17, line 24, strike out "$1,100,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,046,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 2, to increase the appropriation for additional pay for length of service to enlisted men from "$3,000,000" to "$4,500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. It has just occurred to me that the amendment as to the 62 per cent strength would authorize a deficiency for the Army, being more than 162,000 men at the end of the year. In other words, would not that be reduced?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It reads, "to bring such branch to not more than 62 per cent of the number prescribed."

Mr. LENROOT. That makes 175,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Actual strength, 175,000. I suggest that we try it at 60 per cent.

Mr. LENROOT. Sixty per cent would make it 168,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is inclusive of the Philippine Scouts. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on page 17, between lines 7 and 15, was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 17, line 10, in the committee amendment, I move to strike out "62" and to insert in lieu thereof "60."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 4, to increase the appropriation for pay of officers on the retired list from "$4,500,000" to "$5,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the subhead on page 19, line 7, to insert the words "corps areas" before the word "Army," so as to read:

Pay of Army field clerks and civil-service messengers at headquarters of the several territorial departments, corps areas, Army and corps headquarters, territorial districts, tactical divisions and brigades, service schools, camps, and ports of embarkation and debarkation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 19, line 17, "$633,000" should be "$733,000," because that would be the proper computation of the items just above it, and I move that that amendment be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 19, line 17, strike out "$633,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$733,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 20, to reduce the appropriation for commutation of quarters and of heat and light from "$200,000" to "$198,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 22, to increase the appropriation for pay of expert accountant for the Inspector General's Department from "$2,500" to "$3,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 6, to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the appropriation for pay, etc., of the Army for the fiscal year 1921 shall be available for the authorized pay of members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, or other persons authorized by the Secretary of War to attend the advanced course camps, during the fiscal year 1921.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator in respect to lines 5 to 11, page 22, whether there has been any diminution in the number of clerks in the finance department? I see we are allowing $1,420,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; there has been a very large reduction.

Mr. KING. Of course, there are thousands of other clerks in other branches of the service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. A large number of these men are auditing war-time claims, cleaning up that work. It has been an enormous undertaking. Gen. Lord, the chief of that department, I think it is fair to say, has saved a great many million dollars to the Government in finally auditing claims passed by other branches of the service, and thus reduced the number of employees.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 20, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That so much of the unexpended amount of the appropriation for pay, etc., of the Army for the fiscal year 1919 as may be necessary to permit payment for the adjustment and settlement of claims of officers, members of the Nurse Corps, and enlisted men for pay and allowances growing out of service in the World War from April 6, 1917, to June 30, 1919, inclusive, shall remain upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of that appropriation until June 30, 1921.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 23, line 3, the date should be changed from "June 30, 1921," to "June 30, 1922."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 8, to increase the total of the appropriations for the Quartermaster Corps, subsistence of the Army, from "$27,500,000" to "$30,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 24, to increase the appropriation for regular supplies of Quartermaster Corps from "$26,108,430" to "$28,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, beginning in line 24, to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That the amounts to be expended from this appropriation for the objects hereinbefore set forth shall not exceed the following respective sums: Civilian employees, $1,750,000; printing, including certificates for discharged soldiers, $200,000; power, heat, and electric current, $1,750,000, of which not to exceed $42,300 may be used for improvement of electric-power supply system at Governors Island, N. Y.; care and protection of regular supplies, $175,000; laundries, maintenance and repair of buildings, including repair of machinery, $100,000; post bakeries, maintenance and repair of buildings, $20,000; ice plants, maintenance and repair of buildings, including operation thereof, $50,000; maintenance and repair of heating apparatus (other than stoves), $300,000; maintenance and repair of electric wiring and fixtures, $200,000; maintenance and repair of reservation fences, $10,000; furniture, textbooks, and equipment for post schools and libraries and schools for noncommissioned officers and instruments, furniture, stationery, and other authorized articles for officers' schools, $20,000; typewriters, exchange and repair, $10,000; mess furniture, tableware, commissary chests, issue outfits, $100,000; appliances for cooking and serving food, purchase and maintenance, $10,000; ranges and cooking stoves and parts thereof, $50,000; field ranges, purchase and maintenance, $2,000; bake ovens and apparatus, purchase and maintenance, $15,000; rolling kitchens, purchase and maintenance, $25,000; coffee roasters, purchase and maintenance, $2,000; heating stoves and parts thereof, $25,000; appliances for handling and preparation of fuel, $10,000; picket rope, blacksmith's tools, farrier's tools, and materials and shoeing of horses and mules, $75,000; office furniture and filing equipment, $50,000; operation of laundries, $4,000,000; incandescent lamps, parts and supplies, $50,000; candles, matches, and soap issue, $150,000; fuel, $6,500,000; gasoline and lubricants for operation of tanks and tractors, $200,000; forage, including salt and vinegar and bedding for animals and straw for soldiers' bedding, $8,500,000; implements, seeds, labor, and other expenses for raising forage at remount depots and on military reservations in Hawaii and Philippine Islands, $50,000; oil lamps and lanterns, including illuminating supplies thereof, $60,000; engine supplies for modern batteries, lighting plants, and ice plants, $9,000; ice, $405,000; stationery, $600,000; toilet paper, towels, and paper drinking cups for issue to offices, $20,000; commercial newspapers, relief maps, market reports, $430; newspapers and periodicals, $5,000; tools, carpenters' and saddlers', $50,000; cleaning and preserving materials, $250,000; installation of heating apparatus (other than stoves), $25,000; installation of electrical wiring and fixtures, $10,000; removal of garbage, $75,000; and expenses incident to training camps, $200,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to sell as soon as possible after the approval of this act, upon such terms and under such conditions as he may deem most advantageous to the best interests of the Government, such horses and mules now being held at remount stations and posts as are not in actual use, and in any event not less than 20,000 of such animals shall be sold.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Provided, That from this appropriation, not to exceed $1,750,000 shall be expended for the pay of civilian employees.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 30, line 10, the words "Quartermaster General" should be stricken out and the words "Secretary of War" inserted, and I move that the bill be amended in that particular.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 30, line 10, strike out "Quartermaster General" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of War," so as to read:

Provided further, That hereafter when, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, it is in the interest of the United States so to do, he is authorized to enter into contracts and to incur obligations for fuel.

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 12, after the words "for fuel," to insert "forage, subsistence, or clothing"; in line 16, after the words "in which," to strike out "the contract was" and insert "deliveries are"; and in line 17, after the word "made," to strike out "or from funds appropriated or which may be appropriated for such supplies for the ensuing fiscal year," so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That hereafter when, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, it is in the interest of the United States so to do, he is authorized to enter into contracts and to incur obligations for fuel, forage, subsistence, or clothing in sufficient quantities to meet the requirements for one year without regard to the current fiscal year, and payments for supplies delivered under such contracts may be made from funds appropriated for the fiscal year in which deliveries are made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may we recur to the item on page 16, in line 21, "for pay of enlisted men of the line and staff, $83,000,000"? Would the Senator be willing to insert a proviso that the Army shall be reduced by the Secretary of War so that the sum herein shall defray the entire cost of pay of enlisted men of the line and staff during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1921?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think I have no objection to that.

Mr. BORAH. If we can recur to that and that proviso be accepted——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment, if the Senator please. I have not the slightest objection to that amendment going in, but I think it should not go in at that place. That would imply that no more than $83,000,000 should be expended for pay of enlisted men of the line and staff if the proviso goes in there, but there are other items of pay, such as longevity pay and foreign-service pay. If the Senator will propose to insert his proviso at the end of the whole chapter on pay of the Army, he will then include those expenses which must be made. I am afraid that if we put it right after the numerals $83,000,000, on page 16, it would compel the Secretary of War to cut the Army down to what $83,000,000 would pay, including the longevity pay and the foreign-service pay.

Mr. MCKELLAR. There is another trouble with the Senator's amendment. It says during the year 1921, and it should be during the fiscal year 1922.

Mr. BORAH. No; it provides that it shall apply during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1921. I do not believe that, inserted after the period after the $83,000,000, it would have that effect, but I am perfectly willing to adopt the Senator's judgment if he will suggest where it should go in, in order to accomplish what I desire.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it should be inserted on page 23 after line 3. It will there have the effect the Senator desires, I am sure. That is at the end of the pay chapter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that the wording be changed to fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

Mr. BORAH. Very well; I will adopt that suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment on page 16, line 21, will be agreed to, and the vote agreeing to the amendment ending at line 3, on page 23, will be reconsidered. The Senator from Idaho now offers the following amendment to the committee amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 23, at the end of line 3, add the following proviso:

Provided, That the Army shall be reduced by the Secretary of War so that the sum herein shall pay the entire cost of the pay of enlisted men of the line and staff during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 31, line 3, in the items for incidental expenses, to strike out "and the hire of interpreters, spies, or guides for the Army."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 19, to increase the appropriation for incidental expenses from "$6,946,087" to "$7,500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, beginning in line 19, to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That the amounts to be expended from this appropriation for the objects hereinbefore set forth shall not exceed the following respective sums: Donations to discharged military prisoners, $20,000; hire of labor, $3,000,000; hire of interpreters, spies, and guides, $10,000; pay of clerks and other employees, $3,500,000; pay of clerks, foremen, and organist at disciplinary barracks, $29,165; recruiting expenses, excluding lodgings, $100,000; rewards for apprehension and delivery of deserters and escaped military prisoners, $25,000; telegrams, cablegrams, and postage, $75,000; clerks for service schools, $36,922; experimental and development work, $25,000; and miscellaneous expenses, $125,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Provided, That from this appropriation not exceeding $3,500,000 shall be expended for the hire of labor and not exceeding $3,500,000 shall be expended for the pay of civilian employees.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to perfect that amendment, and I ask the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. I move to add after the word "employees," in line 9, the words "other than laborers."

Mr. LENROOT. That is satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 32, at the end of line 9, add the words "other than laborers."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 2 on page 36.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I regret to say there is another error here. The proviso starting on line 22, page 35, and extending to and including part of line 2, on page 36, should be stricken out. The Committee on Military Affairs voted to strike out the itemization in that case just as we did in the other cases. Those are wholly in accordance with that action of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be stated.

The READING CLERK. The committee propose to strike out the proviso, beginning on page 35, line 22, reading as follows:

Provided, That the amounts to be expended from this appropriation for the objects hereinbefore set forth shall not exceed the following respective sums: Animal-drawn transportation, $1,800,000; transportation by water, $12,500,000; rail transportation, $12,000,000; and motor transportation, $7,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 5, before the word "appropriated," to strike out "herein," and, after the word "appropriated," to insert "by this act," so as to read:

Provided further, That no money appropriated by this act shall be expended for the hire, operation, maintenance, or repair of any motor-propelled vehicle which shall be employed wholly or in part for personal, social, or similar use, except such use as is prescribed by order for the transportation of Army personnel in connection with the recreational activities of the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, beginning in line 11, to strike out the additional proviso in the following words:

And provided further, That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to sell as soon as possible after the approval of this act, upon such terms and under such conditions as he may deem most advantageous to the best interests of the Government, 10,000 of the motor trucks and 1,000 of the automobiles owned by the War Department.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And provided further, That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to sell or dispose of, by transfer to the Department of Agriculture under existing laws, so many motor trucks and passenger-carrying automobiles as will, in addition to such trucks and automobiles as have been sold or transferred since January 1, 1921, aggregate during the first six months of the calendar year, 10,000 motor trucks and 2,000 passenger-carrying automobiles.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I introduced an amendment covering this question, providing for the delivery to the States of a certain number of automobiles and trucks that are not necessary for the Secretary of War. I notice that the committee have incorporated practically the provisions of my amendment except that I think the amendment is somewhat incomplete; that is to say, the proposed committee amendment reads:

That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to sell or dispose of by transfer to the Department of Agriculture under existing laws.

Some of us know what the existing laws are, but there may be a dispute about that as there has been a dispute heretofore. I ask the Senator from New York to allow these words to be inserted after the word "laws" on page 36, in line 20: "For its own use and the use of the several States in road work and maintenance of roads."

Mr. WADSWORTH. It might be better if inserted after the word "Agriculture," but it is immaterial I think.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is practically stating what the existing law is in that respect.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the committee would have no objection to the amendment to the amendment. It is exactly what the committee means to have done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before that is disposed of and while we are speaking of surplus military supplies, may I inquire whether the committee developed the quantity of military supplies now on hand which have not been disposed of since the war.

The Senator will recall that a large number of officers and a great many civilians and a very large appropriation were provided to enable the War Department to sell its surplus war supplies. Several weeks ago I offered a resolution calling upon the department to advise us what supplies had been disposed of and what they have on hand, but up to this good hour there has been no response, as I am advised.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That matter came up on page 2 of the bill in connection with the appropriation for employees of the sales division of the War Department. The committee was informed that the goods which have been sold as surplus by the War Department cost the Government originally $1,249,000,000, and that the same goods when sold actually brought upon the market $703,000,000, the return therefore being about seven-twelfths of the original outlay. Personally, I think that is a pretty good record considering that a good many of the supplies are not wanted by civilians at all or wanted very little by them. I can give the Senator the figures on trucks if he desires, but the committee has no inventory and has never been furnished with an inventory of all of the supplies left over from the war. I imagine we could not get such an inventory into the committee room.

Mr. KING. I was advised that at the close of the war we had supplies on hand which were unnecessary—that is, for the Army—to the value of four or five billion dollars.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is what they cost.

Mr. KING. I was wondering what disposition has been made of them. We have been trying for two years to force the War Department to sell them and get rid of them, and we have furnished from time to time appropriations in order that they might employ salesmen and the necessary machinery for the purpose of selling those goods. I am informed that there are millions and hundreds of millions of dollars worth still on hand.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There are. They are very difficult to sell. It is difficult to dispose of those that were left on hand. Very few people in civil life care to purchase artillery harness, and very few people care to purchase equipment that goes on an airplane, the photographic outfits, and radio and wireless outfits that are out of date or shopworn. It is mighty hard to sell those things.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator; and the longer we delay in selling, the more difficult it will be to find purchasers. The criticism I have is that the War Department has not sold them sooner, and I was wondering whether or not the committee had before it officers who gave any information in regard to the quantity on hand and the success which was attending efforts to sell those articles.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the hearings on the bill we did not receive testimony as to the total amount left on hand. We did hear testimony as to what had been sold and how much it had brought, and we did have testimony on the matter of the trucks and the automobiles.

Mr. KING. Was there testimony tending to show the amount that was required for civilian help in order to sell the goods on hand?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KING. Was not that a considerable amount?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and we did not come anywhere near allowing it.

Mr. KING. Was there anything indicating that the sale would soon be made, so we could close up that account?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They assure us they are doing their very best to sell the stuff.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, what has been done with my amendment to the amendment of the committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumed Senators were discussing it, although they were not. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from New York. It is not the intention of the committee, is it, that the Secretary of War shall sell any of this machinery to the Agricultural Department?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no; because under existing law he transfers it without sale.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is why we use the term "existing law."

Mr. NORRIS. Now, I should like to ask the Senator a further question. Under this amendment when the Secretary of War is given authority to sell, or to turn over to the Agricultural Department this material, it would be discretionary with him, would it not, to sell all of it? Is it not the desire of the committee, if he has any surplus that is suitable for highway construction by the States, that it should be turned over to the Agricultural Department for that purpose rather than be sold?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; that is the desire of the committee. The House originally passed the bill carrying this language:

That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to sell as soon as possible—

Not "to transfer to the Department of Agriculture as soon as possible."

Mr. NORRIS. Would the Senator, having that in view, object to an amendment which would strike out the word "sell"?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; for this reason: I am perfectly willing to make the intention of Congress clearer, if the language of the committee does not make it clear, but some of this material the States will not take, and in that event we want it sold.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I agree with the Senator from New York as to that, but I should like to make the point certain. I think the Senator from New York agrees with me. What I am trying to accomplish, at least, is to make sure what the intent of Congress is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have great confidence, may I say to the Senator, in the new administration construing this in the way we feel it should be construed.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, would the Senator from New York consent to an amendment which seems to me, at least, to make it clear that Congress does not intend that the Secretary of War shall sell this material to the Agricultural Department, but that he shall dispose of it to them without selling it? That would be a protection to the Secretary as well as make clear our meaning. I propose to insert a comma after the word "sell."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I offer that as an amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, on page 36, in line 18, there should be a comma after the word "sell," and in the same line the word "to" should be inserted before the word "dispose."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I realize that it is necessary to give to the Secretary of War authority to sell, because while, as the Senator from New York has well said, there is some of this material that is not suitable for the uses of the Agricultural Department in road building, I am rather inclined to think that with the comma and the word "to" inserted at the point indicated by the Senator from New York the Secretary of War will realize what the intention of Congress is and will turn over what he can of the material to the Agricultural Department.

Mr. President, I wish briefly to state that I prepared and had printed an amendment which I intended to submit at this point as a substitute for the committee amendment. I have not been able to be here, but with the purpose of offering that amendment, I arranged so that I could be notified when the Army bill came up. I find that in the fortifications bill, which passed earlier in the day before I was able to be present, that language covering a part of what I expected to accomplish by my amendment has already been inserted in that bill. I realize from what I have heard of the vote and of the discussion which took place, and in view of the feeling that the matter was settled and determined, that it would probably be useless to offer here that part of my amendment that has not already been put into the fortifications bill. The amendment that I intended to offer provided not only for the transfer of trucks but of spare parts and other machinery. That, in my judgment, is quite important; but since the Senate has adopted the main portion of it and the matter is regarded as settled, I think it would be useless for me now to offer my amendment.

However, Mr. President, I wish to say a few words in regard to the machinery and materials which are held by the War Department. As we all know, several years ago the question of building roads became a very live question everywhere, in all of the States and in the Federal Congress.

We passed an act in Congress to cooperate with the States in the building of roads. The amount of road building that has been going on since and that is now going on is something that, when it is considered in the aggregate, almost startles the human imagination. To construct roads properly requires a great amount of machinery. It happened that upon the signing of the armistice the United States Government found itself in possession of a very large amount of machinery suitable for road building. A great deal of it had been manufactured for that purpose and was used in France for that purpose. There was much of it that had been used for other military purposes which was perfectly suitable to be used in connection with the building of roads. I presume that it is safe to say that when the armistice was signed the Government owned more machinery of that kind than was ever before gotten together in the history of the world. Much of it was in France and had been in actual use there; many million dollars' worth of it was scattered around in various camps in the United States, ready for shipment. Other large quantities of it were still in the warehouses and the factories. When the armistice was signed it became at once apparent that all this machinery could not be used for military purposes. An agreement was therefore entered into between the War Department and the Department of Agriculture, pursuant to some act of Congress, by which a very large quantity of this machinery should be transferred to the Agricultural Department and by them be turned over to the States for use in the construction of roads.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, at that time it would have been an impossibility—and is yet, I think, to some extent—for the State authorities to have purchased anywhere near as much of the material and machinery as was absolutely necessary to carry on the road-building work, for practically all of the manufacturing corporations that had been producing such machinery had been taken over by the Government and all their output had been used for governmental purposes. There seemed to be at that time perfect harmony between the War Department and the Agricultural Department; but, as I read the history of the matter as it progressed, it was not long until there came about a misunderstanding. I believe it is fair to state that the War Department, indirectly and directly, tried in nearly every possible way to prevent the transfer of any of this machinery to the Argricultural Department for the purposes named, but tried in every way possible to retain practically all of it. I think it is conceded by those who have testified at the various hearings that all of this machinery will be obsolete in five years and some of it in two years; so that unless we knew we were going to use it for war purposes in the immediate future, it would be a total loss if it were retained.

Mr. President, I have a copy of some brief remarks made by Col. McCord, who was in the Army and served in France, but who when this agreement was made between the two departments was detailed to the Department of Agriculture in connection with the good roads service, and is still there, actively engaged in carrying on that work. The address gives a brief history of this contest, and shows the difficulties which were put in the way of the representatives of the Agricultural Department. Col. McCord shows in one instance where, after he had been sent to France to look after some of the material there he found some of it in the hands of the French—not sold to them, but in their possession—and had considerable difficulty in getting control of it. It was finally shipped back to America by the War Department, it is true, because that was the only department, as I understand, which under the circumstances could have handled the shipment, but it was for the Agricultural Department. When, however, it arrived here, although it was marked as being for the Agricultural Department, and although much of it was discovered by Col. McCord, as the representative of the Agricultural Department, that probably never would have been found if it had not been for the activities of the Agricultural Department, and although there was an agreement in writing that it should be turned over to the Agricultural Department—notwithstanding all those facts the War Department refused to deliver it, and took off the marks and the tags when it reached this side. Some of it has since been delivered and some of it probably has not been. I speak of this as an instance of the difficulty which arose.

Col. McCord gives, I remember, another instance where the State highway department of the State of Pennsylvania, which had secured a great deal of road equipment and was actively engaged in the construction of good roads in that State, wanted to get some material to build houses and shelter rooms for their material. They found that there was some suitable material for that purpose in the War Department for which the department had no use. So they undertook to get it, but the War Department declined to turn it over to them. As a matter of fact, however, the War Department afterwards sold it to a dealer in the business, and the State highway department bought the same material at private sale from the dealer who had bought it from the War Department, thus making the real owners of the property, to begin with, pay a profit to a dealer before they could get it. Because the address of Col. McCord so clearly outlines the history of the difficulties, I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The address referred to is as follows:

DISTRIBUTION BY THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO STATE HIGHWAY DEPARTMENTS OF ROAD-BUILDING EQUIPMENT AND MACHINERY FROM SURPLUS WAR STOCKS.

[By Col. James B. McCord, United States Bureau of Public Roads. Address before Engineers' Club, Philadelphia, Jan. 25, 1921.]

It has been suggested to me that it might be interesting to the members of this club to know more about a certain phase in the liquidation of the enormous quantity of material and supplies accumulated by the Government during the war for war purposes, but no longer required for the needs of our peace-time Army.

Some idea of the amounts involved in this liquidation may be had from the War Department estimates made several months after the armistice that there would be available for distribution miscellaneous surplus property located in the United States costing approximately $2,000,000,000. On June 30, 1920, sales and transfers had been made aggregating $1,690,000,000. According to the United States liquidation commission reports, the sale of surplus property in Europe amounted to an additional sum of $823,000,000. Four hundred million dollars worth have been disposed of since June 30, 1920, and there is still available for sale or transfer property valued at approximately $200,000,000.

There has been a great deal of publicity given to the distribution of surplus foodstuffs and clothing, but very little has appeared in the press concerning the disposition of surplus contractors' machinery and supplies, which made up a fairly large percentage of Government purchases during the war. It should therefore be of interest to all advocates of good roads to learn that the Congress did not neglect to provide that surplus war materials and machinery suitable for road building should be distributed throughout the United States for use exclusively on the improvement of highways.

A very brief glance over the history of the part played by the Government in the construction of public roads will make it apparent that although Federal aid is not a recent development in Government policy, yet never before in the history of the country have such large amounts of Government funds and supplies been made available for this purpose.

The first record of Federal aid in highway construction is to be found in the act passed by Congress in 1802 enabling the people of Ohio to form a State government and seek admission to the Union. This act contained the following provision:

"That one-twentieth of the net proceeds in the lands lying within said State sold by Congress shall be applied to the laying out and making public roads leading from the navigable waters emptying into the Atlantic, to the Ohio, to the said State, and through the same, such roads to be laid out under authority of Congress with the consent of the several States through which the road shall pass."

In 1806 President Thomas Jefferson approved an act of Congress providing for the building of a highway by the Federal Government from Cumberland, Md., through the States of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Indiana westward to the Wabash and Mississippi Rivers. For 32 years the work on this highway was carried on under Federal control until in 1838 the appropriations ceased and the work was discontinued after the expenditure of approximately $7,000,000. In other parts of the country revenues from the sale of public lands were set aside by Congress for aid in highway construction. Between 1811 and 1845 Louisiana, Indiana, Mississippi, Missouri, and Iowa were aided in this way to the extent of about $5,000,000. Between 1854 and 1861 Congress appropriated in all only about $1,600,000, which was expended chiefly on roads within the Territories. Thus prior to 1861 the Federal Government had assisted in road building to the extent of approximately only $14,000,000, or an average since 1802 of only $250,000 per annum. During the next 55 years, between 1861 and 1916, the Federal Government took no part whatever in the improvement of highways except in an educational sense. This was due in a large measure to a prevailing idea that the railroads had lessened the need for improved highways, and it was not until the appearance of first the bicycle, and then shortly afterwards the automobile, that there began the present insistent demand for better roads. In 1906, 48,000 automobiles were registered in the United States. By 1914 the number had risen to 1,700,000. At the present time the registrations total nearly 8,000,000, exclusive of motor cycles.

So general was this cry for good roads that the State Governments found themselves unable to satisfy it without aid from the Federal Government, and on July 11, 1916, and February 28, 1919, the President approved two acts whereby Congress appropriated sums aggregating $275,000,000 to be distributed among the States for road-building purposes between the years 1917 and 1921. A bill is now before Congress providing for additional appropriations of $500,000,000 to be expended at the rate of $100,000,000 per annum for five years beginning July 1, 1921.

The enormous appropriations for highway work already made by States and municipalities—appropriations that total more than $1,000,000,000 covering bond issues and direct levies for highway construction and road maintenance—presage for the next five years an unprecedented volume of road building in America. The $271,000,000 voted in bond issues or appropriated by eight States recently added to the bond issues passed by eight other States since 1918, makes $543,800,000 already available for road work in 16 States. In addition, funds obtained from direct levies and other sources of State revenue and county issues are estimated to amount to $296,200,000.

Mr. Thomas H. MacDonald, Chief of the United States Bureau of Public Roads, writes in the Government publication, Public Roads, for June, 1920, that the actual road operations under the Federal aid acts have thus far involved the approval by the Bureau of Public Roads of projects the aggregate length of which would span the distance between New York and San Francisco nine times and the estimated cost of which is greater than that of the Panama Canal.

Following our entry into the World War from April, 1917, until several months after the armistice, road construction was necessarily curtailed in order that all our energies, in machinery as well as in man power, might be devoted to the winning of the war. During this period the greater part of the output of factories manufacturing road-building machinery and equipment had been absorbed by the War Department and at the end of the war it was found that although a great deal of money was available it was practically impossible to secure sufficient road-building machinery and supplies in the market to allow the work to proceed as rapidly as desired.

It so happened, at this time, that the War Department was also faced with the very serious problem of taking care of several million troops who must soon be returned to civil life. The Secretary of War assigned Col. Arthur Woods—with the title of "Assistant to the Secretary of War"—to undertake the campaign of stimulating public work throughout the country with a view to creating opportunities for the returning soldiers.

Col. Woods is particularly well known as the former police commissioner of New York City. I was detailed to assist Col. Woods in May, 1919, and was placed in charge of stimulating highway work throughout the country in so far as it was possible to do so by extending the good offices of the War Department to State, county, and municipal officials. Investigation quickly developed the fact that the main trouble responsible for the general stagnation of highway work was the lack of engineering equipment and machinery which had been absorbed by the Army for war purposes. This difficulty had, however, been foreseen by Congress, as there had been included in the Federal aid act approved February 28, 1919, the following provision:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture all available war materials, equipment, and supplies not needed for the purposes of the War Department, but suitable for use in the improvement of highways, and that the same be distributed among the highway departments of the several States, to be used on roads constructed in whole or in part by Federal aid."

Representing the War Department I requested the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads to arrange a conference with the executive committee of the American Association of State Highway Officials, then in session in Washington. At this conference the aid of the War Department was offered to the Bureau of Public Roads and to the State officials. It was suggested that perhaps the most immediate results might be obtained if our efforts were devoted to effecting transfers of surplus road-building equipment from the War Department as rapidly as possible. The State highway officials welcomed this suggestion, admitting that even such items as picks and shovels were not available in the market for anything like immediate delivery to say nothing of motor vehicles, road rollers, steam shovels, concrete mixers, transits, and levels, etc. The War Department controlled almost the entire stock in the country. Special forces were then organized in both the War Department and the Bureau of Public Roads to handle the transfers, and in the latter part of May, 1919, I obtained the first large clearances from the War Department of about 15,000 motor trucks and automobiles, as well as a quantity of road-building machinery.

During the war I was fortunate enough to have served in France and became familiar with most of the American depots in that country, and knowing that a considerable quantity of road-building equipment in good condition was still stored at those depots I suggested to the Bureau of Public Roads that the Secretary of Agriculture should request the War Department to return this equipment from Europe. The Secretary of Agriculture addressed the Secretary of War in the following letter:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
May 28, 1919.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: For use in the enlarged highway-construction program the various States require certain kinds of equipment in addition to that which has been declared surplus in this country and requisition by this department. I understand the War Department has large stores of equipment and supplies at various points in France that would be very useful in road-building operations. Aside from the immediate need for the heavier types of equipment, I am informed by the executives of some of the State highway departments that there is a serious lack of transits, levels, and similar instruments which are needed at once for the preliminary engineering work necessary in getting the road program under way and the demand for which can not be promptly supplied in this country.

In order to place the matter definitely before you I am attaching a list of the supplies and equipment required by this department and the State highway departments in addition to that already declared surplus in this country and requisitioned by this department.

The highway-construction program which the Federal Government and the States propose to begin immediately is the largest public undertaking contemplated in the near future. It offers an immediate field for the employment of labor and the use of materials that will help to stabilize business along a number of lines. The work has been expanded so suddenly that it has not been possible to make adequate provision for furnishing the necessary equipment, and previously all the available supply was absorbed by the demands of the War Department. Unless the requisite equipment is now made available the road-building program will be delayed.

I am sending you this list as a result of a conference which I have just held with the executive committee of the American Association of State Highway Officials, at which it was represented that the various States are very anxious to secure additional equipment of the kinds indicated.

I am thoroughly in sympathy with the efforts that are being made by the War Department to aid returning soldiers in securing employment, and I am convinced that if the equipment and supplies listed are made available it will facilitate highway construction and thereby stimulate the employment of labor. I urgently recommend, therefore, that steps be taken to return from France the equipment and supplies indicated, to be distributed to the State highway departments for road-building purposes.

Very truly, yours,

D. F. HOUSTON,
Secretary.

LIST OF EQUIPMENT TO BE REQUESTED TO BE RETURNED FROM FRANCE.

525 5-ton caterpillar tractors.
1,055 10-ton caterpillar tractors.
742 engineers' transits.
797 engineers' levels.
800 Abney hand levels.
2,500 steel tapes.
1,200 level rods.
500 planimeters.
300 drafting tables.
400 road rollers, steam and gas driven.
700 concrete mixers.
600 road graders.
400 elevating graders.
200 sprinkler wagons.
200 road oilers, motor driven.
125 derricks, 30-foot to 60-foot.
100 pile drivers, complete outfits.
200 air drills, complete sets.
250 steam pumps, 3-inch and 4-inch.
150 centrifugal pumps, with power to 4 inches.
75 diaphragm pumps, gasoline driven.
500 rock crushers, complete outfits.
200 buckets, clam shell, orange peel, and bottom dump.
125 road scarifiers.
50 excavators, caterpillars and drag line.
700 plows, road and railroad.
300 plows, rooter.
25 automotive cranes.
3,600 trailers for tractors.
500 miles industrial railway track.
200 industrial railway locomotives.
3,500 industrial railway dump cars.

200 steam shovels, 1 yard and less capacity.
6,500 dump wagons.
250 conveyors, gravity and power.
35 donkey engines, 200 hoisting engines, and 75 gasoline engines, from 5 to 30 horsepower.
375 steam drills, complete outfits.
250 portable air compressors.
100 boilers, 15 to 30 horsepower.
275 electric motors, 2 to 50 horsepower.
20 electric blue-print machines.

A few days later the War Department replied as follows:

JUNE 9, 1919.

The SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have the honor to acknowledge, on behalf of the Secretary of War, receipt of your letter of May 28, 1919, addressed to him with reference to the delivery to the Department of Agriculture of certain equipment and supplies which you propose to use in your enlarged highway-construction program.

I have discussed the matter with the Secretary, and he has instructed me to say to you that the War Department will deliver to the Department of Agriculture, out of surplus in the United States or in France, the equipment and supplies which you list as an attachment to your letter.

Delivery of such equipment and materials now in France will be made to the Department of Agriculture in France. In other words the Department of Agriculture must obligate itself to pay to the War Department at the United States Shipping Board rates, the cost of transporting the equipment and supplies from France to the United States.

Very truly, yours,

MONTE APPEL.
Acting Special Representative of the Secretary of War.

On June 23 the following cable was sent to France by the War Department to the commanding general and to Judge Parker, chairman of the Liquidation Commission in France:

Number 1040. June 23. Confidential.

WASHINGTON, June 23, 1919.

From: The Adjutant General.
To: Connor, SOS, Amexforce, France.
For Parker:

(PS&T) Under existing legislation which authorizes the War Department to deliver to the Agriculture Department any surplus equipment or materials on hand, the Secretary of War directs that if no longer needed there, the following equipment now in France be returned to the United States for delivery to the Department of Agriculture, if not needed by the War Department here.

(Here follows the above list requested by the Secretary of Agriculture.)

Please give necessary directions for transportation of this equipment to French ports. The Chief of Transportation here will arrange for ocean transportation to America. Appel. 2116.

HARRIS.

At this time information reached the Bureau of Public Roads that the War Department was planning to sell all American surplus supplies in Europe to the French Government, and it was therefore arranged that I be discharged from the military service and proceed to Europe to represent the Bureau of Public Roads and to save as much road equipment as possible from the proposed sale. Just about this time there began to appear certain signs of a change of policy within the War Department with respect to the transfer of road-building equipment, and although the intent of Congress had been clearly indicated in the Federal aid act, and the War Department had voluntarily entered into an arrangement with the Secretary of Agriculture which was virtually a written contract to deliver certain articles, yet the endeavors of the Department of Agriculture to secure the promised equipment gradually developed into a series of disagreements with the War Department, resulting from our efforts to prevent the War Department from selling the equipment to foreign Governments or private dealers in America.

This new policy of the War Department may have been adopted from the very best of reasons, but unfortunately for the harmony which had maintained between the two departments, the Bureau of Public Roads could not consistently subscribe to any policy which favored selling road equipment or which looked toward any disposition other than to transfer it to the State highway departments for road work, as authorized in an act of Congress. The Bureau of Public Roads could entertain but one idea—that here was an opportunity to devote an extraordinary accumulation of road equipment exclusively to road work, an opportunity which might never occur again.

This attitude of the Bureau of Public Roads may be better understood when it is considered that there are 2,500,000 miles of rural public roads in this country, and that 2,200,000 miles of them are still dirt roads. Of 300,000 miles covered with some kind of surfacing material, only about 30,000 miles are fit for heavy automobile traffic. With that 2,470,000 miles of dirt and poorly surfaced roads in mind—a distance, by the way, which is one hundred times the circumference of the earth and ten times the distance from the earth to the moon—it is hardly surprising that the Bureau of Public Roads undertook to fight every attempt of the War Department to sell road equipment.

It is, therefore, regrettable but unavoidable that from this point onward, even this short sketch—which touches only the high places—can not quite conceal a certain lack of harmonious cooperation between the two departments and that the equipment which has been delivered to State highway commissions in accordance with the wishes of Congress has been so delivered not as a result of the desires and policy of the War Department but in spite of them and mainly because of the active and continuous campaign carried on by the Bureau of Public Roads against, sometimes, very great odds.

(The appearance in France of a representative of the Department of Agriculture seemed to be a matter of considerable surprise to the commanding general as well as to the United States Liquidation Commission, who were charged with the sale of American surplus war stocks in Europe. It seems that although the Secretary of War had approved my mission and had, in fact, furnished me with letters of introduction to the American authorities in France, The Adjutant General of the Army had, at the same time, been instructed to cable to France asking what recommendations the commanding general had to make concerning the necessity for having the Department of Agriculture represented. He cabled in reply that there were sufficient officers in France to attend to the matter and disapproved sending anyone. It so happened, however, that his disapproving cable was dated July 5 and my ship sailed on that same day.)

Immediately on my arrival in Paris I called on Judge Parker, chairman of the United States Liquidation Commission, and I learned that he had informed the War Department that it was impracticable to return the equipment desired with the exception of a very few items. The reasons he gave were (1) the traffic congestion on the French railroads, (2) the lack of personnel due to the rapid evacuation of troops, and (3) opportunities to sell the equipment in Europe for a good price. There is no question but that the Liquidation Commission were in an embarrassing position, as the War Department in Washington had directed three things to be done which were diametrically opposed—first, to sell all surplus supplies in Europe, including the road-building machinery and equipment; second, to return a great quantity of road-building machinery and equipment to America; third, to immediately return to America the personnel without whom it would be impossible to load and ship any equipment to the United States.

I discovered that the only orders in effect in France directing the return of road supplies were the ones concerning the very few items mentioned in Judge Parker's cable, and it was claimed that these included all the available road-building machinery in France. I questioned the accuracy of that statement, and after visits to Army headquarters, the depots, and ports, I was able to collect sufficient information to convince the liquidation commission that their statement was based upon inaccurate inventories and submitted to them a corrected inventory, insisting that the supplies on the corrected list be ordered shipped. The following letters were sent to Judge Parker:

PARIS, July 31, 1919.

Judge E. B. PARKER,
Chairman United States Liquidation Commission, Paris.

DEAR SIR: With reference to the road-building machinery and equipment directed to be returned to America by cable dated June 20 and your reply thereto dated June 28.

There is attached hereto a list furnished to me yesterday by the engineer in charge of Engineer depots, of equipment covered by cable on June 20 and which is now in the depots indicated.

It is understood that this list is in addition to the amounts given in your cable of June 28 and that it is the result of an inventory taken later than that upon which your cable of June 28 was based.

I understand that the Engineers have only orders to ship the quantities of material contained in your cable of June 28, which was based upon an incomplete inventory, and I earnestly request that they be directed to ship these additional amounts to the ports for shipment to the Department of Agriculture.

In addition to my list it is understood that considerable of the equipment described in cable to you of June 20 is in the hands of the French temporarily, outside of the depots, the Engineers holding receipts for it. It is requested that I be informed of the location of such of this material as it is impossible to have shipped to the ports, in order that examination may be made of its condition with a view to deciding whether it should be returned to America for road construction.

It should be noted that the attached list is only of Engineer material in Engineer depots. The Ordnance Department is now preparing an additional list of equipment in their depots as per my letter to you of July 24.

It is understood that there is a serious shortage of personnel at the depots to load the equipment on cars, and it is feared that if sufficient additional personnel is not furnished a serious delay in the shipment of the equipment will result.

Respectfully,

J. B. MCCORD,
Representing the Board of Agriculture.

OFFICE OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURAL,
Paris, August 8, 1919.

Judge E. B. PARKER,
United States Liquidation Commission, Paris.

DEAR SIR: Pursuant to my letter to you of July 31, I am informed on my return to Paris from a visit to Tours and Montoir that my letter of the 31st has been acted upon by the commission, and that the commission have instructed the Engineer Department to ship to ports only that road equipment, shown on the list accompanying my letter of the 31st, as being at St. Sulpice and Montoir. And I am also informed that it is proposed to almost immediately turn over to the French the entire contents of depots at Gievres, Mehun, Montierchaume, and Is-sur-Tille.

There is attached hereto a statement of the status of road equipment in so far as I am able to obtain it from inventories at Tours, Gievres, Montoir, and Paris.

It will be seen that there is considerable road equipment in Gievres, Mehun, Montierchaume, and Is-sur-Tille which under existing orders will not be returned for the Department of Agriculture. There is in these depots considerable equipment which is urgently needed by the State highway departments for their proposed road construction, and which is covered in the cable of June 20, under which the Secretary of State for war directed its return to America. It is urgently requested that these depots be not turned over to the French until this road equipment is segregated from material to be sold to the French, and loaded on cars and shipped to the ports, and that sufficient personnel be immediately sent to these depots to accomplish this result.

It is again pointed out that there is considerable road equipment under control of the Ordnance Department, for instance at Mehun, which has not been directed returned to America for the Department of Agriculture, and in fact I am informed by the Ordnance Department at Tours that they have never received a copy of the cable of June 20, and have no instructions to ship anything whatsoever to the Department of Agriculture, the only instructions in the premises having been given to the engineers.

Your attention is invited to the seventh paragraph of my letter of July 31, in which I pointed out that considerable road-building equipment is temporarily in the hands of the French, having been turned over to the French by the Army after the completion of road construction. It is believed that a good deal of this material is near depots, and that it would be practicable to have it returned to the depots for loading on cars and shipment to the ports. I requested the location of this material, but it has not been given. I do not know the quantity but believe that an effort should be made to locate it and have such of it as is in good condition returned to America.

It is requested that earnest consideration be given by the commission to this letter, and that every effort possible be made to return all available road-building equipment to the United States before the withdrawal of personnel and the completion of sale of material to the French render such return impossible.

Very respectfully,

J. B. MCCORD,
Representing the Department of Agriculture.

After some hesitation I was informed that the equipment listed in my inventory would be returned to America.

At my request the Liquidation Commission assigned me an office in their building, and as my assistants three Army officers with the grade of major. One of these officers was Maj. Gravell, a member of this club. On August 20 the following letter was sent to the Assistant Secretary of War, then in Paris:

OFFICE OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Paris, August 20, 1919.

The Hon. BENEDICT CROWELL,
Assistant Secretary of War,
45 Avenue Montaigne, Paris.

DEAR SIR: Pursuant to our conversation yesterday morning regarding certain road-building equipment and machinery which the Secretary of War directed to be returned to the United States for the Department of Agriculture, by cable dated June 20, I attach hereto copies of letters which I have written to the Liquidation Commission since my arrival in Paris on July 16.

Your attention is invited to the fact that when a copy of the cable of June 20 was given to the Department of Agriculture it was sent to every State highway department in the United States, in good faith, as representing the material which would ultimately be distributed amongst the State highway departments under the Federal aid act, and I assure you that the return of this material is considered of extreme importance by all of them.

The difficulty seems to be that although the cable directing the return of the equipment was received in June by the Liquidation Commission, they were handicapped in shipping even the material they had on hand in the interior depots, due to the existing orders to return Army personnel to the United States as rapidly as possible. They have not had sufficient men, particularly in the interior depots, to load the material on cars for shipment to ports or even to segregate and mark it as to be returned to America.

As the matter now stands, the interior depots, such as Gievres, Montierchaume, Mehun, and Is-sur-Tille, in which there is considerable road-building equipment covered by the cable of June 20, have been turned over to the French, and, as I understand it, no arrangements have been made to have this equipment taken from these interior depots and shipped to the ports. I am also informed that it is soon proposed to turn over to the French depots at St. Sulpice and Montoir, in which there is a great deal of road-building equipment, which is not even segregated or marked for the Department of Agriculture.

In view of the very apparent importance of the return of this equipment to America, I urgently request that there be assigned at the earliest possible moment sufficient personnel to Gievres, Montierchaume, Mehun, and Is-sur-Tille, as well as Montoir and St. Sulpice, under competent officers, who will be given authority and facility, automobile transportation, etc., and who will be instructed to devote their entire efforts to getting this road-building equipment shipped to ports and loaded on ships consigned to the Department of Agriculture. I also suggest that the port depots at Montoir and St. Sulpice should not be turned over to the French until all this equipment has been shipped.

I can not help but feel worried over this entire situation, and fear, in view of the promises made to the State highway departments, their Senators and Congressmen, based upon the cable of June 20, that failure to return this equipment will result in embarrassment not only to the Department of Agriculture but also to the War Department.

I would greatly appreciate a reply to this letter in order that I may inform the Secretary of Agriculture of the exact status.

Very respectfully,

J. B. MCCORD,
Representing Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Crowell promised to do what he could, but although shipments continued spasmodically for a month or more I was one day informed that it had been found impossible to ship the road equipment from Gievres and Is-sur-Tille, and Montierchaume, the interior depots, and that only the equipment in the port depots Montoir and St. Sulpice would be shipped. A few days later I was advised that all of the above-mentioned depots, including the port depots, had been sold to the French Government and that no more road equipment would be returned to America. These facts were cabled to Washington with the suggestion that the Secretary of Agriculture protest to the Secretary of War, but it was too late to obtain any result through that channel. We were able, however, to go into the depots at the ports notwithstanding possession by the French troops who had been led to regard all supplies in the depots as their property. Somehow we convinced them that a considerable number of articles were the property of the United States and succeeded in having them delivered on board ship. One of the Army officers who aided in this work later joined the Lithuanian Army, and when he said goodbye he informed me that he did not expect to get as much action fighting the Poles as he had experienced in taking road-building equipment from the French troops, who believed it had been sold to their Government.

While in France I learned that the Director of Sales of the War Department had arrived in Paris with instructions to sell in Europe certain surplus property located in the United States. On my inquiring the nature of these supplies it appeared that he had been instructed to sell from America into Europe a number of items which the Secretary of War had directed returned to America from Europe for distribution to the State highway commissions. I cabled the Bureau of Public Roads as follows:

AUGUST 11, 1919.

ROADS AGRICULTURE, WASHINGTON:

C. W. Hare, director of sales, recently arrived in France to dispose in Europe surplus war equipment now in America. Investigated what he had to sell and find on his list the following: Locomotive cranes, narrow-gauge locomotives, gas engines, electric generator sets, hoisting engines, derricks, portable houses, pumps, trailers, 8,700 tons 25-pound rail, 11 asphalt plants now at Norfolk, 20 pile drivers now at Industrial Works, Bay City, Mich. Suggest representative Agriculture examine inventory Sales Office, Washington, dated July 9, and that whatever material is needed by Agriculture Department be removed from list for sale in Europe and Hare so instructed.

J. B. MCCORD,
Representative Department of Agriculture.

I understand the items in question were removed from Mr. Hare's list.

I visited the American forces in Belgium and Germany to examine the surplus equipment at those places, but although our commanding general in Germany was willing to load barges with any surplus equipment I might desire and ship it down the Rhine to Antwerp, an inspection of the property showed that it was not worth shipping on account of its poor condition, and that all the material in good condition was to be retained by the Army of Occupation, who expected to remain in Germany for the next 15 years. The liquidation commission had sold all supplies which had been stored in Italy and in England, and therefore having arranged for the last shipment from France I returned to the United States in November, 1919.

We were able during four months to have loaded on ships and returned to America about $10,000,000 worth of equipment, but although the road building machinery which we returned would certainly have been retained by the French had it not been for our activities, yet when the supplies reached American the War Department refused to release about $8,000,000 worth, leaving only about $2,000,000 worth for the highway commissions. However, there is a bill now before Congress directing its release to State highway departments, and we still hope as to the final outcome. On my return to Washington I was requested by the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads to continue the work of obtaining transfers from surplus in America in cooperation with Col. H. L. Bowlby, Chief of War Materials Division, Bureau of Public Roads. A survey of the situation in Washington disclosed the fact that with the exception of motor vehicles less than 1 per cent of other articles cleared by the Secretary of War had been delivered to the State highway departments.

In fact there seemed to have grown up a strong feeling of antagonism within the War Department toward the transfer of road-building equipment to State highway commissions free of charge, notwithstanding the act of Congress to that effect.

The transfers were handled entirely by the Director of Sales, whose office was composed of trained salesmen. There existed no intermediate section to handle transfers without funds to other Government departments and it was perhaps very natural that the salesmen objected to giving equipment away without the credit of a money return. I secured an office in the War Department Building and discovered that the greater part of the requisitions and shipping instructions on equipment cleared by the War Department had been accumulating, without action of any kind in the office of the Director of Sales, for about four months. Eight hundred and ninety-one sets of these requisitions, covering equipment of all sorts, which the State highway commissions were expecting to receive, were found in the bottom of a desk in the War Department. It was also disclosed that most of the equipment covered by requisitions had been sold by the War Department to private firms or individuals, and it was only after strong protests to the Director of Sales that he reorganized the section of his office charged with handling the transfers.

Whatever the reason may have been, there was no question but that the policy of the War Department had most decidedly changed since the Secretary of War wrote to the Secretary of Agriculture, in June, 1919, undertaking to deliver a long list of equipment from surplus in France or the United States, and the policy of the War Department seemed to have developed into a system of devising ways and means to avoid making deliveries of property to the Department of Agriculture. This attitude was expressed in various ways; for example, the War Department secured a decision from the Judge Advocate General of the Army to the effect that the Federal aid act had been repealed by a later act with respect to the transfers of road-building machinery, and acting on that opinion the Secretary of War canceled the allotment of 15,000 motor vehicles. The Department of Agriculture promptly placed the question before the Attorney General, who reversed the Judge Advocate General. On receipt of the opinion of the Attorney General, the Secretary of War reinstated the suspended allotment of motor vehicles, but informed the Secretary of Agriculture that he declined to make any further allotment of equipment and supplies without further legislation. The War Department also rendered such decisions as that, in their opinion, the following items were not suitable for road construction and, therefore, would not be transferred: Autocranes, locomotive cranes, boilers, forges, frogs and switches, hoisting engines, hoists, industrial cars and railroad ties, pulley blocks, dump cars, and steel cable. All highway engineers know how important are these articles in modern highway construction.

While protests were being filed against such decisions the road equipment was being sold to private concerns. The only result of our protests was a concession by the Secretary of War to the effect that he would approve the transfer of equipment which could not be sold for at least 60 per cent of its market value. In other words, only equipment in poor condition was to be transferred. For some time after this order was issued the War Department continued to sell road-building equipment to the highest bidder, and in some cases those successful bidders sold it to the State highway commissions. The following letter from Col. William D. Uhler, of the Pennsylvania State Highway Commission, inclosing a photograph of corrugated roofing showing War Department markings, is a case in point:

"As you will remember, early last summer we had up with the Bureau of Public Roads the release of corrugated-iron roofing for use in building sheds for housing road-building equipment. As you know, after a long delay and failure to secure any of this material from the War Department, we were finally obliged to enter into a contract for these buildings. It now develops that the corrugated roofing which is supplied by the contractor was bought by him from the War Department, and that this material, which was originally paid for by the public, has been disposed of by the Government to the contractor at a reduced price, and he in turn is selling it back to the public at the market price, thus causing the public to pay two profits."

It was because of these difficulties with the War Department and the necessity of putting the whole proposition on some more satisfactory basis that the Bureau of Public Roads pressed Congress to pass another act—the so-called Kahn bill—which was approved March 15, 1920. This bill had been originally drawn merely authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer, in his discretion, a certain list of road-building equipment to the Department of Agriculture, but it was pointed out in the Military Affairs Committee that the Secretary of War should not be required to exercise his discretion in this connection any longer, and the bill was finally passed directing him to make the transfers. Since the approval of this act the situation has been very much improved, although the War Department have continued to sell road-building equipment, even after it had been obligated to the State highway commissions.

One of the most remarkable cases of sale of equipment contrary to the provisions of the act of March 15, 1920, was in connection with the sale of the Old Hickory powder plant and about which there has recently been considerable publicity. On July 20, 1920, I requested the War Department to transfer to the Department of Agriculture certain articles of road-building equipment which had been declared surplus by the Ordnance Department of the War Department. In a letter dated August 5, 1920, acting under instructions from the Director of Purchase, Storage and Traffic the Director of Sales informed me that the articles listed by me in my memorandum of July 20 would be held subject to shipping instructions from the Bureau of Public Roads. Learning that the War Department was planning to sell the Old Hickory plant, and in order to make sure that the road equipment remaining unshipped would be reserved from any proposed sale, the Bureau of Public Roads formally inquired as to the status, and in a letter from the Director of Sales dated October 27, 1920, were assured that their shipping instructions would be honored. In a letter dated November 10 I was informed by the Director of Sales that the letter of October 27 had been sent in error; that the entire plant with all its contents had been sold; and that only shipping instructions for road equipment would be honored which had been received at Old Hickory prior to July 12, 1920. This decision came as a complete surprise to the Bureau of Public Roads, particularly in view of the fact that it was not until August 5 that the equipment had been cleared for transfer by the Director of Sales. The value of the road equipment involved in this transaction is in the neighborhood of $250,000. The matter is now the subject of investigation before a Senate committee, and it is hoped that at least some of the equipment may be recovered. The War Department explanation of this action was that all the equipment at that plant was an integral part of the plant and that the plant had been sold as a going concern, and any attempt to segregate certain articles, such as, for instance, the centrifugal pumps desired by the Bureau of Public Roads, would embarrass the War Department in their efforts to dispose of the plant at an advantageous figure. In view of this statement we were considerably surprised at an advertisement inserted in the Engineering News-Record shortly after the consummation of the sale by the purchaser of the plant of a public sale to be made of certain equipment from the Old Hickory powder plant. Among the items listed for sale appear the centrifugal pumps and other road equipment cleared for transfer by the Director of Sales on August 5 and October 27.

Aside from the loss of the equipment to the State highway commissions through sale to private firms or individuals and immediately after the approval of the act of March 15, 1920, directing the Secretary of War to transfer the road equipment to the Department of Agriculture for distribution to the State highway commissions, there began to be filed certain extraordinary "requirements" by the Engineer Corps of the Army for road equipment. A remarkable example of this developed in the endeavor of the Bureau of Public Roads to have locomotive cranes transferred under the Federal aid act. The War Department had refused to transfer these cranes until the approval of the act of March 15, which directed the transfer of cranes among other items. In the March 10 issue of the Engineering News-Record appeared an advertisement by the Engineer Corps of 78 cranes for sale. The Engineer Corps had already sold or otherwise disposed of outside of the War Department about 175 locomotive cranes none of which had been made available for the State highway commissions notwithstanding repeated requests and explanations of their need of this equipment. On March 16 the State officials protested against further sales of locomotive cranes, insisting that the cranes must be transferred under the act of March 15 and demanding that the sale advertised in the Engineering News-Record of March 10 be canceled. The Director of Sales had no choice but to order the Engineer Corps to withdraw the cranes from sale and held them for distribution to the State highway commissions. The Engineer Corps immediately filed requisitions for the cranes, claiming that they were required for use by the Army and were not therefore surplus. Fortunately the Bureau of Public Roads was able to have the Engineer Corps overruled, although only about 32 cranes were saved from sale and delivered to the highway commissions.

* * * The following memorandum from the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads to the Secretary of Agriculture was submitted by the latter to the Secretary of War:

"AUGUST 17, 1920.

"MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In the matter of the distribution of surplus war equipment and supplies, we have come to a situation between the War Department and the Department of Agriculture which needs to be adjusted before causing further embarrassment, which must otherwise surely result.

"There is attached a statement of 24 cases which support the following statements:

"First. The War Department has failed to deliver both supplies and equipment after having, in writing, promised to transfer these items to Agriculture for distribution to the States, and after division of the War Department and copies of these shipping instructions to the States. An examination of the attached correspondence will show that the written statements are of the definite character that any business firm would honor, and that we were fully justified in expecting, after receipt of such written statements, to receive the material, and are still justified in expecting this material to be delivered.

"Second. Material, equipment, and supplies which the act of March 15 stipulated are to be turned over to Agriculture, and as late as August 6 are continuing to be sold, even though this same equipment has been allotted in writing to Agriculture for distribution to the States and our pledges made to the States on the basis of such written assurances.

"* * * If the Secretary of War will issue instructions that such supplies and equipment as have been declared to Agriculture in writing and by Agriculture allocated to the States or to the road-building work of the bureau, this will clear up the specific cases hereto attached. I wish to make it very clear that we have asked for no material for which there is not a real demand; that much of the equipment which we have requested can not be purchased because it is not available for immediate delivery; and that in the cases herein recited we are endeavoring to make good written promises which should be as valid as any form of contract which can be drawn.

"I am sure that if the Secretary of War understands the conditions as herein recited that he will issue the necessary instructions to clear the situation."

Very little result was obtained from this true presentation of the case beyond a polite letter of regret from Mr. Baker.

In fact, the situation became so serious at one time as to lead the State highway officials to urge that the whole matter be placed before the President. It was only because of the President's illness that this was not done.

The friction between the two departments and the consequent embarrassment to the Department of Agriculture, which was forced into the position of apologizing for the errors of the War Department, continued until the first of the year, when the civilian salesmen, who had been in control of the sales department handling transfers of road equipment, were replaced by Army officers. The new director of sales, Col. E. S. Hartshorn, assumed an entirely different attitude toward the Department of Agriculture and is now doing everything in his power to smooth over the difficulties which had been allowed to grow up and to continue under the old régime. It is believed that under his management of the sales department the State Highway Commission will henceforth receive their proper share of further surplus equipment.

Some of the larger items which have already been delivered to the State Highway Commission are as follows: Eight thousand tons of steel rails, 25,000,000 pounds of T. N. T., 500,000 feet of iron pipe, 1,000,000 square feet of corrugated-iron roofing, 100,000 shovels, 2,000 tons of barbed wire, 200 hoisting engines, 200 derricks, 1,200 hydraulic jacks, 20 sawmills, 150 locomotives, 1,000 dump cars, 350 tractors, 50 locomotive cranes, 26 rock-crushing plants, 35 road rollers, 40 elevating graders, 3,000 escort wagons, 20 steam shovels, 30,000 sets of harness, 20,000 picks, 500 dump wagons, 5,000 centrifugal pumps, 23,000 motor trucks, Fords, and automobiles, $7,000,000 worth of spare parts for motor trucks, and $200,000 worth of tubes and casings.

It is estimated that the total value of the equipment which the Bureau of Public Roads has saved from sale and has had transferred to the State highway commissions up to this time is approximately $120,000,000.

It is believed that large quantities of additional equipment will soon be declared surplus due to the revised Army requirements for a peacetime Army of 150,000 men and the resulting reduction in appropriations to the War Department.

It is very difficult to estimate just how much impetus the distribution of this equipment has given to the good roads program in the United States, but judging from various letters received from State highway officials expressing their gratitude to the Government it is apparent that the receipt of this equipment has been mainly responsible for the large amount of road work which was started during the past year and that the benefit will continue to be felt for many years to come.

Mr. NORRIS. I had intended, Mr. President, to go more into detail into the particular amendment which I had prepared and had expected to offer, but for the reasons which I have already stated it seems to me it would be useless for me to do so at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 38, line 9, before the word "clothing" to strike out "for" and insert "of commutation of," and after the word "clothing" to strike out "not drawn," so as to read: "for payment of commutation of clothing due to warrant officers of the Mine Planter Service, etc."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, at the end of that clause, lines 10 and 11, the words "on discharge" should also be stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the words "on discharge" on lines 10 and 11.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 7, to increase the appropriation for clothing and camp and garrison equipage from "$12,000,000" to "$13,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 7, to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That no part of the appropriations in this act shall be expended for issue of uniforms to discharged enlisted men under the act of February 28, 1919, except in cases where applications therefor may have been received by the War Department prior to the approval of this act.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Provided, That hereafter the settlement of clothing accounts of enlisted men, including charges for clothing drawn in excess of clothing allowance and payments of amounts due them when they draw less than their allowance, shall be made at such periods and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 17, to insert:

The provisions of the act of February 28, 1919, relating to the issuance of uniforms to discharged enlisted men are hereby repealed: Provided, That such uniforms shall be issued in accordance with the provisions of said act to those enlisted men who served in the Army of the United States at any time between April 6, 1917, and January 1, 1920, whose applications therefor shall have been received at the War Department prior to July 1, 1921.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 40, to insert:

That all the money hereinbefore designated under the titles "Subsistence of the Army," "Regular Supplies, Quartermaster Corps," "Incidental Expenses, Quartermaster Corps," "Transportation of the Army and its Supplies," "Water and Sewers at Military Posts," "Clothing and Camp and Garrison Equipage" shall be disbursed and accounted for as "General Appropriations, Quartermaster Corps," and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 19, to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$200,000," and in line 23, to strike out "$150,100" and insert "$250,100," so as to read:

For the purchase of horses of ages, sex, and size as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War for remounts of officers entitled to public mounts for the Cavalry, Artillery, Signal Corps, and Engineers, the United States Military Academy, service schools, and staff colleges, and for the Indian Scouts, and for such Infantry and members of the Medical Department in field campaigns as may be required to be mounted, and the expenses incident thereto (including $50,000 for purchase of remounts and $200,000 for encouragement of the breeding of riding horses suitable for the Army, including cooperation with the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, and for the purchase of animals for breeding purposes and their maintenance), $250,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, beginning in line 9, to strike out the proviso in the following words:

"Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for the rent of offices for military attachés.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from New York—it is not, perhaps, quite germane to the item that has just been disposed of—what steps are being taken to reduce the number of military posts in the United States? I notice here an appropriation of $7,500,000 for barracks, and so forth. We are reducing the Army materially. In view of those reductions, taking into account the fact that we had so many military posts in the United States during the war and since, it would seem to me that there ought not to be an appropriation of so large an amount for the purpose indicated in this paragraph.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The opinion of the committee upon that point will be illustrated by this statement: The estimates of the War Department for barracks and quarters are $20,700,000. The House reduced the amount to $7,500,000, and we thought that was a pretty good reduction and let it stand there.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is just about one-third of the amount asked for.

Mr. KING. Let me say to my good friend from Tennessee that any recommendation of the War Department does not go very far with me. Their estimates and their recommendations have been so unfair and so unjust and so preposterous that I do not think any Senator pays very much attention to them; and I expressed the hope a few moments ago——

Mr. McKELLAR. I was just calling the attention of the Senator to that fact when I said that there is about one-third as much actually appropriated as was asked for.

Mr. KING. We will have somebody in the War Department soon upon whose recommendation we may place some little reliance; but the Senator from New York has not answered my question, and if he will do so I shall be under very great obligations to him. Was there any evidence before the committee tending to show that there was a diminution in the number of military posts that are being maintained by the Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There was not.

Mr. KING. Is there anything in the bill that calls for a reduction of the military posts which in the past have been maintained?

Mr. WADSWORTH. This very appropriation will compel them to reduce this expense. Just on the repair of barracks last year they spent more than we are giving for the next year, and they wanted $20,000,000 for the next year. The only way to compel a reduction in overhead expense is to decline to appropriate the money. We have cut this amount by two-thirds.

Mr. KING. I was interested in reading from the testimony a few pages just handed me by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], and I discovered here in the testimony of Gen. Connor what the Senator has said—that the policy of those in authority determines what the expenditures will be. If we appropriate $40,000,000 for transportation, $40,000,000 will be expended, and if we appropriate $7,500,000 for transportation, we will have transportation that will not exceed $7,500,000. So the appropriations which we make ought to be determined by Congress and not by these military officers, who do not care one fig for the people or for the burdens which they would lay upon the people.

I wish the Senator would consent to reduce this amount of $7,500,000 to $5,000,000. We have in the United States a large number of military posts. It is absurd to make further appropriations, possibly calling for establishment of more posts.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator must not misunderstand this item. This is merely for repairs. No new posts can be established under this, and we hope—in fact, we are sure—that we will compel them to reduce the number and to reduce this expenditure by refusing their request for $20,000,000 and giving them only $7,500,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, a misprint has occurred again. On line 16, of page 43, the word "chapels" should be printed in italics. That was inserted as a Senate committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after "amusement rooms" and the comma, on line 16, page 43, the word "chapels" and a comma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 43, line 22, to insert "and for such purposes not enumerated above as the Secretary of War may deem advisable, to be expended in the discretion and under the direction of the Secretary of War," and in line 25 to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$300,000," so as to read:

For continuing the construction, equipment, and maintenance of suitable buildings at military posts and stations for the conduct of the post exchange, school, library, reading, lunch, amusement rooms, chapels, and gymnasium, including repairs to buildings erected at private cost, in the operation of the act approved May 31, 1902, for the rental of films, purchase of slides, supplies for and making repairs to moving-picture outfits and for similar and other recreational purposes at training and mobilization camps now established, or which may be hereafter established, and for such purposes not enumerated above, as the Secretary of War may deem advisable, to be expended in the discretion and under the direction of the Secretary of War, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 44, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That not less than $175,000 from this appropriation shall be used for the maintenance of the activities of the so-called "Hostess Houses."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 3, after the word "construction" to strike out "or repair," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That none of the funds appropriated or made available under this act shall be used for the permanent construction of any roads, walks, or wharves connected with any of the National Army cantonments or National Guard camps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 4, to reduce the appropriation for rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia for military purposes during the fiscal year 1922 from "$188,000" to "$150,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 2, to increase the appropriation for vocational training from "$1,000,000" to "$2,500,000."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator what is the reason for this increase over the House bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is the vocational training item, about which there has been a great deal of discussion. As the Senator knows, the law now provides that any soldier in the Army who desires to have vocational training shall have it. The estimate for the expense for the next fiscal year was $5,000,000. That has been worked out under the general supervision of Gen. Haan, the Chief of the War Plans Division of the General Staff. The House appropriated $1,000,000 for this purpose. It may interest the Senator to know that to-day there are 54,500 enlisted men in the Army who are voluntarily taking this vocational training, learning these different trades.

In addition to that there are 49,727 men in the Army who are members of technical branches of the Army, such as the Signal Corps, Engineers, and Air Service, are taking training which is the equivalent of the vocational training. So there are more than 100,000 men now in the Army taking training of one kind or another.

It is perfectly evident that the work can not continue, even at its present rate, for $1,000,000. The committee listened to rather extensive testimony on the subject, and while there has been a difference of opinion among civilians, at least, as to the value of this training, nevertheless the officers of the Army say it has a most excellent effect upon the men. The men are anxious to take it. When they enlist, the great majority of them enlist because that is one of the big inducements. If they enlist with this promise on the part of the Government that they shall have the training, the Government is in duty bound to give it to them, because the law says that they shall have it if they want it.

We have given them two and a half million dollars. We thought that there was some abuse there, or that there might possibly be some abuse, in connection with civilian instructors. To-day a little more than one-half of the instructors giving this training are of the Army personnel. A little less than one-half are civilians. We want the number of civilians reduced, so we follow this item with a proviso to the effect that not to exceed one-third of them shall be civilians.

This work is only about a year and a half old. I suspect that if we feel the same way about it next year in the next bill we shall put in a proviso that not more than one-quarter of the instructors shall be civilians, and in the next bill not more than one-fifth, and then one-sixth, and so on down, until the Army has developed its own teachers inside of its own ranks. We also limit the salaries of the supervising teachers.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, two officers have approached me in regard to this particular item, and have complained about the retention of any civilian teachers, except in rare instances, where by reason of some technical skill or knowledge that they possess it is imperative that they shall be employed. They thought that the number of civilians might be reduced to a minimum.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have just this to say: If officers come and give their individual opinions to Senators as to how the War Department should be run, they might better apply to the Military Affairs Committee and ask to appear in public hearings as witnesses.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am getting a little weary of officers of the Army coming and spilling into the ears of Senators their private ideas as to how the Army and the War Department should be run, and then having their opinions quoted upon the floor of the Senate without their names being given. If officers of the Army have any peculiar or valuable or original ideas as to how the Army should be run, let them come to the Military Affairs Committee and tell us.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I apprehended the last part of the Senator's statement, I am not sure that he is justified in the criticism in which he indulges. If he intends by that statement to deter Senators from obtaining information by which they may better understand bills that call for the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars, I do not think the Senator is doing a proper service to his country. I believe that it is the duty of Senators to get all the information they can about these measures. It is apparent that with the limited information which we get from the Military Affairs Committee—and I am not complaining—we "go it blind." I venture the assertion that there are not a dozen Senators on the floor of the Senate who know what is found in this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They would know if they read the hearings. This matter was discussed exhaustively in the hearings. Question after question was asked by members of the committee. The meeting was open. Any one could come in. All the applications for hearings that were made to the chairman of the committee or other members of the committee were granted. The officers who are carrying on this work told us all about it; and now we hear that two mysterious officers came along and told somebody that there ought not to be any civilian instructors.

Mr. KING. No; I did not state that, Mr. President.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With the exception of a few in the technical branches.

Mr. KING. In the technical branches.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would like to know who they are, so as to ascertain whether their judgment is reliable.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to confer with the Senator later, and advise him with respect to that matter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am searching for information just as much as anybody else.

Mr. KING. I know that the Senator from New York is, and that he has given very patriotic and intelligent service in the consideration of the important problems involved in this bill; and yet I repeat, the Senator from New York must not be too critical of officers and of Senators who are seeking to get the facts in regard to these stupendous appropriations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not criticizing Senators.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, here before me are the hearings of the House committee, and here are the hearings of the Senate committee, containing in detail the information concerning every item of appropriation, and the cross-examination of the officers of the Army by every member of those committees. The Senator from Utah can find, under the caption of every item in this appropriation bill, the reasons why the appropriations were made, what the estimates of the War Department were, and why they were cut down. I do not think the Senator has the House committee hearings, but if he wishes further information, and would like to have this copy, he can find under every item of which he has been inquiring, the reasons why these appropriations have been made.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I have the House hearings, and I have the Senate hearings. The Senator knows that during the session, since we met in December, every committee of importance has been in almost constant session. I have been in attendance upon committees and subcommittees nearly every day from 10 o'clock in the morning until 5 or 6 in the afternoon, aside from the attendance here upon the Senate, and it is not humanly possible for any Senator to read all the hearings. I believe I have read 25,000 pages of documents and hearings during the past two months, nearly every hearing that has been had in the Senate. It is absolutely impossible for Senators to keep in their minds all of these hearings and all of these items. I repeat that I doubt whether there are a dozen Senators who are familiar with all of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think if the Senator from Utah had been present and heard this testimony, and listened to the hearings, he would be in favor of this increase rather than be opposed to it. The vocational training in the Army was authorized first in 1916.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, do not let the Senator construe my remarks as indicating opposition. I want to be advised as to the reason for the increase.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely wish to state that this work was authorized, under the act of 1916, and started. The war came on, and it could not be continued during the war. After the war was over, after the armistice, the next year after the war had ended, it was begun on a smaller scale, and it has been increased, and the results have been marvelous. The Army has become an educational institution. They devote about five hours a day to ordinary Army duties, and about three hours a day, for a period of six months in the year, to having these young men educated. Fifty-four thousand of them in one branch, and some 48,000 or 50,000 in another, more than 100,000 in all, took this course last year, and are taking this course in the present year.

I thought it would be advisable to make it compulsory in the Army. I am so much in favor of it, I believe in it so heartily, and it is doing such great good, that it seems to me that probably it would be better, and we had hearings on that; but it was finally determined by the committee, and probably correctly so, that for the present at any rate it should remain voluntary.

The success of this movement is emphasized by what we found when we went into the war. Of the first 1,500,000 young men examined there were 346,000 men who could not write a letter home and could not read a letter from home after they went into the war. It is an intolerable condition, and here is a splendid way to help weed out, root out the illiteracy that exists in our country. I hope the Senator will not object to this very reasonable increase for the splendid work that is being done in the Army. It is the most commendable work that is being done in the Army to-day.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator from Utah that he can get an idea of the decrease in the number of civilian employees by recalling that the appropriation bill of last year, passed in 1920, carried $3,500,000 for this same service?

Mr. KING. I was familiar with that fact and with the fact that the amount had been cut down. But I was led to inquire, in view of the information which had been conveyed to me, what reasons prompted the committee to increase the amount which was carried in the House bill? I am not prepared, from the information which I have on both sides of this question, to express an opinion as to the propriety or impropriety of the increase or the wisdom or lack of wisdom of this policy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 3, to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That whenever possible officers, warrant officers, noncommissioned officers, or other enlisted men shall be detailed as instructors: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for salaries of civilian instructors other than in technical branches: And provided further, That not more than $50,000 shall be expended for salaries and no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $3,000 per annum.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Provided, That of the instructors in vocational education, not to exceed one-third shall be civilians and that the remainder shall be detailed from Army personnel; and of the civilian educational and development specialists, not exceeding 19 shall be employed, 2 of whom shall receive not exceeding $5,000 per annum, 6 not exceeding $4,000 per annum, and 13 not exceeding $3,000 per annum.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 48, line 17, in the committee amendment, the word "thirteen" should be "eleven"; and I move that the committee amendment be amended in that particular.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, beginning in line 23, to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That hereafter members of civilian rifle teams may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be paid as commutation of traveling expenses at a rate not to exceed 6 cents per mile for the shortest usually traveled route from their homes to national matches, when authorized to participate therein by the Secretary of War, and for the return travel thereto: Provided further, That the payment of travel pay for the return journey may be made in advance of the actual performance of travel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 4, before the words "rate of," to strike out "the" and insert "a"; after these words to strike out "5" and insert "not to exceed 6"; in line 9, to strike out "for medical attendance and supplies for members of such corps while at said camps"; and in line 18, to insert "to remain available until December 31, 1922," so as to read:

QUARTERMASTER SUPPLIES, EQUIPMENT, ETC., RESERVE OFFICERS' TRAINING CORPS.

For the procurement and issue, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, to institutions at which one or more units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps are maintained, of such public animals, means of transportation, supplies, tentage, equipment, and uniforms as he may deem necessary, and to forage at the expense of the United States public animals so issued, and to pay commutation in lieu of uniforms at a rate to be fixed annually by the Secretary of War; for transporting said animals and other authorized supplies and equipment from place of issue to the several institutions and training camps and return of same to place of issue when necessary; for the establishment and maintenance of camps for the further practical instruction of the members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and for transporting members of such corps to and from such camps, and to subsist them while traveling to and from such camps and while remaining therein, so far as appropriations will permit; or in lieu of transporting them to and from such camps and subsisting them while en route, to pay them travel allowance at a rate of not to exceed 6 cents per mile for the distance by the shortest usually traveled route from the places from which they are authorized to proceed to the camp and for the return travel thereto, and to pay the return travel pay in advance of the actual performance of the travel; for pay for students attending advanced camps at the rate prescribed for soldiers of the seventh grade of the Regular Army; for the payment of commutation of subsistence to members of the senior division of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, at a rate not exceeding the cost of the garrison ration prescribed for the Army, as authorized in the act approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act approved June 4, 1920, $3,000,000, to remain available until December 31, 1922.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, beginning in line 13, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That not to exceed $7,000,000 of the funds heretofore appropriated for inland and port storage and shipping facilities shall be available for obligation on and after July 1, 1921: Provided further, That no part of the appropriations for inland and port storage and shipping facilities available for the fiscal year 1922 shall be available for the payment of clerical services pertaining to the activities of the Quartermaster Corps in the District of Columbia or elsewhere.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 21, to reduce the appropriation for Medical Department from "$2,500,000" to "$2,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 10, to increase the appropriation for Army Medical Museum from "$10,000" to "$15,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 15, to increase the appropriation for library of the Surgeon General's office from "$12,500" to "$15,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 9, to reduce the appropriation for incidental expenses for Engineer depots from "$22,000" to "$20,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 10, to increase the appropriation for Engineer School from "$30,000" to "$40,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 3, to increase the appropriation for military surveys and maps from "$100" to "$500,000."

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a very important error. The amount recommended by the Senate committee should be "$50,000" instead of "$500,000." It is a misprint.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 59, line 3, strike out "$500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$50,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 13, to increase the appropriation for construction, repair, and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails, Territory of Alaska, from "$350,000" to "$500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, beginning in line 23, to strike out the additional proviso in the following words:

Provided further, That not to exceed $10,000 of the foregoing amount shall be expended for a preliminary investigation and report on the feasibility, desirability, and cost of the best and most practicable connection between the Nome-Shelton system of communications and the coal deposits of the Kugruk River, Chicago Creek, and the Keewalik mining district, whether by wagon road, sled road, tramway, trail, or other means.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 23, to reduce the appropriation for the current expenses of the Ordnance Department from "$3,000,000" to "$2,750,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 21, to strike out "$750,000" and insert "$700,000," so as to read:

ORDNANCE STORES, AMMUNITION.

For the development, manufacture, purchase, and maintenance of airplane bombs; of ammunition for small arms and for hand use for reserve supply; of ammunition for burials at the National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C., and of ammunition for firing the morning and evening gun at military posts prescribed by General Orders, No. 70, Headquarters of the Army, dated July 23, 1867, and at National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several branches, including National Soldiers' Home at Washington, D. C., and soldiers' and sailors' State homes, $700,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 6, to strike out "$400,000" and insert "$300,000," so as to read:

SMALL-ARMS TARGET PRACTICE.

For manufacture and purchase of ammunition, targets, and other accessories for small arms, hand and machine gun target practice and instruction; and ammunition, targets, target materials, and other accessories which may be issued for small-arms target practice and instruction at the educational institutions and State soldiers' and sailors' orphans' homes to which issues of small arms are lawfully made, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 9, to reduce the appropriation for manufacturing, repairing, procuring, and issuing arms at the national armories from "$500,000" to "$300,000."

Mr. LODGE. I ask the chairman of the committee if he does not think that is a very severe cut? I think the House brought it down about as low as it would bear. I am speaking now of maintaining the organization. It is not merely a question of the saving of money in making the arms, but of absolutely breaking down the organization of the arsenals so that they can not really carry on at all. I hope the chairman will be willing to accept the House figures, for I think those are brought down very low.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The amount appropriated by the House under the title "Manufacture of arms" is $500,000. The arm referred to is the Springfield rifle. The amount of $500,000 would permit the Springfield arsenal, where the rifles are made, to keep running, to turn out 75 rifles per day, and to employ at that work something like 500 men. The estimate sent in by the Ordnance Department was for $1,373,000. The department wanted to do a little other work at the arsenal in addition to making these rifles.

The Senate committee reduced the House provision down to $300,000. I will say very frankly to the Senator from Massachusetts that that was a pretty severe reduction, and I will also say to him and to other Senators present that when this bill was printed and reported from the Senate committee, the Chief of Ordnance came in great anxiety to see me, yesterday morning, and he said that if the amount was cut to $300,000 they would be in great difficulty in keeping the arsenal going, with a reasonable number of employees for a nucleus of expansion in case of emergency. I asked him if there were any unexpended balances. My recollection is that there is an unexpended balance. I know there is in the next item, Ordnance Stores and Supplies, but my very clear impression is that he advised me that if there was an unexpended balance it was so small that the $500,000 appropriation would be very highly desirable.

I am not authorized by the committee to abandon the Senate committee's amendment. I must say, I think we were fairly severe in that one item.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think the testimony showed that there was $254,000 unexpended balance carried over from last year in this item, and that the amount expended was $490,000.

Mr. LENROOT. $250,000 was carried over.

Mr. LODGE. If we made the unexpended balance available, it would help some.

Mr. LENROOT. That is available now. I read from the hearings:

Maj. O'LEARY. * * * We now anticipate that of the present year's appropriation on June 30 there will remain $250,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. That will be carried over also?

Maj. O'LEARY. Yes, sir; that will be carried over, and the present estimates are based on that assumption.

Mr. LODGE. That is a House hearing?

Mr. LENROOT. That is a House hearing.

Mr. LODGE. On that hearing the House gave $500,000. I assure the Senate that from what I can learn about it, to reduce it as low as is proposed would practically break down the organization of the arsenal, and leave it in a condition where it will be probably more expensive in the end. The number of 75 rifles a day is not too much, is it, to keep up the ordinary wastage?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It just about keeps up wastage.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I thought, and I think it is reduced to the lowest point. I hope the committee will be willing to let the House provision remain.

Mr. LENROOT. The testimony shows that there are now on hand 616,000 of the Springfield rifles. There are 2,000,000 of the other rifles on hand. There was no testimony that the organization could not be carried on with the lower appropriation.

Mr. LODGE. That is not the testimony as I understood it.

Mr. LENROOT. I have the testimony before me to the effect that the rifles could not be manufactured as economically if we went below 75 per day as if we manufactured that number, but it does seem to me that there could be no possible need, with the 2,600,000 rifles on hand, for manufacturing even as many as 75 per day when a lesser number will keep the organization going and we can save the $200,000.

Mr. LODGE. The House heard all the testimony that the Senator has been reading and appropriated $500,000.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very glad, indeed, that we did find once in a while an item where we thought the House had made a mistake and appropriated too much.

Mr. LODGE. My point is that I think a mistake has been made here and that the committee have gone too far in reducing the amount. I do not know what the rifles are.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are Springfield rifles.

Mr. LODGE. I mean the surplus rifles.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The six hundred odd thousand are Springfield rifles and there are over 2,000,000 of the modified Enfield rifles, which were issued during the war. They are a very good rifle.

Mr. LODGE. I know they are.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are not quite as good, however, as the Springfield, but they were used successfully by our troops in France.

Mr. LENROOT. If the item is restored, they will have more for the manufacture of arms next year than they used this year.

Mr. LODGE. If it is certain that the appropriation will be carried on, but——

Mr. LENROOT. If we leave the House item as it stands with $250,000 available for this year, we will give them more next year than they have been using this year.

Mr. LODGE. I quite agree, but we have to make provision for allowing them to carry on the appropriation. The appropriation is not available after the 1st of July.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, yes; it is. It is a 2-year appropriation. If this item remains at $300,000 they will have $550,000 altogether.

Mr. LODGE. I did not have that impression.

Mr. LENROOT. It is a 2-year appropriation.

Mr. LODGE. I know, but was it made last year?

Mr. LENROOT. The testimony is that it does carry into next year.

Mr. LODGE. It does not seem to me that it could do any harm to make sure of it.

Mr. LENROOT. We can agree to the amendment and let it go into conference, and then that can be ascertained.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think we had better leave the committee amendment as it is to go to conference.

Mr. LODGE. But we need to put in words making the other appropriation available, so as to bring that before the conferees.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The conference committee would be competent to do that.

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not think the conference committee would be competent to do it, not under our rule about new matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is some money already on hand.

Mr. LODGE. All I desire to do is to give the conferees authority to carry that over.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that we put his amendment in now.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; put that in now and take it to conference.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would have it read that the unexpended balance for the fiscal year 1921 shall remain available for the fiscal year 1922.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, while the Senators are endeavoring to agree on the amendment, may I inquire of the chairman of the committee what reductions have been made by the bill in the arsenals and in their production?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The arsenals have been reduced to a prewar basis. They were reduced to that basis last year. The Watervliet Arsenal, with heavy guns, the Watertown Arsenal, the Springfield Arsenal, the Rock Island Arsenal, and the Frankford Arsenal are all down to prewar basis.

Mr. KING. My recollection is that in the last bill we carried some provision for an arsenal in Pennsylvania to give it a capacity to exceed its prewar capacity.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; there was a provision in last year's appropriation bill looking to the sale of three of the war-time temporary powder plants and devote the proceeds to the purchase and establishment of a new arsenal at the Aberdeen proving grounds, at which powder to fill artillery shells was to be manufactured, but that was rejected by the Senate or by the conference committee.

Mr. KING. I am familiar with that, but the Senator will bear in mind the fact that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] called attention to one arsenal, and my recollection is that we granted an appropriation to extend its capacities beyond the prewar activities.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may we have the pending amendment to the amendment stated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 62, after the numerals "300,000," in line 9, add the following proviso:

Provided, That the unexpended balance of the money appropriated for these purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, is hereby made available for the year ending June 30, 1922.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 17, to insert:

NATIONAL TROPHY AND MEDALS FOR RIFLE CONTESTS.

For the purpose of furnishing a national trophy and medals and other prizes to be provided and contested for annually, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, said contest to be open to the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the National Guard or Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and of the District of Columbia, members of rifle clubs, and civilians, and for the cost of the trophy, prizes, and medals herein provided for, and for the promotion of rifle practice throughout the United States, including the reimbursement of necessary expenses of members of the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, to be expended for the purposes hereinbefore prescribed, under the direction of the Secretary of War, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, beginning in line 24, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That all the moneys hereinbefore appropriated for the arming, equipping, and training of the National Guard shall be disbursed and accounted for as one fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 19, to increase the appropriation for arms, uniforms, equipment, etc., for Field Service, National Guard, from "$5,000,000" to "$6,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 4, to insert "to mounted units of the National Guard, in accordance with the provisions of existing law, not less than 3,500 animals from those now being held in remount stations and posts, and to issue," so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to issue to mounted units of the National Guard, in accordance with the provisions of existing law, not less than 3,500 animals from those now being held in remount stations and posts, and to issue from surplus or reserve stores and matériel now on hand and purchased for the United States Army such articles of clothing and equipment and Field Artillery matériel and ammunition as may be needed by the National Guard organized under the provisions of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act approved June 4, 1920. This issue shall be made without charge against militia appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 22, after the word "issue," to insert the words "and sale," so as to read:

For arms, ammunition, targets, and other accessories for target practice for issue and sale in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice and approved by the Secretary of War, in connection with the encouragement of rifle practice, in pursuance of the provisions of law, $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 8, after the word "uniforms," to insert "including altering, fitting, washing, and cleaning when necessary"; in line 12, before the word "cents," to strike out "5" and insert "a rate not exceeding 6"; and in line 13 to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$1,500,000," so as to read:

CIVILIAN MILITARY TRAINING CAMPS.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 8, to reduce the appropriation for one staff sergeant from "$975.60" to "$756."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, beginning in line 22, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That these civilian instructors employed in the department of modern languages and the department of tactics shall be entitled to public quarters and to the same allowances with respect to fuel and light as those of a first lieutenant when occupying public quarters.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, line 14, to change the total of the appropriation for pay of Military Academy from "$1,911,634.62" to "$1,915,404.80."

Mr. WADSWORTH. That total is an error. It should read, as amended in line 14, "$1,910,904.80."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this finishes the committee amendments, but there are two matters that I am very anxious to bring to the attention of the Senate before other amendments are offered.

Members of the Committee on Military Affairs will remember that we limited to 1,050 the number of warrant officers who may be paid. The item will be found on page 16, line 13. Let me say for the information of Senators, and especially members of the Committee on Military Affairs, that this morning there called upon me two officers from the War Department in charge of this work of organizing warrant officers, issuing the commissions, and so forth. They pointed out to me that if the number was limited to 1,050 it would be impossible to appoint any band leaders as warrant officers. The basic law provides that band leaders shall be appointed warrant officers. They have only appointed three thus far and there are 127 more who have taken the examinations and are ready to be appointed as warrant officers. I am speaking now of band leaders who under the law are entitled to be warrant officers.

It was suggested to me that we make no change in the appropriation which we have fixed at $1,413,000 for these warrant officers, but that we lift the prohibition as to the number. They explained to me that as they consume time in examining the men who are to be band leader warrant officers they can delay very properly and feasibly the issuance of the commissions. They believe, therefore, that the $1,413,000 can be stretched to pay nearly all the men who will have been accepted as band leaders and who must under the law be made warrant officers. So my suggestion was that we strike out the proviso on lines 12 and 13, page 16, and leave the amount as it is. It would be a breaking of faith with these men who under the statute have taken the examination which is given to the band leaders and who are entitled to be warrant officers.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator from New York does he remember how many there now are?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; there are to-day 1,030 warrant officers.

Mr. LENROOT. How will all the band leaders be provided for in any event?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Because the warrant officers of the Army mine-planter service, who number 83, are excluded from the authorized strength fixed in the basic law.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then, Mr. President, if there is no objection, I move to strike out lines 12 and 13, on page 16. If it be necessary, I will first move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment in line 11 was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not necessary to move to reconsider; the Senator may move to strike out the language. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is one other matter I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate. I do not do so in my capacity as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I do not propose to have it understood—and, of course, I can not have it understood—that it is offered as a committee amendment. I know that the amendment I am going to propose is subject to a point of order, and yet I am going to make a plea to the Senate to make it possible at this eleventh hour in the session of this Congress to advance Gen. Hunter Liggett to the grade of lieutenant general. He must retire on March 21 next on account of age, as he reaches the age of 64 on that date. The Senate is entirely familiar with his services and also with the services of Gen. Bullard, who also commanded a field army in action against the enemy during the recent war.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from New York. I have no objection whatever to the proposal which he now submits. I think the action contemplated by his amendment is necessary, just, and proper; but would the Senator from New York object to modifying his amendment so as to include also the names of officers who have been nominated for promotion to the rank of major general, and also those officers who have been nominated for promotion to the rank of brigadier general, whose nominations have been pending in the Senate ever since the beginning of this session?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas is not germane to this topic. It involves the confirmation of nominations which have already been made, while the proposal I make, which has been reported from the Senate Military Affairs Committee, is to revive for this special purpose the grade of lieutenant general and to authorize the President to appoint to that grade "two general officers who, prior to the close of hostilities, especially distinguished themselves in command of field armies in the American Expeditionary Forces." Those two are Gen. Liggett and Gen. Bullard. No one else can qualify under that language. That is the amendment which I now offer to the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Those officers will not be confirmed by the adoption of the amendment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They will not be. Their names will have to be sent to the Senate and they will have to be confirmed in the regular way if the language of the amendment is adopted.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not concede that there is any foundation for the implied objection made by the Senator from New York that the proposal which I have suggested is not germane to the amendment which he has offered, but I do not wish to delay or to obstruct in any way the advancement of the officers whose names he presents.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hope no one will object to or make the point of order against the amendment. I think it ought to be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 70, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

That in the Army of the United States the grade of lieutenant general is hereby revived, and the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint to said grade two general officers, who, prior to the close of hostilities, especially distinguished themselves in command of field armies in the American Expeditionary Forces; and the officers appointed under the foregoing authorization shall have the pay prescribed by section 24 of the act of Congress approved July 15, 1870, and such allowances as the President shall deem appropriate: Provided, That no more than two appointments to office shall be made under the terms of this paragraph.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall not ask to have read the letter which I now submit, but if there is no objection to the amendment itself——

Mr. LODGE. I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that the letter which I now present, from Gen. Pershing, be inserted in the RECORD.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

GENERAL OF THE ARMIES,
Washington, February 23, 1921.

Senator JAMES W. WADSWORTH,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WADSWORTH: Referring to our recent conversation and to the recommendation by the Secretary of War and myself when we recently appeared before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs that Maj. Gen. Liggett be given the permanent rank of lieutenant general, I wish to say a word more in his behalf.

Gen. Liggett's record from his entry into the Army as a cadet in 1875 has been characterized by unusual efficiency and devotion to duty. During the World War he commanded with special distinction an army corps in the second Battle of the Marne, in St. Mihiel, and in the Meuse-Argonne, while in the later phases of this last great battle he commanded our First Army.

As you will recall, our First Army was composed of four army corps, in which during the period of his command there were 18 different divisions that, together with the staff and supply services under him, constituted an army of well over half a million men. In no previous war in which the United States has been engaged has any officer held command of so great an army, nor engaged that army in a battle fraught with such grave consequences.

Gen. Liggett's exceptional abilities as a soldier, his loyalty to his superiors, and his services to the country stand out in a striking manner. It is, of course, true that there are several officers who held positions of almost equal responsibility in the American Expeditionary Forces and who have as yet received scant recognition. Without these capable and patriotic men as leaders our success in battle at a critical period of the war, with all its importance to the world and civilization, would have been impossible.

From time to time I have recommended well-deserved reward for these officers which I hope at no distant date may be unstintingly granted, but the purpose of this letter is to invite particular attention to the urgency of action by the present Congress in Gen. Liggett's case. By operation of law he will retire for age on March 21, 1921, and I earnestly request that steps be taken to promote him to the grade of lieutenant general in order that he may hold this higher rank for at least a short period before his retirement.

This fitting tribute to one of America's greatest soldiers will meet the unqualified approval of the Army in general, and especially of the men, most of whom are now in civil life, who had the honor of serving with him and under his command. Moreover, it would also be in a larger sense a recognition by Congress of the important achievements of the American Armies in bringing the World War to a successful conclusion.

Very sincerely, JOHN J. PERSHING.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me to ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point a short statement with reference to Gen. Bullard?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will do that.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Bullard, Robert Lee, major general, United States Army, was born January 15, 1861, at Youngsboro, Lee County, Ala., son of Daniel and Susan (Mizell) Bullard, the former a native of Lumberton, Robeson County, N. C., an early pioneer to Alabama, where he acquired extensive landed interests, residing near Opelika, later removing to a site opposite Columbus, Ga., finally settling on his plantation at Oak Bowery; a Democrat, Methodist, and Mason; grandson of Robert and Catherine (McLean) Bullard, also of Robeson County, N. C.; great-grandson of Charles McLean, a native of the Isle of Skye and of Scotch stock who emigrated to North Carolina prior to the Revolutionary War. The Bullards were of English ancestry. The Mizell family was of French origin. Gen. Bullard was educated in the common schools of Lee and Chambers Counties, and was a student at the Alabama Agricultural and Mechanical College (now Alabama Polytechnical Institute) 1880-81, and in June of that year, by competitive examination, entered the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y., from which he graduated in 1885—twenty-seventh in a class of 39; graduate School of the Line, Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and the Army War College, Washington, D. C., 1912. Career in United States Army: Geronimo Indian campaign, 1885–86; service in Southwest; major, Alabama Volunteers (negroes), 1898–99.

Regiment won high reputation in War Department for discipline and excellence of conduct. Upon its reputation, Col. Bullard was appointed by President colonel Thirty-ninth Infantry, United States Volunteers, 1899–1901. For the work of this regiment in campaign in the Philippines, Col. Bullard was commended or approved by Gens. Otis, Bates, Schwan, and McArthur, and by all other commanders under whom he served. Upon his work with this regiment, Col. Bullard, at that time a major in the subsistence department of the Regular Army, was transferred back to the line of the Regular Army, from which he came at the opening of the Spanish-American War.

NINE ENGAGEMENTS.

Cut Lligan-Lanao military road in central Mindanao, 1902–3.

"NONE OF OUR SOLDIERS WOULD UNDERSTAND."

[Army and Navy Journal.]

It will be remembered that in the fighting that marked the opening of the second battle of the Marne early in July "an American general in command of American forces south of the Marne," sent the following message to French headquarters: "We regret being unable on this occasion to follow the counsels of our masters, the French, but the American flag has been forced to retire. This is unendurable, and none of our soldiers would understand their not being asked to do whatever is necessary to repair a situation which is humiliating to us and unacceptable to our country's honor. We are going to counterattack."

Several newspapers identified the officer who sent this message as Maj. Gen. Omar Bundy, N. A., but William Howard Taft, in an article in the Louisville Courier-Journal, says the message was sent by Maj. Gen. Robert L. Bullard, N. A. Ex-President Taft's statement reads:

"The course of Gen. Bullard and his command at Chateau-Thierry makes one's heart beat high. He was ordered by his French commander to give ground. He declined on the ground that his troops did not know how to retreat. He ordered them forward. The check of the German offensive on the Marne began with this sharp encounter of his men. His act savored of insubordination. Only a brilliant success could justify it. He took the chance, and report makes him a lieutenant general." Acknowledging its ignorance of the author of the message, the New York Sun said of it in an editorial: "We know that this courteous message to a brave ally, gently rejecting his counsel, but ever so politely explaining the reason why, is one of the documents of this war that will go into the school histories. Since Joffre's order at the Marne nothing finer has come from a soldier's pen. 'None of our soldiers would understand.' The tribute to the Americans, penned in all modesty by their commander, reaches the sublime."

Mr. ROBINSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The READING CLERK. At the end of line 16, on page 15, it is proposed to substitute for the period a colon and to add the following:

And provided further, That payments heretofore made by disbursing officers of the United States to the Lonoke Chamber of Commerce, Lonoke, Ark., under and pursuant to a lease dated March 20, 1919, providing for the use and occupation by the United States of certain lands near Lonoke, Ark., for aeronautical purposes and providing for an increased rental from and after January 1, 1919, are hereby ratified and confirmed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, a number of Senators have asked me and other members of the Military Affairs Committee as to what the policy would be with respect to amendments which may be offered of a legislative character. For myself, and acting only for myself, I have stated that amendments involving claims of a private character are perfectly hopeless; we never could persuade the House conferees or the House to agree to them; they would be subject to points of order both here and there; but the amendment now offered by the Senator from Arkansas is not of the nature of a claim. It is merely to confirm action already taken by the authorized agents of the War Department, and it will relieve an impossible situation which has grown up entirely through an error due in turn to a ridiculous technicality.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask leave to insert in the RECORD a memorandum prepared from the record in explanation of the amendment just agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The memorandum referred to is as follows:

This amendment ratifies payments made by disbursing officers of the Government to the Lonoke Chamber of Commerce in compliance with the provisions of a lease dated March 20, 1919, providing for the occupation by the United States of 960 acres of land near Lonoke for aeronautical purposes and known as Eberts Field.

The facts are that the Government desired to establish an aviation field near Lonoke and the chamber of commerce was induced to lease a suitable tract of land, 960 acres in area, near the city limits, to the Government for that purpose at a nominal rental of $1 per year, the chamber of commerce paying to the owners of the land approximately $6,500 per year therefor.

A subsequent lease was made of the same general character for the fiscal year from July 1, 1918, to June 30, 1919.

While this latter lease was still in force the armistice was signed and the chamber of commerce desired to be relieved of the obligation to pay this rent. It filed a petition with the War Department setting up the facts and asking that the department execute a new lease and pay the rent which up until that time the Lonoke Chamber of Commerce had been paying.

Accordingly a new lease was executed, March 20, 1919, and made effective at the beginning of that year. The lease was regular in form, approved by the Assistant Secretary of War on memorandum from the chief of the real estate section to the director of operations, General Staff, dated February 25, 1919.

The only change was that in the new lease the Government was to pay to the chamber of commerce the rent for the lands, the chamber of commerce being liable therefor to the owners.

Prior to the execution of this lease the Lonoke Chamber of Commerce had expended a considerable sum of money for purposes not embraced in the original lease and the Government had received the benefit of this expenditure.

This additional expenditure consisted in sanitary improvements on lands adjacent to the camp and amounted to a considerable sum.

In addition to this the War Department deemed it fair and right to pay the rent for the field as the burden upon the Lonoke Chamber of Commerce had become oppressive and the policy of the department with respect to maintaining the field was unsettled.

The Lonoke Chamber of Commerce is not a corporation. It consists of a voluntary organization of public-spirited individuals who were induced at the beginning of the war to assume responsibility for the rent of the lands from patriotic motives.

In an opinion dated January 6, 1921, the Acting Judge Advocate General held the new lease void on the theory that there was no consideration moving to the Government for the execution of the new lease and that the same was against the interests of the Government, the original lease containing a provision authorizing renewal. The Government, however, failed to avail itself of that provision and executed the new lease which was designed to take the place of the former.

The Judge Advocate General will proceed to institute an action for the recovery of the sums paid under the new lease to the chamber of commerce for the benefit of the owners of the lands, unless this or some similar provision is adopted. There is no question about the regularity of the new lease or of the good faith of the parties. The decision of the Judge Advocate General is based solely on the ground that there was no consideration for the new lease and that it was less beneficial to the Government than the former.

Mr. HEFLIN. I offer an amendment to come in after line 4, on page 22.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, after line 4, it is proposed to add a new paragraph, as follows:

That the accounting officers of the Treasury Department are hereby authorized and directed to credit the account of Henry M. Bankhead, lieutenant colonel, Infantry, in the sum of $103.65; Horace P. Hobbs, lieutenant colonel, Infantry, in the sum of $1,166.31; Louis F. Garrard, jr., lieutenant colonel, Quartermaster Corps, in the sum of $2,373.64; and Charles B. Stone, jr., lieutenant colonel, Infantry, in the sum of $1,028.17, with which said officers were charged for defalcations made by Sergt. William Le Duc at Fort McPherson, Ga., in the sum of $4,671.77, for which said Le Duc was convicted and sentenced.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I make the point of order against the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. HEFLIN. I hope the Senator will not make the point of order. I am willing to take chances with it in conference.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, Mr. President, I think we had better have a quorum to carry on this work.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope the Senator will not call for a quorum at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained, if made.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think we had better have a quorum, Mr. President.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will yield; but I want the amendment to go on the bill. It is a meritorious measure. It has been approved by the Secretary of War, and reported favorably, I think, by the committee of which the Senator is chairman. The salaries of the officers named in the amendment have been held up and they can not get the money to which they are justly entitled. I submit it is unfair under the circumstances for any Senator here to attempt to withhold it from them any longer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If I may correct a statement made by the Senator from Alabama, the items carried in the amendment offered by him were included in a bill reported from the Committee on Claims and not reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and that bill has passed the Senate. I have no particular objection to the amendment; but let me remind the Senator from Alabama that to call for a quorum and then fail to develop it, thereby putting the Army appropriation bill over until next Monday, will not help the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, for, unless the point of order is withdrawn, in order that the amendment may be considered, it will require a suspension of the rules upon one day's notice and a two-thirds vote of the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from New Jersey can very easily withdraw his point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think the Senator from New Jersey, from what I know of him, will do so under the circumstances.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I made the point of order because I know it is hopeless to get legislation of this character added to the pending bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would be willing to take a chance as to that.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I insist upon the point of order, and ask for a ruling.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has ruled. There is nothing now before the Senate, unless the Senator from Alabama insists upon a call for a quorum.

Mr. SUTHERLAND and Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. Does the Senator from Alabama call for a quorum?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I appreciate what the Senator from New York has said and realize how important it is to get this measure through. I do not want unnecessarily to delay it; but I desire to say that the amendment which I have proposed is a very meritorious one and ought to be enacted into law. The Senator from New Jersey, however, has made the point of order, as of course he had the right to do, and he can take the responsibility of keeping these officers of the Army out of their money. I will not make the point of no quorum.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and I ask to have it inserted at the end of the last amendment which has been adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

That the accounting officers of the Treasury Department are hereby authorized and directed to credit the account of Harold Kernan, now serving as first lieutenant, Thirteenth Field Artillery, United States Army, in the sum of $3,426, with which said officer was charged for money stolen from an enlisted man serving under him, for which said officer was held responsible while stationed in the city of Brest, France, in October, 1919.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. RANSDELL. I hope the Senator will withdraw his point of order until I can ask that a letter of the Secretary of War be printed in the RECORD in connection with the amendment. I do not desire to make a speech, but I am willing to have the point of order ruled upon.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am willing to withhold the point of order in order that the letter referred to by the Senator may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, January 20, 1921.

The CHAIRMAN,
Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated January 14, 1921, inclosing copy of H. R. 14814, a bill for the relief of Harold Kernan, and requesting that you be furnished with copies of the papers in this case and that I express an opinion as to its merits.

The Adjutant General has been directed to furnish copies of the desired papers, from which you will see that the loss of the funds was due to the robbery of an enlisted messenger who had been intrusted with their transfer from the sales branch, depot quartermaster's office, to the finance office in the city of Brest, France. The board which investigated this matter at the time of the loss held Capt. Kernan responsible, due to his not having provided a sufficient guard. It appears, however, that since the transfer took place in the middle of the afternoon and the route followed was along frequented streets, the failure to provide more adequate protection was due to an error in judgment which might have been committed by anyone similarly placed. This view is also justified by the fact that Capt. Kernan's predecessor had, so far as the papers disclose, followed the same procedure in the daily transfer of these funds. I feel therefore that the ends of justice will be served by granting the relief contemplated.

Respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I renew the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order will have to be sustained, as the amendment provides for a private claim.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

That in the cases of officers then in the Army who were nominated to the Senate by the President for brevet commissions for service during the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or the China relief expedition for extraordinary heroism or gallantry in action or especially meritorious services, such as to justify the award of the distinguished service cross or the distinguished service medal provided for in the act of July 9, 1918, such cases may be considered and acted on under the provisions of said act, notwithstanding that such recommendations may have been made more than three years before said cases shall have been considered as authorized by said act, but all consideration of and action upon such case shall be based exclusively on official records of the War Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, prior to the World War there were three forms of recognition prescribed by law for officers and enlisted men, as follows:

(a) Medal of honor for both officers and enlisted men for extraordinary heroism in action.

(b) Brevet rank, for officers only, for exceptional gallantry in action or specially distinguished service during time of war.

(c) Certificate of merit, for enlisted men only, for specially meritorious service, usually involving risk of life at any time.

The act approved July 9, 1918, contains provisions inter alia, as follows:

(a) It confined the award of the medal of honor to persons who, while officers or enlisted men of the Army, shall hereafter, in action involving actual conflict with the enemy, distinguish themselves conspicuously by gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of their lives above and beyond the call of duty.

(b) It provided for the award of the distinguished service cross to any person who, while serving in any capacity with the Army of the United States since April 6, 1917, has distinguished or shall hereafter distinguish himself or herself by extraordinary heroism in connection with military operations against an armed enemy.

(c) It provided for the award of the distinguished service medal to any person who, while serving in any capacity with the Army of the United States since April 6, 1917, has distinguished or hereafter shall distinguish himself or herself by exceptionally meritorious service to the Government in a duty of great responsibility.

It also provided that the distinguished service medal shall be issued to all enlisted men of the Army in lieu of certificates of merit heretofore granted them.

The awards provided by the act approved July 9, 1918, and to which I have referred, were by the same act limited in all three cases to three years from the date of the act justifying the award, and also to cases in which the recommendation for the award was made within two years from the date of its performance. The same act also provided as follows:

"1. But in cases of officers and enlisted men now in the Army for whom the award of the medal of honor has been recommended in full compliance with then existing regulations, but on account of services, which though insufficient fully to justify the award of the medal of honor, appear to have been such as to justify the award of the distinguished service cross or distinguished service medal hereinbefore provided for, such cases may be considered and acted upon under the provisions of this act authorizing the award of the distinguished service cross and distinguished service medal, notwithstanding that said services may have been rendered more than three years before said cases shall have been considered as authorized by this act, but all consideration of and action upon any of said cases shall be based exclusively upon official records now on file in the War Department;

"2. And in the cases of officers and enlisted men now in the Army who have been mentioned in orders, now a part of official records, for extraordinary heroism or specially meritorious services, such as to justify the award of the distinguished service cross or the distinguished service medal hereinbefore provided for, such cases may be considered and acted on under the provisions of this act, notwithstanding that said act or services may have been rendered more than three years before said cases shall have been considered as authorized by this act, but all consideration of and action upon any of said cases shall be based exclusively upon official records of the War Department."

An analysis of the last two provisions quoted shows that they provided for the recognition of officers previously recommended for the medal of honor, for enlisted men to whom a certificate of merit had been issued, and for officers and enlisted men now in the Army "who have been mentioned in orders."

The War Department has held that a nomination to the Senate by the President for brevet rank is not a mention in orders as contemplated by the above-quoted act. Such mention in orders was previous to the passage of the act approved July 9, 1918, very unusual, and with a few exceptions was limited to announcements to the service of medals of honor or certificates of merit previously awarded. Only two orders issued by the War Department can be found which make such mention of officers or enlisted men. One of these, General Order No. 15, War Department, 1900, contains some 450 names, but most of them are announcements of the award of certificates of merit of some 25 officers commended for scientific study of causes of disease, et cetera, and of certain others, principally enlisted men, for taking unusual risks in regard to case of patients, and so forth, during contagious epidemics. This order contains very few citations of the character contemplated by the above act. One other War Department order prior to the act that has been quoted bearing on this subject is General Order No. 86, War Department, 1902, announcing the award of the medal of honor to 16 officers. A few other awards have been made under these provisos of officers who were cited in the orders of subordinate commanders for service in the Philippine rebellion.

The award of honors has never been given more careful and thorough investigation and attention in this country than was given in the selection of the men nominated by the President for brevet rank in the Spanish-American War, the Philippine rebellion, and the China relief expedition. In these cases several boards of officers, the members of which were among the most prominent in the Army, carefully weighed the questions of right, merit, and justice involved before making recommendations upon which the President based his nominations; for example, in the case of brevets for operation in the Philippine Islands the board consisted of Gen. Bates, Gen. Wheaton, and Gen. Funston, and the recommendations of this board were carefully reviewed by Gen. McArthur.

With the exception of those officers recommended for the medal of honor, the effect of the interpretation of the law by the War Department, mandatory though it may be, is to deprive of all recognition all officers nominated for brevet rank, as indicated, while permitting the recognition of other officers merely because in cases of the latter the letter of the law happened to have been complied with some 20 years ago. It can be confidently asserted that no officer who has received, under the provisions of the above law, a distinguished service cross or distinguished service medal by virtue of having been mentioned in orders has a greater moral claim to such recognition than the majority of the officers nominated for brevet rank. On the contrary, an examination into their respective claims as set forth by the orders mentioned in the former and the nomination sent to the Senate in the case of the latter will show that in effect the law or its interpretation has worked grave injustice to the officers nominated for brevet rank.

These nominations will be found in volume 35, Part III, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, pages 3067 to 3078 in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 20, 1902. The list shown therein comprises the names of more than 500 officers, but it is estimated that considerably less than half of them are now in the Army.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 70, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

For the preparation of plans, the initiation of work, including the employment of all necessary engineering, technical, clerical, and other services, and for any and every purpose connected therewith, for an increased water supply for the District of Columbia, in accordance with Potomac project "E," described in the report submitted January 10, 1921, by Maj. M. C. Tyler, Corps of Engineers, $200,000, to be immediately available, and to remain available until expended.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator from New Jersey withhold his point of order for a moment?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I withhold the point of order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand perfectly well that this amendment is subject to a point of order; but I trust the Senator from New Jersey will withhold the point of order on account of the urgent necessity of providing an additional water supply for the District of Columbia, of which we are all residents. In that connection I desire to send to the desk and have printed a letter from the Secretary of War upon this subject.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 18, 1921.

SIR: The act of Congress approved June 10, 1920, creating the Federal Power Commission, authorized and directed that commission, on or before the 1st day of January, 1921, to report to Congress the cost and, in detail, the economic value of developing power in the Potomac River. The Federal Power Commission was directed, in connection with the study, to submit plans and estimates of cost necessary to secure an increased and adequate water supply for the District of Columbia.

The duty of making the engineering study and investigation required by this direction was assigned to Maj. M. C. Tyler, district engineer, under supervision of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army. Maj. Tyler submitted his report on the 10th day of January, 1921. The report was acted upon and forwarded to Congress by the Federal Power Commission on February 14, 1921.

The Federal Power Commission, in submitting its report, stated that it is the unanimous opinion of all who have investigated the subject that there will be no advantage in treating the subject of increased water supply for the District of Columbia as a part of the project to develop power from the Potomac. The Federal Power Commission also calls attention to the urgency of the need for additional water supply for the District of Columbia and recommends that the project described in detail in Maj. Tyler's report under the heading "Potomac project E" be adopted, and that steps be taken as early as practicable to commence its construction.

Potomac project E is estimated to cost about $9,000,000. It is by far the lowest in first cost of all practicable plans for increased water supply and will care for the increasing needs of the District of Columbia for at least 60 years.

The question of providing additional water supply for the District of Columbia has been under consideration for the past 15 years and the danger of further delay in making provision for supplementing the present water supply has become so great that I feel obliged to call the attention of Congress to it by urging, even at this late date, that provision be made at this session for commencing work. To this end it is recommended that the following item be inserted in any appropriate bill:

"For the preparation of plans, the initiation of work, including the employment of all necessary engineering, technical, clerical, and other services, and for any and every purpose connected therewith, for an increased water supply for the District of Columbia, in accordance with Potomac project E, described in the report submitted January 10, 1921, by Maj. M. C. Tyler, Corps of Engineers, $200,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended."

Respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that, as I understand, an estimate has been sent to Congress, and therefore the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. An estimate has been made and sent to Congress of $200,000, which will provide for the additional work. We all know that during the past two summers we have run up against a very serious shortage in the water supply. We are all interested in this matter. Our families are interested in it. While the amendment may be subject to a point of order, this is in all human probability the only bill to which the amendment can be attached with any certainty of its getting through.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us find out about this matter. Has an estimate been made for this work?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Washington states that an estimate has been made for it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand so.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, no estimate was presented to the committee. The committee passed on the matter, and decided not to insert it in the bill. It is general legislation, and I make the point of order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If there is no estimate, of course——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand that there is an estimate. I have not investigated it, Mr. President. I saw in the papers the statement that it had come down, and I supposed it had come down in the regular way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the difficulty in asking the Chair to rule on the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I appreciate that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If this water-supply is under the control of the War Department, the amendment is not legislation. If it has been estimated for, the amendment is in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. An estimate has been made by an Army engineer in the letter from the Secretary of War, not in authentic form, but in printed form.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not an estimate. It must come through the Treasury Department in order to be an estimate. That is the difficulty in asking the Chair to rule upon this question. If there has been an estimate from the Treasury Department, this amendment is clearly in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I can not state accurately whether it came through the Secretary of the Treasury or not. I know that the Secretary of War wrote a letter, and the committee was apprised of the letter, and the committee decided not to put the item in the bill under the peculiar situation that exists.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I presented the letter to the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, my recollection is that it was not an estimate from the Treasury Department; it was from the War Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It must come from the Treasury Department. That is the law. That is where the estimates come from.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator from West Virginia knows that it will be futile to attempt to hold this amendment against the House conferees, and it is general legislation. There is an absence of any evidence of an estimate, and the committee passed on it and decided not to put it on the bill. I dislike very much to make the point of order, but I feel that the amendment will imperil the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must be informed as to whether or not there was an estimate. That is the only question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I can not say accurately whether or not an estimate was made by the Treasury Department and transmitted. The only estimate that I had was in a letter from the Secretary of War, which stated that an estimate of $200,000 had been made by the Engineering Department of the Army.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Surely somebody that can speak on the subject has seen the Book of Estimates.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It would be a supplemental estimate if the regular estimates had come down previously.

Mr. LODGE. It would come to the presiding officer.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have seen in the papers reference to it during the last week, and I know that it was considered an extremely urgent matter. The Water Power Commission passed on the proposition just a week or two ago, and they consider the supply of water for the District of Columbia a very urgent matter. I have seen references to it in the papers two or three times, and it was stated that a supplemental estimate had been sent to Congress. I feel very confident that it has been sent, but I have not looked the matter up, because I did not know that it was coming up to-day.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that if the amendment is agreed to and goes to conference, I believe——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Is general legislation subject to a point of order, even if it has been estimated for?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I make the point of order on the ground that this is general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the chair overruled that point of order a while ago. He does not think this is general legislation at all. It has to do with the question of getting more water for the city of Washington.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have sent to the desk a formal letter of the Secretary of War to Congress upon that subject. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will withhold his point of order and let this amendment take its chances in the conference committee with the conferees of the House. If we can not secure the approval of the item, of course it will have to go out.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there seems to be great doubt about it, and I hope the Senator from New Jersey will let it take that course.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I withhold the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] gave notice of a purpose to present the amendment which I now send to the desk, which I think is generally understood and requires no explanation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 17, line 15, after the words "June 4, 1920," it is proposed to insert the following:

Nor to prohibit the enlistment in addition thereto of flying cadets to the number now authorized by law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think there can be no objection to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana on behalf of the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The reading clerk read as follows:

New York, N. Y., Quarantine Station: For water supply, additional buildings, increased disinfecting facilities, and miscellaneous equipment, including all necessary mechanical equipment, lighting fixtures, etc., $200,000.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New Jersey to withhold his point of order. I know that the amendment is subject to a point of order. It provides an appropriation of $200,000 for the important improvement of a quarantine station at New York. It has no place on this bill except as a very grave emergency matter.

To-day the commissioner of health for the city of New York called at the Capitol to see me. He put the matter on the ground that the quarantine station formerly controlled by the city of New York had been taken over by the Federal authorities, and that he had been able somewhat in conjunction with the Federal authorities to stop the typhus epidemic which threatened the country. He stated that unless something was done immediately by the Federal Government to withstand the typhus epidemic which is threatening our country, he would not be responsible for the conditions.

The city of New York almost alone is standing at the gateway of the Nation to prevent the introduction into this country of this grave disease. My amendment has been estimated for. It is not germane to this bill, I know; but there is a grave emergency. The newspapers in New York are filled with the story, and I believe the amendment is so important that we really ought to violate the rules of the Senate in order to permit it to go on.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, the Calendar is filled with important measures and bills that could be offered as amendments to the Army appropriation bill. We must stop somewhere, and I therefore make the point of order.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey speaks of the Calendar being filled with bills of importance. This is a matter of grave emergency which may ultimately affect the health of the Nation.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, there are certain rules for legislation prescribed by this body. I have just as important an amendment as this, dealing with a subject which should be treated by the Military Affairs Committee, providing that the engineers shall police the harbors along the Atlantic coast to prevent the distribution of oil on the waters. Already two cities have been nearly burned to the ground by reason of that exposure, and while I offered the amendment to the committee, I hesitate to offer it here. It is just as important as the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. Just one word more: The Senator, of course, is within his rights in making the point of order. I repeat, however, that this is a very grave emergency, threatening not New York City alone but the entire Nation. I would not have dreamed of offering it as an amendment under ordinary circumstances. I know that in some respects it perhaps bothers my colleague, as it does, perhaps, the Senator from New Jersey; but this is a national question, and that is my reason for pressing it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. We are operating under certain rules in this body, Mr. President. This amendment has no place on this bill, and under the circumstances I am obliged to insist on the point of order.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. FLETCHER called for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained. The bill is still in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. NEW, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. McKELLAR conferees on the part of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 15975, making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year 1922.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] told me that he had to leave, and he said that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] had asked him to see that no matter was taken up upon the conclusion of the Army bill.

Mr. LODGE. He said the same thing to me.

Mr. JONES of Washington. So the Senator from Kansas asked me to see that no action was taken. The Senator from Idaho asked the Senator from Kansas to see that no action was taken on any measure.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What Senator does my colleague say made the request?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. LODGE. He spoke to me about it also.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Idaho spoke to the Senator from Kansas on the subject. The Senator from Kansas had to leave, and he asked me to see that no action was taken; so, for that reason, I hope my colleague will not move to take up the bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, I knew nothing of that. Did the Senator understand him to mean that we should not even have the bill laid before the Senate?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My intention was, if the bill was taken up, to move to take a recess at this time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I asked the Senator from Kansas if that would preclude the taking up of the naval bill, and he said yes; so, under those circumstances, I shall have to ask my colleague to put off making the motion until Monday morning.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will do that, because I assured one of the Senators upon this side that there would be an opportunity on Monday to call up the joint resolution providing for the repeal of war legislation. There will be an effort to call up that measure the first thing Monday morning in the hope that it will take only a short time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not desire to make the point of no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can move to take a recess now if he cares to do so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope my colleague will move to take a recess.

ATCHAFALAYA, RED, AND BLACK RIVERS.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his motion for a recess for just a moment to let me make a report of a very brief bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have the floor. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator withhold the motion for just a moment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator desires to present a report, I understand?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes. It is a report from the Commerce Committee, authorizing the Mississippi River Commission to make a survey in Louisiana of the Atchafalaya River. I will state that it will not cost any additional money. It comes out of the funds that they already have. They have the necessary information, I think, but this gives them additional authority.

Mr. KING. The bill goes to the calendar, as I understand? The Senator is not asking for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes; I ask to have the bill passed to-night. It will do no good to have it go to the calendar. It is a very important matter down there. I hope the Senator will not object to its immediate consideration.

Mr. KING. I am afraid the Senator is mistaken in assuming that it will not cost anything.

Mr. RANSDELL. It takes no appropriation. The funds are in the hands of the Mississippi River Commission. I am not asking for a dollar of appropriation. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5000) directing the Mississippi River Commission to make an examination and survey of the Atchafalaya, Red, and Black Rivers, and to report plan for protection of their basins from flood waters of the Mississippi River, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an examination and survey, with a report to Congress, shall be made by the Mississippi River Commission, of the Atchafalaya, Black, and Red Rivers in Louisiana, specifying a general plan with recommendations for the execution thereof that will give the greatest measure of protection to the basins of said rivers from the flood waters of the Mississippi River consistent with all other interests of the lower Mississippi Valley.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in view of the agreement which seems to have been entered into in regard to this matter, I will not insist upon my motion; but I think it is rather an unfair advantage that is being taken of the Senate, in view of the brief time which will intervene between now and the final adjournment, for the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to leave the Senate Chamber, to absent himself, depending upon an agreement that such an important bill as the naval appropriation bill would not be taken up during his absence. But in view of the statement of my colleague, and the fact that he is able to make a point of no quorum, and that probably we could not obtain a quorum at this late hour, I withdraw the motion.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, February 28, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 26, 1921.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Rev. James Shera Montgomery, pastor of the Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Our Father which art in heaven, we kneel at the altars of our hearts. Rebuke us, but not in judgment; lay Thy hand upon us but not Thy rod, and receive us again into that divine favor which we can not comprehend. Show us this day the treasures of Thy wisdom that our directive purpose may be for God and our dear homeland. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess from 6 o'clock until 8 o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess from 6 o'clock until 8 o'clock this evening. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. J. Res. 260) appropriating $500,000 to convey cereals for the relief of China, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 14063. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 13944. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution 260, for the relief of the famine-stricken people of China, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15422) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, had agreed to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 49, 72, and 136, had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 21, 22, 28, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 60, 76, 78, 80, 81, 82, 87, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 132, 133, 134, 141, 151, 152, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. OVERMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON THE IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That as used in this act—

"The term 'United States' means the United States and any waters, Territory, or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof except the Isthmian Canal Zone and the Philippine Islands; but if any alien, or any alien seaman, leaves the Canal Zone or any insular possession of the United States and attempts to enter any other place under the jurisdiction of the United States nothing contained in this act shall be construed as permitting him to enter under any other conditions than those applicable to all aliens, or to all alien seamen, respectively.

"The word 'alien' includes any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States, but this definition shall not be held to include Indians of the United States not taxed nor citizens of the islands under the jurisdiction of the United States.

"The term 'immigration act' means the act of February 5, 1917, entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States'; and the term 'immigration laws' includes such act and all laws, conventions, and treaties of the United States relating to the immigration, exclusion, or expulsion of aliens.

"SEC. 2. (a) That the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted under the immigration laws to the United States in any fiscal year shall be limited to 3 per cent of the number of foreign-born persons of such nationality resident in the United States as determined by the United States census of 1910. This provision shall not apply to the following, and they shall not be counted in reckoning any of the percentage limits provided in this act: (1) Government officials, their families, attendants, servants, and employees, (2) aliens in continuous transit through the United States, (3) aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who shall later go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory, (4) aliens visiting the United States as tourists or temporarily for business or pleasure, (5) aliens from countries immigration from which is now regulated in accordance with treaties or agreements, (6) aliens coming from the so-called Asiatic barred zone, as described in section 3 of the immigration act, or (7) aliens who have resided continuously for at least one year in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, the Republic of Mexico, countries of Central or South America, or adjacent islands.

"(b) For the purposes of this act nationality shall be determined by country of birth, but the term 'country' shall not be held to include colonies or dependencies, which colonies or dependencies shall be considered as separate countries.

"(c) The Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor, jointly, shall, as soon as feasible after the passage of this act, prepare a statement showing the number of persons of the various nationalities resident in the United States as determined by the United States census of 1910, which statement shall be the population basis for the purposes of this act, but whenever such population basis is not applicable by reason of changes in political boundaries in foreign countries occurring subsequent to 1910 and resulting in the creation of new countries, the Governments of which are recognized by the United States, or otherwise in the transference of territory from one country to another, such transference being officially recognized by the United States, then the said officials, jointly, shall estimate the number of persons resident in the United States in 1910, who were born within the area now included in such new and other countries, and in the case of such countries such estimate shall be the population basis for the purposes of this act.

"(d) When the maximum number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted in any fiscal year under this act shall have been admitted, all other aliens of such nationality, except as otherwise provided in this act, who may apply for admission during the same fiscal year shall be excluded: Provided, That in the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted in any month shall not exceed 20 per cent of the total number of aliens of such nationality who are admissible in that fiscal year: Provided further, That aliens returning from a temporary visit abroad, aliens who are professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, nurses, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, aliens belonging to any recognized learned profession, or aliens employed as domestic servants may be admitted notwithstanding the maximum number of aliens of the same nationality admissible in the same month or fiscal year, as the case may be, shall have entered the United States; but aliens of the classes included in this proviso who enter the United States before such maximum number shall have entered shall be counted in reckoning the percentage limits provided in this act: Provided further, That in the enforcement of this act preference shall be given so far as possible to the wives and minor children of aliens who are now in the United States and have applied for citizenship in the manner provided by law.

"SEC. 3. That the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall as soon as feasible after the passage of this act, and from time to time thereafter, prescribe rules and regulations necessary to carry the provisions of this act into effect. He shall, as soon as feasible after the passage of this act, publish a statement showing the number of aliens of the various nationalities who may be admitted to the United States between April 1, 1921, and the end of the current fiscal year, and on June 30 thereafter he shall publish a statement showing the number of aliens of the various nationalities who may be admitted during the ensuing fiscal year. He shall also publish monthly statements during the time this act remains in force showing the number of aliens of each nationality already admitted during the then current fiscal year and the number who may be admitted under the provisions of this act during the remainder of such year, but when 75 per cent of the maximum number of any nationality admissible during the fiscal year shall have been admitted such statements shall be issued weekly thereafter. All statements shall be made available for general publication and shall be mailed to all transportation companies bringing aliens to the United States who shall request the same and shall file with the Department of Labor the address to which such statements shall be sent. The Secretary of Labor shall also submit such statements to the Secretary of State, who shall transmit the information contained therein to the proper diplomatic and consular officials of the United States, which officials shall make the same available to persons intending to emigrate to the United States and to others who may apply.

"SEC. 4. That the provisions of this act are in addition to and not in substitution for the provisions of the immigration laws.

"SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect and be enforced on and after April 1, 1921, except sections 1 and 3 and subdivision (c) of section 2, which shall take effect immediately upon the passage of this act, and shall continue in force until June 30, 1922, and the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted during the remaining three months of the current fiscal year shall be limited to one-fourth of the number who are admissible annually as provided in section 2 of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

ALBERT JOHNSON,
WILLIAM N. VAILE,
JOHN E. RAKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

LEBARON B. COLT,
WM. P. DILLINGHAM,
T. P. GORE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and submitted in the accompanying conference report.

The House bill provided for a suspension of immigration to the United States for a period of one year, except certain relatives of citizens of the United States.

The Senate amendment provides that for 15 months, commencing April 1, 1921, immigration to the United States from any country shall be limited to 3 per cent of the persons in the United States born in that country, according to the United States census of 1910, and excepts from the percentage provisions native-born or naturalized citizens of the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, the Republic of Mexico, countries of Central and South America, and adjacent islands.

The conferees have agreed upon the principle and general plan of the Senate amendment, and offer thereto an amendment designed only to make more explicit and definite the text thereof.

The exception with regard to the immigration of citizens of countries of the Western Hemisphere is modified so as to read "aliens who have resided continuously for at least one year" in the various countries of North and South America. In using these words the words of present immigration acts have been followed and possible treaty complications avoided.

Other changes agreed upon by the conferees are for the purpose of clarifying the language.

Whereas the House bill suspended immigration for one year, except certain relatives of naturalized citizens, which number of possible admissions was necessarily uncertain, the Senate amendment providing for the admission of 3 per cent based on the various nationalities in the United States in 1910 admits of an accurate estimate as to the number of immigrants which may be admitted from European countries, as follows:

Northwestern Europe:
Belgium	1,482
Denmark	5,449
France	3,523
Germany	75,040
Netherlands	3,624
Norway	12,116
Sweden	19,956
Switzerland	3,745
United Kingdom	77,206
Total northwestern Europe	202,212
Outside northwestern Europe:
Austria	50,117
Bulgaria	345
Serbia	139
Montenegro	161
Italy	40,294
Portugal	1,781
Rumania	1,978
Spain	663
Russia	51,974
Turkey in Europe	967
Turkey in Asia	1,792
Total outside northwestern Europe	153,249
Total northwestern Europe	202,212
Grand total	355,461

No provisions of present immigration laws are removed, either with regard to those who may be admitted from countries under the percentage plan of restriction or from the countries of North and South America. Provisions of treaties, conventions, and agreements with various countries are not disturbed by the bill as amended.

Amendment to the title: The Senate amendment amends the title so as to read "An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States," and the House recedes.

ALBERT JOHNSON,
WILLIAM N. VAILE,
JOHN E. RAKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will yield for a question.

Mr. GARRETT. There is no desire on my part to occasion any delay, but we have been accustomed to have a roll call shortly after meeting, and does not the gentleman think that we ought to have a quorum present?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have no doubt that a quorum will be in during the consideration.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of no quorum. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed and the Sergeant at Arms was directed to notify absent Members.

The Clerk called the roll and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Cantrill	Dooling	Fields
Andrews, Nebr.	Casey	Doremus	Fish
Ayres	Clark, Fla.	Doughton	Flood
Bacharach	Clark, Mo.	Dunn	Gallagher

Kitchin	Parker	Scully	Wilson, Ill.
Kleczka	Patterson	Sears	Winslow
Kreider	Perlman	Siemp	Wise

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and eight Members have answered to their names, and a quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill which has been introduced and is known as the liberty calendar bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill with reference to the liberty calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON THE IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, as shown by the conference report on the Senate amendment to H. R. 14461, the conferees of the House and the Senate are in agreement on a plan to restrict temporarily immigration to the United States. We have now begun a yes-or-no proposition. The matter now embraced in H. R. 14461 is such that those in the House who believe it to be for the best interest of the United States to temporarily restrict immigration to the United States for a period of 15 months, beginning April 1, may vote for the measure. Such a vote will mean that for that period the number of persons who may come to the United States as immigrants from the countries in Europe will be at the maximum about 443,200. Persons coming temporarily as visitors or for business purposes are not to be included in the count. Further, there are certain exempted classes, such as professional actors, teachers, ministers, who are to be counted in making the maximum number; but when that number is reached they can be exempted and still come in. So the maximum from any country is not an iron-clad maximum, although it positively and absolutely fixes the maximum number who may come as immigrants from any country during the time the measure is in effect.

The bill as finally agreed upon restricts immigration to 3 per cent of immigrants from certain countries in Europe, the 3 per cent base being determined by the number of persons from those countries who were in the United States as shown by the census of 1910.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; for a question.

Mr. SABATH. Do I understand the gentleman to state that the number that would be permitted to come under the 3 per cent provision would be about four hundred and some thousand?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. On the figures I have, 443,268 is the maximum. That covers a period of 15 months.

Mr. SABATH. So the report showing 355,000 is on the basis of only one year?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; those figures are for one year; by adding the quarter you get it. Members will note that the words of the present immigration laws are used in the bill with reference to admissions from contiguous territories and from countries on this hemisphere.

People from Canada, people from Mexico, people from the Bahama Islands or from any country in South America may come to the United States by fulfilling this requirement of the present immigration laws; that is, by passing the illiteracy test, paying the head tax, showing a clean bill of health, and ability to support one's self. The bill also is in such shape that it does not affect or change——

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; for one question.

Mr. LAZARO. The statement was made recently that the Senate bill with the 3 per cent clause would shut out more immigrants than the House bill that prohibited immigration except relatives. What is the gentleman's opinion about that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Well, that is a debatable question. It may do so. At any rate, it fixes a maximum. Of course, it is clear to all that the House bill which suspended immigration except for blood relatives of naturalized persons, who are, of course, citizens, would admit the incoming of an uncertain number of these relatives, and I agree that such provision might permit some fraud in statements as to who were blood relatives, but the Senate bill makes a hard and fast figure of 3 per cent of people from countries based on the people from those countries in the United States on the 1910 census. It is a hard and fast figure. That figure is about 443,000.

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; for a question.

Mr. BOX. At the bottom of page 2 of the report will be found a provision in reference to the admission of domestic servants.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BOX. Are they under the provisions of the bill to be charged to the 3 per cent, or can they continue to come on indefinitely?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They are charged in the arrivals until the maximum per month is reached, and then the overflow, if any, is admitted, without being counted against the maximum in month or year as the case may be.

Mr. BOX. How greatly will that increase the number coming?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not think the excess will amount to very much. The "in free" provision under certain conditions is necessary to prevent possible individual hardships, and answers criticism on that score. It is not planned to shut out by ones and twos those who have arrived at our gates, and who pass all the other immigration requirements. Gentlemen will notice the clause which provides that not over 20 per cent admitted in a year may come in a month. It is that to which I have just been referring.

Mr. PURNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let me finish one statement, if possible. Certain people are exempt; that is to say professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, nurses, musicians, and so on. They are counted in the quota, and if the quota for the month should run out, then these exempted classes still come in free of count. That is all there is to the provision. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PURNELL. I think I heard everything the gentleman said except the statement as to the basis of determining the 3 per cent and owing to the confusion I could not hear that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will state that again. For 15 months, beginning April 1, immigrants may come to the United States to the number of 3 per cent of the people from the countries from which they came were in the United States as shown by the Census of 1910.

Mr. PURNELL. But what is the basis for the determination of the 3 per cent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. For example, let us take any one country, say Germany.

Mr. SABATH. There is none.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Three per cent of Germans in the country on the 1910 census become the basis for all of those who may come here from the territory once embraced in the confines of Germany——

Mr. PURNELL. But why not take the 1920 census?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is not completed, and to use such a base would add additional confusion owing to the newly created countries in Europe.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Does not the domestic servant proposition come up against the contract labor law?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; for the present immigration laws now cover the entire contract labor situation. Present laws permit a citizen to bring in his personal servants or domestic servants.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I had some difficulty some time ago for a friend who hired a domestic servant who was in Cuba or some place near there, and the authorities attempted to exclude her because she had a contract to come in here and be a domestic servant.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the person who had contracted for her services had gone to Cuba and brought her back, that servant could be brought in under the law. At any rate she was probably especially exempted and brought in.

Mr. REBER. In speaking of the 3 per cent basis upon the number of Germans——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Any country.

Mr. REBER. Who does the gentleman regard as Germans?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. All of the people who have come to the United States in the past, as they came in designated the country in which they were born and established their nationality. Also that is carried in the census returns. We use the 1910 census because it is more certain, European boundaries not then having been changed as now. A man who was a subject of the German Empire, having arrived prior to 1910, figures in the base for the determination of the 3 per cent which came in from what were the confines of the German Empire. The number from that particular country for the 15 months is estimated at about 93,800, and not the 150,000 or 200,000 or even 300,000 that some newspapers have claimed in their discussions of this bill. With this act, the number of Germans who may come for 15 months is limited to 93,800. Without the act an unlimited number may come.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will.

Mr. SABATH. How would they be able to tell how many came from Alsace-Lorraine or from that section of Germany that now is a part of Poland? How will you be able to tell how many came from Austria-Hungary, in view of the fact that that monarchy has disbanded, and you have Czechoslovakia and Jugoslovakia, and other independent nations? How will you be able, according to the census of 1910, to tell how many of those people came from those different independent nations that have been recognized by the United States as independent nations?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman will notice, there is a provision in the bill which says that three Secretaries of departments shall act as a board with the power to determine approximately the number who might be accredited to any one of the new countries. That is to say, the 3 per cent figure will be secured on the population in the United States in 1910 from Austria-Hungary, and an arbitrary division will have to be made to fit the present political divisions.

Mr. SABATH. Does the gentleman know that the population of Austria-Hungary was 52,000,000 before the war and that now the population of Austria is about 8,000,000 and the upper and lower Austria is about 9,000,000, making, out of 52,000,000, only 17,000,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Even so; of all the people in present Austria or any part of the new countries that were once in Austria, a total of 62,646 of those Austrians or former Austrians may come to the United States in 15 months. That number may come, and no more, unless they are in the exempted classes of visitors and travelers, or members of the professions, or teachers, or nurses, or servants, and so on.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. In other words, the 3 per cent is on the population in this country and has nothing to do with the population over in Europe?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Quite so.

Mr. PELL. Does it not seem rather extraordinary to admit one hundred and twenty-eight thousand and odd immigrants from countries with which we are now legally at war and only 178,000 from countries that fought beside us?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Not so extraordinary as to leave the doors open for all the peoples of all the countries, friends and foes, allies and enemies to come.

One necessity for this bill, I will say to the gentleman, is this: I think everyone believes that in the coming Congress one of the first acts will be a declaration of peace, and, if statements are to be believed, it is believed that if steamship accommodations hold up to or increase present facilities there will be quite an exodus to the United States from one or more countries which have been the principal enemies of the United States.

Mr. PELL. Would it not be better to let the next Congress settle its own problems instead of rushing a bill like this through?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This Congress represents the United States now and the next Congress will represent it then.

Mr. PELL. This is an entirely new policy.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This policy has been debated and discussed, and particularly the percentage plan, ever since it was first put into a bill by Senator DILLINGHAM in 1911 or 1912, following the investigations of the Immigration Commission.

Mr. PELL. Well, this particular thing has not been discussed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The percentage plan has had more discussion than all other plans combined. Of course, this plan and all other plans will be opposed by all who oppose immigration.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is going to open up the Chinese proposition?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is not; or the Japanese question. Present laws and all treaties and agreements are kept in effect.

Mr. MILLER. Then it has no relation to the Chinese coming into this country?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No.

Mr. BANKHEAD. This report shows that in the 15 months covered only 1,482 citizens of Belgium may be admitted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Those figures are for the 12-month period.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Seventy-five thousand Germans, 50,000 Austrians, and 51,000 Russians may be admitted?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; in one year; and one-quarter more for the whole 15-month period.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would like the gentleman to state the reason that justified the placing of this basis upon the racial group.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It does not. Several bills have been introduced to make the percentage on the racial group. This plan admits by nationalities. Let gentlemen be not alarmed about any figures for any country that seem like small figures. I call attention to the fact that the average immigration from Belgium for the years 1910, 1911, 1913, and 1914 was 5,690. The number which came in from Belgium for the fiscal year 1920 was 6,500. Belgium's maximum immigration under this bill will be small, for the reason that it has never been large.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; but suppose there are quite a number of people from those countries who make very desirable immigrants who desire to come to this country in larger ratio than they have come in the past. They would be precluded? And these others would not be precluded?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We can not say by law that we would prefer one class to another. They are placed under restriction, all alike.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But you place them under racial groupings.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; not under racial groupings, but under geographical groupings.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GARD. The House bill having been materially changed by the Senate bill, I wish the gentleman in his time would explain the differences between the Senate bill and the bill which the conferees have agreed upon.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have endeavored to point that out, but there is difficulty here this morning in being heard. We have many visitors, both on the floor and in the galleries.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Just state the point of difference presented by the conference report between the Senate bill and the conferees' bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. One was a suspension, except blood relatives of citizens; the other is a percentage restriction. If the gentleman will permit, I will reserve part of my time, and will yield to two or three opponents of the measure.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MASON. I would like to know whether it is proposed under this law that where people come in who are relatives they are to be charged up on the 3 per cent basis?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MASON. And is there any provision in the bill which gives a preference to those who have relatives here who are citizens of the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. The provision reads as follows:

Provided further, That in the enforcement of this act preference shall be given so far as possible to the wives and minor children of aliens who are now in the United States and have applied for citizenship in the manner provided by law.

Those relatives have that preference.

Mr. MASON. What opportunity will we have for the discussion of the merits of this legislation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am about to yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL], a member of the committee, who opposes the measure.

Mr. MASON. It is a very important matter, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to delay any legislation, but I think it is so important that we ought to have a quorum.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman will notice that it is extremely hard this morning to make one's self heard here. But the proposition is simple. Those who wish to restrict immigration for 15 months may vote for this conference report. If they do not want the report, they can vote it down. There is no other plan to regulate, restrict, or suspend immigration that is possible under the circumstances.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I want to know if there is to be any opportunity for others to discuss the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] has control of the time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will try to be as liberal as I can in the allotment of time, which is running rapidly. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, the bill we are asked to pass here to-day is a method of restricting immigration based upon an idea or system which has never been discussed on the floor of the House heretofore. It is legislation that has been agreed upon in conference. For the first time in the history of the Nation we are asked to legislate so that immigrants who desire to come to America shall be limited to 3 per cent of the nationals of that particular country who were in America on April 1, 1910. No logical reason can be urged why the basic foundations of this legislation, if it is desirable, should not be in accordance with the census of 1920. The census figures of 1920 will be ready not later than on April 15 of this year. The Director of the Census has told me so personally, and as chairman of the Census Committee I am in a position to state that they will be ready not later than April 15, 1921.

The net result of using the census of 1910, gentlemen, is to permit the entry into the United States from Germany and Austria, countries with which we are still officially at war, one-third of all the immigrants who are to be allowed to come into America during the next year.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does not the gentleman admit that that is a mighty good class of people?

Mr. SIEGEL. They are a mighty good class of people. From Germany you will have coming over here every skilled man who can possibly come over, and when he arrives he is not going to do the rough work of this country. Bear that in mind.

We turn to the Allies who fought the war with us—France, Italy, and Poland—and under this bill we would take fewer people from those countries than we will receive from the enemy countries with which we are not yet officially at peace. During the late struggle Italy saved the Allies twice from defeat. The people of Italian descent in America made extraordinary sacrifices for our country during the war. So far as the Serbians are concerned, just 139 will be allowed to enter here each year under this legislation. Frenchmen may come to America to the extent of 3,500 per year. I have a table here before me showing the exact number that may come in annually under this bill. It is more correct than the one that the committee has in its report, because the committee in its report have forgotten that there is such a country as Greece in existence, and have left it out entirely in its calculations and figures. The following is the number of persons who can come to the United States under the provision of this proposed law:

Belgium	1,482
Denmark	5,449
France	3,523
Germany	75,040
Netherlands	3,624
Norway	12,116
Sweden	19,956
Switzerland	3,745
United Kingdom	77,206
Total northwestern Europe	202,212
Austria-Hungary	50,117
Bulgaria	345
Serbia	139
Montenegro	161
Greece	3,038
Italy	40,294
Portugal	1,781
Rumania	1,978
Russia	51,974
Spain	663
Turkey in Europe	967
Turkey in Asia	1,792
Total outside northwestern Europe	153,249
Northwestern Europe total	202,212
Grand total	355,461

From Turkey in Europe and Asia combined, including all the Armenians who desire to escape persecution over there, not more than 3,600 can come in in any one year. The absurdity of the entire proposition is manifest, and the most foolish part of the legislation is the fact that——

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Would there be any material modification of these figures if they were based on the census of 1920?

Mr. SIEGEL. Considerably. The reason why they adopt the 1910 census is because they do not desire to have immigration come to this country from the very men who furnished a large part of the armies of the United States in the late war.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. If this was based on the census of 1920 would the gentleman support the bill?

Mr. SIEGEL. If it was based on the census of 1920 with at least a 5 per cent basis, plus a humanitarian provision, I might seriously consider supporting the bill. By a humanitarian provision I mean this, that there are numerous cases of boys and girls 16 and 17 years of age who arrive in this country who have escaped from the other side, who can not pass the literacy test, and they are returned to Europe. Parents of 53 or 54 years of age, not 55, who can not read 40 words, are returned to Europe. We ask a humanitarian provision that will cover those cases and thus relieve cases of the most terrible suffering.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If you substitute the census of 1920, does it change the figures as to the admissibility of the Germans, Austrians, and Russians; and if so, how much?

Mr. SIEGEL. Considerably, because there has been practically no German immigration during the past 10 years, from 1910 to 1920. And I will say this, that Senator DILLINGHAM never anticipated the 3 per cent proposition being passed. He desires to see this question determined by a sense of fairness. Neither did he anticipate that our committee would ever agree to such a proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He voted for it.

Mr. SIEGEL. I am not going to discuss what he said in conference. I know he considered a 5 per cent basis and a humanitarian clause extremely desirable. Once this bill passes, that decision will be held by foreign nations to be our determination regarding the right of aliens to come here. We have constantly heard that the aliens from northwestern Europe have not produced any of the social unrest in America. Those who have made this statement have endeavored to have the public at large believe that the social unrest which is alleged to exist is caused in those States where the so-called new immigration has settled. The correct way of looking at this proposition is to take those States where the old immigration exists and to see how the votes were cast for President, particularly for Debs. The State of Wisconsin is an old immigration State. It has a very large number of Germans. The voters of that State cast 11½ per cent of their votes for Debs. Another old immigration State is Minnesota. Scandinavians predominate there beyond dispute. It cast 8 per cent of its vote for Debs. In the State of New York, which is one of the so-called new immigration States, Debs received barely 7 per cent of the vote cast for President. Where are the separate language schools found? In Wisconsin we find the separate German schools. In Nebraska the same condition prevailed until recently. When discussion arises regarding higher wage standards, every sensible, thinking, fair-minded citizen knows that it was when the new immigration came into America that wages rose. It is admitted by everyone that in the Southern States wages are low. The reason for that is that there is less than 2 per cent of aliens in the population of those States.

If fairness and justice were to be subserved, a different basis of calculation for the entry of immigrants would have been adopted, and if the percentage basis is to be the foundation thereof, then the census of 1920 should have been used.

When war was declared against Germany and Austria we did not take the census of 1910 as a basis for calling men into the service under the selective draft law. It is obvious that no reason exists for the adoption of the 1910 census as the basis of immigration legislation during the year of 1921, except the desire to forget the service which was rendered to this country by the hundreds of thousands of aliens who had come to America during the last 11 years and waived exemption in order to enter the Army. They fought and died for America, yet when the question arises as to whether their surviving relatives are to be permitted to enter here, they are told that they do not count as a basis of calculation.

But those who were our German and Austrian aliens do count as a basis of calculation. What is fair for one country should be fair for all.

There were 1,722 men in the United States who gave up their first papers in order to avoid entering the Army. One-half came from the old immigration countries, namely, Norway and Sweden. The new immigration practically produced no cowards of this kind.

Mr. Speaker, Members of Congress, moved on by hysteria, urged on by propaganda, excited by cartoons, and pushed forward by the same forces which for many years have endeavored to bar the doors of America to good, law-abiding aliens, prepared to do the rough, hard work of the Nation, seeking in numerous cases an escape from oppression and persecution in Europe, often flying to America as political refugees, are to be kept out under this act under a percentage system.

The sensible American citizen is bound to wake up and to learn that this bill is bound to discriminate against would-be immigrants who are morally, physically, and mentally fit to be admitted into this country. Whence will come the men to do the unskilled labor of America? will be the question which the proponents of this measure will be unable to answer within the next few months, when the Republic sees a wave of real prosperity, and when American merchants and business men go forward with their trade with South America, Europe, and Asia.

Every American citizen must condemn the adoption of a 3 per cent method based upon the census of 1910, and the President, I feel confident, knowing of the loyalty, devotion, and patriotism of the millions of men and women who have heretofore come into America, helping to make this country larger, bigger, and more prosperous, will look at this legislation in a different light, unmoved by those forces of prejudices and undeterred from performing that duty which is his under the Constitution.

The President knows that since the new immigration has come to America that wages have risen and progress in education has been the greatest. He will take the figures and he will find that wherever they have settled they have encouraged appropriations for education, and that illiteracy has been reduced.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIEGEL. This bill should be laid aside until there has been proper consideration of this subject and a proper percentage adopted, if the percentage system is to be used. It is for the best interests of America to act wisely, carefully, and deliberately upon a question which must affect millions of human beings. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, in five minutes it is absolutely impossible to discuss a matter of such grave importance as this. I can only make a few general observations.

We have been going through this Great War, which was the natural producer of a great deal of hysteria. Men who were sane upon most subjects became insane. Propaganda has been passed around so that now the American people are awake to the fear that we are in great danger of the bolshevists coming in here, as though the American people did not have enough patriotism and enough education to protect ourselves against some men who come in here trying to teach us some new form of government.

Before the Committee on Foreign Affairs the other day, when the matter was under discussion—and it was not in executive session—I asked the gentleman representing the Secretary of State, upon the question of Russia, if he was afraid of the bolshevists coming in here and teaching our American boys to be bolshevists and to be against this Government and he said absolutely not.

Now, as a matter of fact, we have the same interests and we are all in the same situation here in this House, and I do not want to indulge in any lecture. You all have the same privileges that I have. I am representing my constituents the best I know how. But all that is necessary to pass a bill here, whether it is for the robbery of the Treasury or the looting of Uncle Sam's money, is to make a howl about immigration. As a matter of fact, it has been a part of the policy of this Government to encourage immigration, and you are all immigrants, everyone of you. Your parents were immigrants. We are their descendants, and yet we are starting in here now to gather about ourselves a cloak of exclusiveness and to say we are so much better than any other people in the world that a man can become popular among the hysterical people of this country when he says we must stop immigration.

You all broke your promise yesterday in passing a bill to continue your war measure, so that no man can come from the United Kingdom to this country without the recommendation of his master, the King. If he comes from India, he must have the approval and recommendation of the King. If he comes from Ireland or South Africa, the same is true. Two or three days ago you passed a bill in violation of your promise that you would repeal war measures, and you have reenacted the worst war measure which has done more than any other to interfere with the peace and comfort of the people of this country.

Now, they propose to say to Germany if you have 100 people here we will let 3 more come in. They propose to say to Italy if you have 400 people here we will let 3 out of every 100 come in. There are people in the country who fought for this country, whose aged father and minor children are over there being held, some starving to-day in the capitals of Europe waiting for a visé, for an opportunity to get a passport. What are you doing for the people of Russia—you want their business, you want their trade, and under the provisions of this law a certain number from Russia will be admitted, but your war laws you have reenacted provide that they must have a passport. A passport? In the name of God, from whom—from Lenin and Trotski?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. MASON. It is a great thing in this country to change your whole policy, the policy laid down by the fathers when they made the Declaration of Independence against Great Britain, and the foundation of their complaint against Great Britain was that they controlled the immigration of this country. It is a wonderful situation here proposed, to change the whole policy, and you allow seven minutes for discussion. It has never been considered by a committee in the House so far as I know; it has never been considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which I am a member, and you are saying now, which is an insult to every nation, that only 3 per cent of the people they have here now may come for the next year and three months. Mr. Speaker, no man can do the subject justice. I do not want to delay the game, but I would like permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I object.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I think if gentlemen will be fair—we represent our constituents. I have seven minutes to discuss this most important measure, and I hope the gentleman will give me a chance to analyze this bill.

Mr. McCLINTIC. If the gentleman wants to do that, let him ask unanimous consent and get more time.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 10 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time be extended 10 minutes, and that he shall occupy that time. Is there objection?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of Members who wish to be heard on this question, and if the gentleman from Illinois is to have 15 minutes the rest of us are going to be cut out.

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, may I suggest to the gentleman from Washington and the gentleman from Wyoming that there is a great deal of confusion as to this conference report. Members on both sides say they do not understand it. I suggest the wisdom and necessity of extending the time and let the gentleman from Washington control it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Reserving the right to object, I think if the House will agree to let the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] state his position, there will be enough time remaining if the House will keep in good order. It is idle to talk as I did this morning, attempting to explain the amendment, when I could not be heard five seats back, although my voice will carry a block and a half.

Mr. WINGO. When we try to get information they immediately shut us off. I have studied this very closely, and if we can not have time I will object to anyone having an extension of time. I am willing that the gentleman from Washington shall control the time.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Illinois by extending the time 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is asking unanimous consent.

Mr. GARD. Then I move to amend the request for unanimous consent so as to allow 30 additional minutes for the consideration of this bill, the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Washington, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we have many important matters before the House to-day. I believe that with a judicious use of the hour the gentleman from Washington controls, it will be sufficient to fully inform the House in regard to this conference report.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] five minutes more.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, under this proposed legislation the countries who have the most immigrants will be allowed to send the largest number of immigrants. Now, there will be abundant time to fairly consider this matter of immigration into this country at the next session. The people have indorsed the Republican Party to do that thing. Inside of 40 or 50 days everything can be provided by law. We will be here and we can discuss openly and fairly the whole matter, and those Members who come here new and fresh from the people will be able, perhaps, to enlighten us about the wishes of the people on this question of immigration.

Why the need of forcing this sort of legislation through without discussion and without education? I have been a student of this matter, somewhat in a feeble way, for many years, and this is the first time I ever heard of the proposition—"Germany, you have 100 people here and you may send 3 more; Ireland, you have nobody here and you can not send anybody; go to the master and get a passport." England can unload her paupers, if the King wants to get rid of them, and put them into our poorhouses, but the people that come from Norway and Sweden can only have 3 more out of every 100 that they had here in 1910.

In the great city that is a part of my district, and all over the State of Illinois, which I represent, there are hundreds and hundreds of people who have made a success here in the United States who want to bring their aged and dependent people here. They are not a burden to the American people. They are consumers, and they become patrons of the farmer and the manufacturer, and the son or brother who has been able to lay by his money to take care of those old people ought to be allowed to bring them in. He spends his money here. They do not come in competition, many of them, with the labor of this country, but under this bill that you propose now for the next 15 months the people here, weighted down and broken hearted, waiting for a renewal of their family relations, finding out for the first time those who are still living and wanting to help them to come here, are told that they can not do it. You shut out all of the people of Russia, taking this bill together with your reenactment of the war law. Suppose a man wants to come here from some one of the various parts of that great Russian territory. How is he going to come here? How can he get in? There is no one there under the law to give him a passport. We can not recognize and do not recognize under this administration the soviet government. As a matter of fact, you close them out entirely, and, whether you like it or not, it is that class of people that you are voting against and working against. You are also voting and working against the Italians, Bohemians, Norwegians, Swedes, Poles, and Jews who want to bring their friends in here. They fought with us. The Italian-Americans and all adopted Americans who went from the city of Chicago brought back glory on account of their own conduct to our flag and to our country, but you say to them, "There are 100 of you people here, and you can pick out 3 more whom you may bring in now for the next 15 months." Again, I say you have gotten into a situation of hysteria. The American people can protect themselves against the bolshevists and against any man who comes here to preach the doctrine of government destruction by force. We know how to handle them in Chicago.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have objected to others extending their remarks in the RECORD, and I have to be consistent and object.

Mr. MASON. You know a man may be consistent and be wrong.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, I think the last remark of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] was very appropriate, that we may make a mistake in being too consistent. That remark was made in view of the comment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] that he had to be consistent and prevent the gentleman from Illinois from extending his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Not now, because there is another consistency that I want to pursue.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The gentleman has made a reference, and I want to reply to it.

Mr. VAILE. I do not think that reference is one which requires a reply.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. VAILE. I want to add that there is such a thing as being too consistent on matters of national policy. For many years, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] has pointed out, although he did not view it from quite that angle, we have pursued a national policy of not being careful about who came to the United States or what should be the elements of our population. I wish to comment upon that suggestion.

It has been also stated in argument that we are all immigrants, or the sons of immigrants. If that means that we or our ancestors all came from some other country, of course, it is true, but I submit that it means absolutely nothing whatsoever in argument, because it ignores the great fundamental truth which some people in the United States would have us forget that the people of the United States have a distinct European history, that they are of distinct racial stock, that they have a distinct language, that they brought to this country 300 years ago particular conceptions of Government, that they worked those conceptions of Government into a constitution of their own, and that under that constitution they have developed the most just, wise, and liberal laws of any nation on the face of this globe, laws which have given us a country now attracting the people from all parts of the world. What is that history and that racial stock and that language? That racial stock is, as I shall endeavor to prove to you, at least three-fourths of the Nordic race. It is not the only good race in the world, but it happens to be the race of most of the people who are here. That distinct language is the English language; that distinct history is the history of the constitutional Governments of western Europe, and particularly the history of England, from which we derive our jurisprudence. Whatever help we have got, and we have obtained a whole lot of it from the red blood of other lands, has been by addition to what we already had, not by any change in its form or substance. Going a little more into details, who are the people of the United States? By the first census taken right after the Revolutionary War our total population was figured at about three and a quarter millions.

Patrick Henry, in his "Give me liberty or give me death" speech, said 15,000,000, but that was oratory. Of that three and a quarter millions, 2,600,000 were people of English-speaking stock—coming from England, Ireland, and Scotland. Of the 2,600,000, a little over 2,300,000 were people from England. What is the situation to-day? By the 1900 census we have about 34 per cent of people and by the 1910 census about 35 per cent of people who themselves were born in some other country than the United States or who had one ancestor born in some other country. About one-third of that 34 and 35 per cent, by the 1910 census, are of English-speaking birth or parentage. In other words, only about one-quarter of our present population is of non-English-speaking stock.

Other stocks are fine, and we have obtained lots of strength from them; but a nation, as was suggested very appropriately by somebody at the peace conference, is a country where they have a history of their own, a language of their own, institutions of their own, and enough national consciousness to preserve them. We are starting here this very day on a policy of preserving what we have. We are glad to welcome others who will come with us and be absorbed with us and be like us, and that is one reason why we have selected the census of 1910. We may have made a mistake in selecting that census, but it can not be much of a mistake in any event, and if it is a mistake at all we shall have 15 months in which to find it out.

And why should gentlemen who are opposed to any restriction of immigration stand up here and object to such a liberal provision as will allow upward of 40,000 from Italy? Why should gentlemen who do not entirely agree with my view stand up here and object to applying the same percentage rates to people from Germany and Austria, countries which have given us some of our best citizens in the past? [Applause.] We shall soon be formally as well as actually at peace, and we should not then discriminate against those countries.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; briefly.

Mr. BLANTON. Under this proposed legislation we have a restriction which will reduce immigration to 500,000 or less for 15 months' time. Without this proposed legislation we have probably no restriction. Is that so?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. The point is here that without some restriction anybody in the world, except China and some Asiatic countries, who can pass the tests of the present immigration law may come to the United States, whether they are needed or not.

Mr. BLANTON. But this restricts to a certain number?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is correct.

Mr. RAKER. Is not the gentleman going to yield a little time to some Members on this side of the House?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I want to do so, but I will submit——

Mr. RAKER. Does not the gentleman think he ought to do so?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; but I want to submit the situation to my fellow conferee and see if he will not agree with me. Our time is now about out—will be out within about 15 minutes. Numerous queries are being made and detailed statements are wanted concerning the bill. If Members will take time on the floor to discuss all of the intricacies and angles of the whole immigration problem, the gavel will fall at 12 o'clock noon and find us still at it.

Mr. RAKER. Let me call attention.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How much time does the gentleman want? I will give him five minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington is being consumed.

Mr. SABATH. I have been promised by the gentleman from Washington some time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. SABATH. And I think I am entitled to some time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] five minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I fully appreciate that it matters not how iniquitous and how discriminatory this bill is, in the great desire to "save" the Nation of the imminent imaginary danger which is claimed threatens our country from immigration, the majority of the Members will vote for it. Mr. Speaker, I am more than satisfied that if the Members of this House could dismiss from their minds the misleading reports, statements, and articles, and others their strong prejudice, this bill would not receive the approval of the House.

Mr. Speaker, on the morning of the 6th of December, and before the House convened, the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, unwarranted and in violation of the rules and precedents of this House, reported a bill which had not been introduced in the House nor referred to the committee. The bill, however, was amended and humanized on the floor of the House so that when it finally passed it was a fair and reasonable, though unnecessary, measure. Notwithstanding that the House was unduly hasty in considering and passing the bill, I was pleased with the point of view that was displayed by the majority of the Members that day. Though the bill as amended on the floor of the House suspended immigration for a period of 12 months, it did not exclude the blood relatives of those now resident in the United States, and thus made it possible to bring about the reunion of families. It provided that a citizen of the United States who is a resident of the United States may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor, send for an otherwise admissible wife, parent, grandparent, unmarried son or brother under 21 years of age, unmarried or widowed daughter or sister, grandson under 16 years of age whose father is dead, and any alien who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and who is a resident of the United States, may make application to bring in an admissible husband or wife, unmarried son under 21 years of age, or unmarried or widowed daughter.

Mr. Speaker, the bill also authorized the Secretary of Labor the right of discretion to waive the literacy test of such relatives.

The Senate has stricken out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and substituted in lieu thereof a complete new bill embodying a new principle never considered by this House, namely, the so-called percentage basis. Mr. Speaker, the House conferees instead of endeavoring to carry out the action of the House succeeded in eliminating the only two favorable provisions in the Senate bill—namely, the provision that excluded from the 3 per cent ratio aliens returning from temporary visit abroad, aliens who are professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, nurses, ministers of any religious denominations, professors, or persons employed as domestic servants, and also the provision that the Secretary of Labor may in individual cases admit aliens in excess of the maximum number when, in his opinion, such action is justifiable as a measure of humanity.

Mr. Speaker, the bill as agreed upon by the conferees now before the House is so uncertain in many of its provisions that it will create not only complications but will cause to thousands of those unfortunate peoples, most of whom are desirous of coming for the purpose of joining their relatives, others again who are fleeing from oppression, persecution, and starvation, hardships impossible to describe.

Mr. Speaker, the bill as amended and passed by the House made it clear that no one but the blood relatives and a few clearly designated and exempted classes could come. This bill provides that 3 per cent of any nationality residing in the United States are permitted to come. The Senate, realizing the uncertainty that this provision would cause, has provided that reports should be made from time to time as to the number of any given nationality that have already been admitted. This provision was intended to safeguard those desiring to come, so when they reach our shores they will not be turned back because their quota has been reached. If the committee had only considered how impossible it will be to bring that information to the anxious people who have secured passage on ships in the ports of the various countries, I can not help but believe that they would have hesitated before adopting this uncertain provision. I would rather see twenty—yes, fifty—aliens being estopped and prevented from coming than to see one deported after reaching our shores.

No one who is familiar with the trials and hardships that such aliens are subjected to before reaching this country can appreciate how justified I am in making this statement. In fact, I would rather see our doors completely closed than this narrow steel or iron gate partially opened, because then, when the 3 per cent is reached, the gates abruptly shut and many are bound to be crushed.

This bill will also discriminate against the wives and children of those who come from the countries which have secured their independence but, unfortunately, have not been recognized by the United States. It will also close the doors to political refugees and those fleeing from religious persecution. The provision that the census of 1910 should govern will discriminate against the people who were former subjects of Austria-Hungary, and of Germany, but who have secured their freedom and independence, and who no longer are known as Austro-Hungarians or Germans, but now known as French, Alsace-Lorrainers, Czecho-Slovaks, Poles, and Jugo-Slavs. No one can deny that these people that are so discriminated against in this bill are the very people that have shown the very greatest amount of loyalty and patriotism during the greatest hour of our need.

The time nor do the rules of the House permit me to insert the number that will come from the various countries, and I only regret that the membership of this House is not given a chance and opportunity to study these figures as embodied in the report of the conferees.

If that would be possible, I feel that many a Member would not cast his vote for this iniquitous, un-American, harsh, and inhumane measure.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROMJUE. How much time is there remaining?

The SPEAKER. Six minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I think I have six minutes.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be notified when I have consumed five minutes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Before beginning will the gentleman permit one question. I see on the thirteenth page the words "for the purpose of this act nationality shall be determined by country or birth, but the term 'country' shall not be held to include colonies or dependencies, which colonies or dependencies shall be considered as separate countries." Now, the question is, take, for instance, Ireland. Would it be a separate country, or can England absorb all the 3 per cent coming here and Ireland be shut out? That is a question that appeals to me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If it is considered part of the British Empire, it does.

Several gentlemen rose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I can only answer one at a time.

Mr. RAKER. There is no chance for any Members on this side of the House if the gentleman only has six minutes.

The SPEAKER. There will be abundant time if the House so desires. The time has not been fixed yet, and if the House desires to hear gentlemen, it has control of the time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Now, gentlemen, I ask not to be interrupted for about four minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Before you make that request, may I ask a question? Is the gentleman aware of the report that appears in to-day's Post showing that the Federation of Labor is opposed to this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not think the great body of the Federation of Labor has acted on this matter; their leaders here may have acted in opposition, but if they have it would not make any difference. [Applause.] Their leaders acted ahead of the last election, and with what result?

Mr. FOCHT. What language is that printed in? Is it Yiddish?

Mr. SABATH. No; it is the Washington Post.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this is more than a question of labor's desires. Besides, the debate is not entitled to cover the whole immigration problem. We are trying to discuss what is in the Senate amendment to the House bill as amended in conference. I have tried to explain the provisions.

The whole thing simmers now to this: There has been a demand for steps, some legislation, that might act as a bar to an influx of immigration from all the countries of Europe greater than we, the people of the United States, can stand, particularly at this time when there is much unemployment. This measure is temporary, pure and simple. The objections of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] are met in a provision to the clause which I desire to call to your particular attention, the one that is marked (d) at the bottom of page 2 of the report:

Provided further, That aliens returning from a temporary visit abroad, aliens who are professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, nurses, ministers of any religious denomination, * * * may be admitted, notwithstanding the maximum number of aliens of the same nationality—

And so forth.

It provides that they may come in and shall be counted up to the maximum, but when that maximum is reached they shall still come in. An alien returning from a visit may come in, no matter what the count. Business men and tourists may come in. This legislation is designed pure and simple, my friends, to shut down for 15 months on the number of immigrants who are disposing of everything they have got in nearly all of the European countries in the effort to get to the United States, the effects of which we saw during the six months up to January 1, and which now have caused, this very morning, 20 ships to be out in New York Harbor unloadable, even for passengers, immigrants, or cargo. The time is here, my friends, to make a suspension of immigration, as extensive as can be secured in this amendment, if you want suspension at all. The problem is as simple as can be. I can not discuss the paragraphs further in the time limit. Do we need suspension?

I have a brief statement made over in Pennsylvania on last Washington's Birthday by Dr. Paul Shorey, of the University of Chicago, which in my opinion answers the question.

Mr. SABATH. Professor of what?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington (continuing). He says——

Mr. SABATH. Professor of what?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Professor of Greek in the University of Chicago.

Mr. SABATH. Oh, professor of Greek.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He says:

Our American spiritual unity, which seemed so secure a few decades ago, is not yet forfeited but is gravely threatened. The two chief measures that will preserve it are, first, the temporary restriction of immigration until we have digested our present surfeit of un-Americanized aliens; and, second, the intelligent foresight and the fearless resolution to insist that this is, ought to be, and shall remain a Nation of one language.

[Applause.]

He says further:

It is a false sentiment to protest that we are proposing to persecute the poor immigrant. It is as much to the interest of his children as ours that America shall not be flooded, and that it should remain free from the feuds and misunderstandings of Europe.

[Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington moves the previous question on the conference report.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman promised to explain the bill, but has not done it. Why does he want to shut off the debate?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have explained it three times.

Mr. SABATH. He has explained it as well as it can be explained. It can not be explained.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WINGO. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 132, noes 24.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. TAGUE. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 146, noes 28.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members; as many as are in favor of agreeing to the conference report will, as their names are called, vote "yea"; as many as are opposed will vote "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 296, nays 40, answered "present" 2, not voting 90, as follows:

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LANDS IN FORT BELKNAP INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 13225) providing for the allotment of lands within the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, Mont., and for other purposes, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 13225, with Senate amendments, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to a conference. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13225) providing for the allotment of lands within the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, Mont., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the following as conferees on the part of the House: Mr. SNYDER, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, and Mr. CARTER.

EMERGENCY TARIFF LEGISLATION—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 15275) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15275) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10, 23, and 24.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 19, 20, and 21, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "35"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert a comma and the following: "except rice cleaned for use in the manufacture of canned foods, on which the rate of duty shall be 1 cent per pound"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert a semicolon and the following: "olive, 40 cents per gallon in bulk, 50 cents per gallon in containers of less than 5 gallons"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"19. Sugars, tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscope not above 75 degrees, one and sixteen one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound, and for every additional degree shown by the polariscopic test, four one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound additional, and fractions of a degree in proportion; molasses testing not above 40 degrees, 24 per cent ad valorem; testing above 40 degrees and not above 56 degrees, 3½ cents per gallon; testing above 56 degrees, 7 cents per gallon; sugar drainings and sugar sweepings shall be subject to duty as molasses or sugar, as the case may be; according to polariscopic test."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"20. Butter, and substitutes therefor, 6 cents per pound."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"24. Wrapper tobacco, and filler tobacco when mixed or packed with more than 15 per cent of wrapper tobacco, and all leaf tobacco the product of two or more countries or dependencies when mixed or packed together, if unstemmed, $2.35 per pound; if stemmed, $3 per pound; filler tobacco not specially provided for in this section, if unstemmed, 35 cents per pound; if stemmed, 50 cents per pound.

"The term 'wrapper tobacco' as used in this section means that quality of leaf tobacco which has the requisite color, texture, and burn, and is of sufficient size for cigar wrappers, and the term 'filler tobacco' means all other leaf tobacco."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"25. Apples, 30 cents per bushel."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"26. Cherries in a raw state, preserved in brine or otherwise, 3 cents per pound."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"27. Olives, in solution, 25 cents per gallon; olives, not in solution, 3 cents per pound."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "16 and 18"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15275) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On No. 1: The House bill imposed a duty of 30 cents per bushel on wheat. The Senate amendment increases the rate to 40 cents, and the House recedes with an amendment making the rate 35 cents per bushel.

On No. 2: The House bill contained no duty on flaxseed. The Senate amendment proposes a duty of 30 cents per bushel of 56 pounds, and the House recedes.

On No. 3: The Senate amendment proposes to except rice cleaned for use in the manufacture of canned foods from the duty of 2 cents per pound upon cleaned rice imposed by the House bill, and the House recedes with an amendment making it clear that the rice excepted from the 2-cent rate shall pay 1 cent per pound as provided by existing law.

On No. 4: The Senate amendment proposes to raise the duty on lemons from 1½ cents per pound, as provided in the House bill, to 2 cents per pound, and the House recedes.

On No. 5: The Senate amendment proposes a duty on olive oil of 60 cents per gallon in bulk and of 70 cents per gallon in containers of less than 5 gallons. The House bill contained no duty on olive oil. The House recedes with an amendment making the duty 40 cents per gallon in bulk and 50 cents per gallon in containers of less than 5 gallons.

On Nos. 6 and 7: The House bill imposed a duty of 2½ cents per pound on fresh mutton and lamb. The Senate amendment proposes in lieu a duty of 2 cents per pound on fresh or frozen beef, veal, mutton, lamb, and pork, and a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem on meats of all kinds, prepared or preserved, not specially provided for in the bill, and the House recedes.

On No. 8: The Senate amendment proposes to admit free of duty cattle and sheep and other stock imported for breeding purposes, and the House recedes.

On No. 9: This amendment is a change of paragraph number, and the House recedes.

On No. 10: The House bill imposed a duty of 7 cents per pound on cotton having a staple of 1⅛ inches or more in length. The Senate amendment proposes the same rate of duty on cotton having a staple of 1⅛ inches or more in length, and the Senate recedes.

On Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16: These amendments are changes in paragraph numbers and references to paragraph numbers, and the House recedes.

On No. 17: The Senate amendment proposes to impose an additional duty on sugar and molasses equal to that imposed by existing law. The House bill contained no such provision, and the House recedes with an amendment imposing a duty on sugar and molasses in substitution for the existing duty, lower than the duty proposed by the Senate amendment plus that imposed by existing law, but higher than the duty imposed by existing law.

The following table shows the rates of duty imposed upon sugar by the Senate amendment when added to those imposed by existing law, and the rates agreed to by the conferees in substitution for those imposed by existing law:

Sugar (degrees).	Proposed rates (per pound).

The following table shows the rates of duty imposed upon molasses by the Senate amendment when added to those imposed by existing law, and the rates agreed to by the conferees in substitution for those imposed by existing law:

Molasses.	Proposed rates.
	Combination of Senate amendment and existing law.	As agreed to in conference in substitution for existing law.
Not above 40°	30 per cent	24 per cent.
Above 40° and not above 56°	4½ cents per gallon	3½ cents per gallon.
56° and above	9 cents per gallon	7 cents per gallon.

On No. 18: The Senate amendment proposes a duty of 8 cents per pound on butter and substitutes therefor. The House bill imposed no such duty, and the House recedes with an amendment making the rate of duty 6 cents per pound instead of 8 cents.

On No. 19: The Senate amendment proposes a duty of 23 per cent ad valorem on cheese and substitutes therefor. The House bill contained no such provision, and the House recedes.

On No. 20: The Senate amendment proposes a duty of 2 cents per gallon on fresh milk and 5 cents per gallon on cream. The House bill contained no such provision, and the House recedes.

On No. 21: The Senate amendment proposes a duty of 2 cents per pound on milk, preserved or condensed, or sterilized by heating or other processes, including the weight of the immediate covering, and a duty of 5 cents per pound on sugar of milk. The House bill contained no such provision, and the House recedes.

On No. 22: The Senate amendment proposes a duty on wrapper tobacco, and filler tobacco when mixed or packed with more than 15 per cent of wrapper tobacco, and all leaf tobacco the product of two or more countries when mixed or packed together, if unstemmed, $2.85 per pound; if stemmed, $3.50 per pound; and a duty on filler tobacco not specially provided for in the bill, if unstemmed, 35 cents per pound; if stemmed, 50 cents per pound. The House bill contained no such provision, and the House recedes with an amendment reducing the Senate rate of $2.85 per pound to $2.35 per pound, and the Senate rate of $3.50 per pound to $3 per pound.

On No. 23: The Senate amendment proposes a rate of 15 per cent ad valorem on hides of cattle, raw or uncured, whether dry, salted, or pickled, with a proviso for a drawback on leather exported, made from imported hides. The House bill contained no such provision, and the Senate recedes.

On No. 24: The Senate amendment proposes a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem upon hides of the kind provided for in amendment No. 23 when advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture, and manufactures of which such hides are a component material. The House bill contained no such provision, and the Senate recedes.

On No. 25: The Senate amendment proposes a duty of 30 cents per bushel on apples, with a proviso that if Canada at any time imposes a greater duty on apples from the United States then the rate on all apples imported into this country shall be increased so as to make it the same as on apples imported into Canada from the United States. The House bill contained no such provision, and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the proviso and changing the paragraph number.

On No. 26: The Senate amendment proposes a duty of 4 cents per pound on cherries in a raw state, preserved in brine or otherwise. The House bill contained no such provision, and the House recedes with an amendment making the rate 3 cents instead of 4 cents, and changing the paragraph number.

On No. 27: The Senate amendment proposes a duty of 25 cents per gallon on olives in solution and 5 cents per pound on olives not in solution. The House bill contained no such duty, and the House recedes with an amendment reducing the rate on olives not in solution to 3 cents per pound and changing the paragraph number.

On No. 28: This is a clerical amendment making references to paragraph numbers, and the House recedes with an amendment making further clerical changes.

J. W. FORDNEY,
WM. R. GREEN,
NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to see if we can arrange as to the time with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY]. Because of the rush of business in the House I hope the gentleman will agree to as little time as possible for general debate.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I will be glad to. We have a good many demands on this side. We will try to get along with as little time as possible.

Mr. FORDNEY. We have requests for one hour's time here. Will it be agreeable to the gentleman to agree to two hours' debate, at which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered? I will yield half the time to the gentleman from Illinois, and we will control the other half.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate shall be two hours—one half to be controlled by myself and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY], and that at the end of that two hours the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the time for debate shall be limited to two hours—one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] and the other half by himself, and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this bill is what is known as the emergency tariff bill. When it passed the House it carried duties on certain items or articles, chiefly farm products. The bill went to the Senate and was amended there, and several articles, chiefly farm products, have been added to the bill by the Senate. The House and the Senate conferees met and have agreed to all the changes in the bill. Briefly I will explain those changes.

When the bill passed the House it carried a rate of duty of 30 cents a bushel on wheat. The Senate increased the rate to 40 cents a bushel, and the conferees have agreed on 35 cents a bushel. Thirty-five cents per bushel on wheat now is not as high an ad valorem duty as was 25 cents per bushel in the Payne tariff law, considering the price of wheat in the market at that time and now.

There was no change in the duty upon wool. The Senate accepted the House provision.

The Senate made some changes by adding certain articles, agricultural products mainly, sugar, molasses, and articles of fruits.

The Senate added a duty of 15 per cent on hides and 10 per cent on certain leather goods. It was found, however, that the Senate had made a mistake, because certain articles of leather on which they placed a duty of 10 per cent now carry a duty of from 30 to 35 per cent in existing laws. Therefore they were reducing the duty on leather from 30 to 35 per cent to 10 per cent, but adding 10 per cent on all leather goods now on the free list; and that provision of the bill added by the Senate was stricken from the bill both as to hides and leather goods.

Sugar was the one item on which there was more contention between the conferees than upon any other item in the bill. The bill did not carry a duty on sugar or molasses as it left the House. The Senate provided 2½ cents per pound on full duty-paying sugar, and under our treaty with Cuba, Cuba would be entitled to a 20 per cent reduction therefrom, which would mean 2 cents per pound on Cuban sugar brought to this country.

The conferees agreed to 2 cents a pound on sugar of 96 degrees, which means 20 per cent off for Cuba, or $1.60 per hundred pounds on 96-degree sugar coming from Cuba. Last year we had an extraordinary amount of imports of sugar. We imported 3,872,000 short tons of all kinds of sugar from the various countries. Not for many years before have we imported as much duty-paying sugar from other countries and from Cuba as was imported last year. At the time Cuba placed such an enormous price upon her raw sugar the refiners of this country went to every country in the world for sugar and broke the market and brought down the price of imported raw sugar. But in the face of that fact we imported 76 per cent from Cuba of our total imports of dutiable sugar.

We produce in this country 25 per cent of our consumption. We import 25 per cent of our consumption from our insular possessions, and that sugar does not pay any duty. Therefore an average of about 50 per cent of our consumption comes from Cuba. Last year, while the price of sugar was so exceedingly high, the difference between the price paid by the consumers of this country on imported sugar compared with the price for which the Government compelled domestic sugar manufacturers to sell their domestic-made sugar amounted to $600,000,000 in six months, or enough money to build sugar factories in this country that would produce more sugar than all the people consume annually. So, my friends, under a condition over which our Government had no control, being compelled to go to foreign countries for sugar, our people paid the penalty, and all that is needed to enable us to produce all the sugar in this country that our people consume is protection to that domestic industry. [Applause.]

There never has been a time in our history when the consumers of this country purchased sugar at as low a price as when we had a high protective tariff on sugar, with the single exception of the lifetime of the McKinley bill, which paid a bounty of 2 cents a pound on domestic-made sugar. That law was held to be unconstitutional and was repealed. Now, because we could not get an agreement in any other way, the House conferees have agreed with the Senate conferees on a duty of 2 cents a pound on 96-degree full duty-paying sugar, and I hope the House will accept what the conferees felt they were obliged to agree to.

Tobacco wrappers were another item in the bill over which there was a considerable argument. Under existing law and under the Payne law certain tobacco wrappers paid $1.85 a pound duty and others paid $2.50 per pound. The Senate placed an additional dollar on those two items of wrapper tobacco. The conferees agreed to split the difference and make the duty $2.35 on certain tobacco wrappers and $3 on the others.

Other items in the bill affect less important farm products.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With relation to the duty on sugar, while the full duty is 2 cents a pound, the gentleman does not mean that the American consumer will pay that much, because we get nearly all our sugar from Cuba, and will get practically all of it this year from there, upon which the duty will be how much?

Mr. FORDNEY. One dollar and sixty cents per hundred pounds. I have always contended, and I always will contend, because it is my firm conviction, that a protective tariff—placed upon a competitive product made in this country—generally lowers the price of the article to the consumer.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does the gentleman know how large a stock of sugar the refiners in this country have on hand to-day?

Mr. FORDNEY. The beet sugar and cane sugar domestic manufacturers have yet on hand a very large proportion of their total output for last season, for the reason that the sugar manufacturers of this country this year entered into an agreement with the farmers guaranteeing them $10 a ton for their beets, and an additional $1 per ton on beets for every 1 cent per pound that sugar sold for above 9 cents a pound. The price has gone down to about 7 cents a pound, and the sugar manufacturers of this country now stand to lose at least $40 a ton upon their total product this year in the United States.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Can they not recoup their losses growing out of that from the enormous profits that they made upon what they sold to the American consumers a year or seven months ago?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; and I will tell you why, brother. The Government fixed the price for the domestic manufacturers of beet sugar at 12 cents a pound, and they were not permitted to sell above that price, when you had to pay 30 cents a pound for imported sugar. Therefore the domestic manufacturers did not receive the benefit of the exorbitant prices which you mention.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Did not the domestic manufacturer have the benefit of the imported raw sugar, and has he not to-day on hand stocks made from the imported raw sugar?

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman is speaking now of the refiner, who is not a producer of domestic sugar. He, the refiner, refines foreign imported sugar, except what little raw sugar he purchases from the Louisiana sugar grower, and on that sugar the refiner fixes the price that the sugar manufacturer of this country must take; and the sugar producers of Louisiana have their sugar on hand yet, and can not sell it for enough to pay the cost of production, and I am informed that much of the beet sugar is yet unsold.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Can the gentleman tell me how large a stock of imported sugar the refiners have on hand?

Mr. FORDNEY. No. I do not believe there is a very large stock on hand, for this reason: Just before the break in the price came the refiners notified their customers over the country, so I am informed, about as follows: "If you want sugar you must take it now or go without during the canning season"; and they, the refiners, unloaded at 24 or 25 cents a pound, and shortly after they had made those contracts reduced the price to 20 cents, and the price has gone on down until to-day sugar is selling below 7 cents f. o. b. New York. And the wholesalers of this country have a stock of sugar on hand that they paid 24 and 25 cents a pound for.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman stated a while ago that the refiner has fixed the price of Louisiana sugar. If that is true, how will the Louisiana sugar producer be benefited by this tariff measure?

Mr. FORDNEY. This price I have spoken of was last year. Now we have an open market.

Mr. PADGETT. What will keep the refiner from fixing the price the coming year?

Mr. FORDNEY. The Louisiana planters are producers of raw sugar and manufacturers of refined sugar. The refiners have always fixed the price of Louisiana sugar manufactured with a margin so small that the planters have lived from hand to mouth.

Mr. PADGETT. What is there in this legislation that will relieve the Louisiana planters from that condition? I think they ought to be relieved.

Mr. FORDNEY. It will prevent the Cubans from underselling the Louisiana planters at a time when the refiners of this country wish to destroy the domestic product.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. MARTIN. Louisiana now produces direct-consumption sugar, and produces little raw sugar. Eighty per cent is direct-consumption sugar.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman means that they are refining their own sugar.

Mr. MARTIN. Yes; they are making what they call direct-consumption sugar, and you can not tell the difference between that and the refined sugar.

Mr. FORDNEY. The treatment received by the Louisiana sugar manufacturers was so bad that the Louisiana sugar manufacturers have been obliged to change their methods for producing raw to refined sugar in order to live.

Mr. PADGETT. What I was trying to do was to get some information as to how this legislation would operate to relieve the Louisiana sugar planters. That is what I want to see accomplished.

Mr. MARTIN. We have taken the matter into our own hands by making direct-consumption sugar.

Mr. FORDNEY. When the Underwood tariff bill became a law it reduced the duty on imported sugar from 1.685 to 1 cent, and 42 per cent of the Louisiana sugar manufacturers went out of business inside of six months.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. When the bill was originally reported to the House you had a tariff on hides.

Mr. FORDNEY. No; the gentleman is mistaken. The Senate put in hides.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. The Senate put a duty on hides. When the conference report comes back, however, that item is cut out.

Mr. FORDNEY. It is, and I will tell you why.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. The packers are very much interested in that, are they not?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; the packers have not asked for a duty on hides. The Senate placed in the bill a duty of 15 per cent on hides and 10 per cent on certain leather goods, putting a duty higher on the raw material than on the finished product. When we called their attention to their mistake they discovered that there were many leather goods in the Underwood law now bearing a rate of duty of 30 to 35 per cent ad valorem that their action reduced these rates to 10 per cent. They intended to add an additional duty of 10 per cent, but they forgot to put in the word "additional." There was nothing for the conferees to do but to accept it as the Senate wrote it or strike the whole thing out, because they put a higher duty on the raw material than they did on leather goods, such as harnesses and saddles, and so the whole matter was stricken from the bill.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman stated that the manufacturers and refiners forced the wholesalers and jobbers to buy sugar from them at about 24 cents a pound, and then commenced to lower the price.

Mr. FORDNEY. Immediately.

Mr. SABATH. How much did the sugar cost them?

Mr. FORDNEY. The refiners had loaded up with high-priced Cuban sugar, and they saw a break in the price coming, and so they unloaded on the innocent public.

Mr. SABATH. From whom did the refiners buy the sugar?

Mr. FORDNEY. From Cuba.

Mr. SABATH. And they paid this tremendous price?

Mr. FORDNEY. They did. They did the fair thing after they had unloaded the sugar; they went out and purchased from the world outside and broke the Cuban price and also broke many of the wholesale dealers at the same time. As the bill passed the House the Treasury Department estimated that it would yield an additional $125,000,000 of revenue under the present law.

The item added by the Senate is estimated to furnish about $55,000,000 additional, making a total of $180,000,000. But I believe that the Treasury Department is too high in its estimate for the reason that they placed a large portion of the $125,000,000 on wool, and we have now 22 or 23 months' wool in this country for the factories, and they are importing it by millions of pounds, and by the time we can have some legislation on wool there will be more than twice the present wool stock in the hands of the manufacturers of this country.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I notice the Senate bill provides for 30 cents a bushel on flaxseed, and in the Underwood bill it is 10 cents.

Mr. FORDNEY. I think that is right.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. And I notice that there does not seem to be any compensatory duty on linseed oil.

Mr. FORDNEY. No; because it was not a matter in conference. It was not in the bill, and the Senate put no such provision in the bill, and we had no power to change it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The effect is to disturb the equilibrium between the duty on flaxseed at the present time and the present duty on linseed oil.

Mr. FORDNEY. If it does, it will increase it on the raw material and not benefit the oil.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. Are we to understand now that on the item of leather, both hides and the finished product, you have removed the duty?

Mr. FORDNEY. They are out of the bill and stand as in the Underwood tariff.

Mr. FOCHT. What about the consideration of a bounty? Was that taken up on the leather products manufactured here and shipped abroad?

Mr. FORDNEY. There is nothing in the bill with reference to leather or hides.

Mr. FOCHT. It is all wide open?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; as it is in the existing Underwood tariff law. Mr. Speaker, the effect of the offering of low-priced foreign goods on the American market is a temporary increasing of imports which displace American-made goods and deprive American labor of employment. With the diminished purchasing power of the American people in general, imports then decline. Those who believe America should let down the bars to foreign-made goods in order to aid Europe should take notice. A nation of unemployed can help no one. It is not so much the quantity of imports that harms American industries and the workers employed therein as it is the kind of goods and the price at which such goods are offered. The offering of competitive products at lower than the American cost of production is what we must guard against. The trend of imports tells the story.

Following the armistice, imports steadily increased until the month of June, 1920, and thereafter imports have declined. More goods have been offered from abroad since June, 1920, than prior thereto at lower prices, and ship space has gone begging, but the American people in general have not the money with which to purchase.

Imports to the United States in—
June, 1920	$552,605,534
July, 1920	537,118,000
August, 1920	513,111,000
September, 1920	363,290,000
October, 1920	334,055,000
November, 1920	321,211,000
December, 1920	266,112,000
January, 1921	209,000,000

Compared with imports in June, 1920, imports last month were but 37.8 per cent.

When this bill was first presented to the House the Government actuary estimated it would produce $125,585,514 in additional import duties.

The bill in its present form, as agreed to in conference, contains a number of amendments that will produce additional revenue as compared with the bill passed by the House.

The following is an estimate of such additional revenue showing the commodities on which additional duties are proposed by conference amendments:

Wheat	$320,000
Flaxseed	2,200,000
Lemons	510,000
Olive oil	860,000
Fresh and frozen meats	510,000
Prepared and preserved meats	1,300,000
Sugar and molasses	42,000,000
Butter	1,250,000
Cheese	160,000
Fresh milk and cream	85,000
Condensed milk and sugar of milk	410,000
Wrapper tobacco	4,800,000
Olives	465,000
	54,871,000
	125,585,514
	180,456,514

I hope the report will be agreed to. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, with the accuracy which characterizes always the statements made by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], he has correctly stated the Senate items upon which the conferees have agreed. My colleague on the committee is always absolutely honest and conscientious in statements as to his beliefs with reference to the economic effect of tariff rates, especially if the rates are particularly high. He presents them always as a remedy for every economic ill. Up in the lumber sections of Michigan a young man studied medicine. He proceeded with his studies until he learned how to cure fits. Then his money gave out, and he never got any further. However, he successfully practiced medicine in the lumber sections of Michigan all the rest of his life, and his remedy was exceedingly simple. Whenever a patient came to him he just gave him something that threw him into fits, and then he cured the fits. So the gentleman from Michigan, no matter what the economic difficulty may be, reaches the conclusion that it is caused by the fact that tariffs are not high enough and he proceeds to raise the tariff. He was honest when he said a while ago that he believed that a high tariff made lower prices. I remember that just before the conferees agreed upon this bill I told some of my friends and neighbors here in Washington that the time had come for them to buy sugar, because it would go up as soon as it became apparent that the conferees proposed to suggest to the House and to the Senate that they agreed in part to the Senate amendments and increased the tariff on sugar. Some of them have just phoned me this morning stating that, although sugar was selling at the Piggly-Wiggly stores in this city, which are large distributors of sugar, three days ago for $7.35 a hundred, this morning, with this report pending and the certainty of its passage, the price of sugar has been increased to $9 per hundred pounds. This is something that anybody can verify. The wholesale price of refined sugar also went up 25 points day before yesterday and 10 points yesterday.

A question arose a moment ago as to the tariff on hides. The Senate put a tariff on hides upon the theory that the farmer ought to get more for his hides, and the conferees took it off. The argument under which the tariff on hides was taken off was exceedingly simple and conclusive from the protection standpoint. It has been advanced by the shoe manufacturers before the Ways and Means Committee for a long time. The hides, they say, are a by-product, therefore there ought not to be any tariff on hides. The argument in effect is this: You can not raise a steer or a cow unless it has a hide on it. Therefore, a hide is a by-product. Therefore, it does not make any difference whether the farmer gets anything for the hide or not. It is a by-product, he is not trying to raise hides, he is trying to raise a dairy animal or a beef animal, and that is all there is to it. Is not that perfectly plain? Some day some ambitious farmer Burbank may succeed in developing a hideless steer, and whenever he does he can meet the Republican position absolutely with reference to a tariff on hides.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Speaking about a hideless steer, I want to say that they have been successful in crossing a Brahma cow with a buffalo and have produced an animal that does not have a hide, similar to a steer. It is different in that the cross produces a fur, and the skin can be used as a robe.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I hope that will ultimately solve the difficulty from a protection standpoint, so far as the farmers are concerned. I thank the gentleman for his contribution to my speech. I presume, however, the theory would apply that the farmer ought not to get anything for the fur from a protection standpoint.

A tariff on apples? Yes; this bill puts a tariff on apples of 30 cents a bushel, an increase of 300 per cent in the tariff on apples. We bring in $50,000 worth of apples a year, and we exported $12,000,000 worth of apples last year. In other words, for every $1 worth of apples that we bring into this country we export $240 worth of apples. So, from a Republican standpoint, this is an industry that is in danger from importation, and it ought to be protected.

Wheat. My colleague correctly stated what the conferees did with respect to wheat. They boosted the House bill 5 cents, and we have a tax in this bill of 35 cents per bushel on wheat, the highest tax ever imposed in this country or in any other country upon any bread grain, upon the theory that we ought to prevent importations of wheat from Canada. The wheat that comes in from Canada goes right through here and goes to England, and we compete always in Liverpool with wheat from Canada. But the committees have not considered the alarming fact—and it is an alarming fact—that our surplus of wheat is absolutely gone. Our surplus of wheat has been announced for a number of months for the year 1920 at 220,000,000 bushels, and the exportations of wheat up to the present time amount to 300,000,000 bushels. That does not include the millions of bushels that will be exported in the month of March. In other words, we have used up our entire surplus of wheat and 80,000,000 bushels of our reserves in the face of a mild winter, which does not kill insect pests; in the face of a new kind of insect pest, the green bug, which is advancing on the wheat fields of the winter-wheat section of the country, sweeping every field bare as it comes. Wheat will be high enough before the winter-wheat harvest commences without any remedy of this kind, and we will be begging for wheat, for wheat from Canada or from any other source, if we can possibly get it. The policy of the United Kingdom at the present time in buying wheat on this market is a wise economic policy. They are the only buyer that we have. The commercial bakers are not competing with them. The United Kingdom buys a few million bushels for March delivery, and up goes the price of wheat. Nobody else buys, and in a few days it goes down again. Then they buy some more. This buying, conducted on a tremendous scale, is depleting us of wheat, and no remedy has been suggested by the party which is responsible for legislation in this House to meet that sort of an unfortunate condition.

The bill as reported by the Senate places a tariff on pork. Not a pound of it comes into this country, and yet there is a tariff on it in this bill, the same as on other frozen meats. It certainly will not benefit the farmer.

Then, in order to balance this bill from a Republican standpoint and to make it logical from a Republican standpoint, they put a tariff on cherries, a tariff which raises the present tariff 1,350 per cent.

At the present time cherries are taxed 10 cents a bushel and the effect of this item in this bill is to tax cherries $1.35 a bushel, an increase of 1,350 per cent on cherries. I am wondering why that happened. No cherries come into this country, or the amount that does come in is so inconsiderable it is not even listed in the monthly summaries. Yet we get this tremendous advance. Years ago they brought into the country in quite large quantities these large red maraschino cherries which were used in the manufacture of cocktails. That was the principal use for them, and they brought them in in the good old Payne-Aldrich tariff law days for 25 cents a bushel then, and the principal use was to embellish the cocktails that stood on long mahogany bars in those days in our cities. But the cocktail has disappeared from American life. It is as extinct as the dodo, and yet they put on the cherries which went into the cocktail this immense increase in tariff of 1,350 per cent, and I see, as I look at some of my old, blue-bellied protection friends on the Republican side, that they recall with pleasure the old days of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill when cherries came in from Italy and were added to the seductive cocktails which stood on the long bars in our cities. Now, the demand for this tax on cherries, which no longer come in, this protection of nonexistent cocktails, comes from a Northwestern State where they raise cherries, and from a State which almost the first of all went dry in the recent dry movement, so it can not be for the purpose of helping out that dry section of the country that this tax is put on. We are compelled therefore to reach the conclusion that it is inspired by the memories of long ago. [Laughter.] And we are erecting this tremendous tax, and a State, which went dry years and years before the rest of the country went dry, will reap the benefit in order to erect at the graves of dead and departed cocktails this splendid monument. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed 15 minutes.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I regret that I can not, under my arrangement of time, continue longer. But we can all rest securely to-night. The Republican Party has protected the ghosts of nonexistent cocktails from contact with cherries grown by alleged cheaper labor in Italy. But even this 1,350 per cent increase will not have the effect of bringing back the cocktails; as an industry the manufacture of this seductive American drink has disappeared forever. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I realize that there is no particular object in saying very much about this conference report. It is bound to be accepted, and the sooner we reach a vote possibly the better. I want to refer, however, to one item in the conference report, and that is the duty on meat whereby the House conferees have accepted 2 cents per pound on fresh or frozen meats. That item can only be a direct benefit to the packing industry of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I do not see where the producer will ever benefit one particle by that increase in the price of meat. This will undoubtedly increase the price to the consumer, but it will all be absorbed before it gets back to the man on the farm. And the same applies to some of these other items. It applies to the sugar item, the wheat item, and so on through.

In speaking of this conference report I want to reiterate what I said last Saturday, that it may not be altogether a sectional or local bill, but it is nevertheless a class bill, and I differ absolutely with my good friend, the Member from Ohio [Mr. FESS], who said that those who were voting against this bill were putting themselves in a class of considering the tariff a local issue. It is because this bill we are about to adopt here to-day is local and class—for one particular class—that I, for one, will not accept this conference report. If it were a national bill, I would vote for the products of the West as quickly as I would for the manufactured industries of the East. That is what I want, a national tariff bill, not a sectional nor a class tariff bill such as this one is. In other words, when the House conferees ask you to accept the conference report as it comes back to us to-day, in my opinion, they have split the difference with the Senate and in some instances gone fifty-fifty with them—it is only that much decrease in its badness from what the Senate sent to us and asked us to agree to. It is just as much a class bill as it was when we passed it in the House. Now, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] on Saturday last made a reference with which I absolutely agree. It was that the producer of Kansas and the manufacturer of New England were mutually dependent on each other, and if the industries of the East did not prosper the farmers of the West would feel its effect, and vice versa. I agree to that——

Mr. WHITE of Kansas rose.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have only about two minutes, and if the gentleman will kindly allow me to use my time. I do not wish to be discourteous; I am only quoting what Mr. CAMPBELL said. I absolutely agree with that principle, but if you do not protect the industries of the East and give them a chance to prosper, how can that prosperity be reflected to the farmer of the West? I agree with the theory that it ought to be mutual. Now, one other gentleman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], made a reference in criticism of myself and my colleague from Massachusetts for not supporting this bill, wherein he said it was the only tariff bill, and we knew it, that we could vote for at this time. That is true. It is the only one, but it is so poor a one that I do not want to vote for it. [Applause.] I want to be in a position to be free to act upon the great problem of the tariff for the best interests of the entire country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Illinois use some of his time?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I voted for this bill when it was reported from the Ways and Means Committee and I voted for the bill when it came up for consideration on the floor of the House. I voted for it notwithstanding the fact that the greatest agricultural product in my State received no consideration in this bill and is now selling at from 4 to 5 cents below the cost of production, due entirely to foreign competition.

But the fact that a great industry of my State had been treated unjustly at the hands of the Ways and Means Committee of this House was, in my opinion, no good reason why I should not lend a helping hand to other suffering industries of this country, and I therefore voted for the bill. [Applause.] I was much disappointed when I failed to convince a majority of the members of the Ways and Means Committee that sugar should have been included in this bill; disappointed because our people are in a suffering condition, as I will try to show you in a few moments, if the limited time allotted me will permit. But the Senate concluded they would give some consideration to sugar, and they placed a duty of 1 cent a pound upon the raw Cuban product. When the bill went to conference the conferees reduced the duty to six-tenths of a cent a pound upon the Cuban raw sugar, and while this is entirely inadequate under present conditions, yet we are thankful for small favors. Believing, as I do, that this bill has been improved and sweetened by the conferees, I shall take great pleasure in voting to adopt the conference report. [Applause.]

Now, coming to the Louisiana situation, I wish to state to this House that we are now face to face with a situation that is unparalleled in the history of the industry. It is even worse than the condition which followed the passage of the Underwood bill, which threatened to put sugar upon the free list. Our people in Louisiana raised a crop, small though it was, of some 200,000 tons, and yet they have not been able to find a market for their crop. The man who grew the cane, that cost him from $12 to $15 a ton to raise, brought it to the factory and was told by the factory owner, who was unable to find a market for his product, that he had no money with which to pay for the cane. He said, "The best I can do for you is to pay you the cost of harvesting and give you the balance in sugar, and if you will not accept sugar, we will then take your product and put it in the warehouse, and when we do find a market for sugar we will pay you." Some of them have been compelled to sell their sugar at 6 cents a pound, some at 6½ cents a pound, and some as high as 7, which means that the small farmer has lost from $5 to $6 a ton on every ton of cane raised by him, and the factory owners have suffered a proportionate loss.

Many of them are in this situation: Their sugar is in the warehouse; they have not been paid for their crop; they have no money upon which to start another crop, and the banks refuse to advance it. If this bill is passed, confidence will be partially restored in Louisiana, and our money lenders and bankers will be willing to advance money to these poor people and give them a chance to plant and harvest another crop.

The gentleman from Illinois stated a moment ago that some one told him over the phone that——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the gentleman give me one minute more?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN. He stated that some one had told him over the phone that the wholesale price of sugar had advanced from 7.35 cents to 9 cents a pound. Is that right?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. The retail price.

Mr. MARTIN. Then that retailer is a profiteer, because the price of sugar has not advanced either in New York or in Louisiana because of the introduction of this bill. This bill has not yet become a law, and even if it had it would not warrant an increase in the price of sugar to the extent of 1.65 cents per pound. The price in New York is 4¼ cents for Cuban sugar delivered in New York, and in Louisiana we are still unable to sell our sugar for more than 6 to 7 cents a pound, which is about 4 cents a pound less than it costs us to produce it.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Perhaps the gentleman can explain the difference this bill makes with the profiteer.

Mr. MARTIN. It makes considerable difference to the Louisiana producer. The retailer in Washington can and will profiteer whether there is a duty on sugar or not.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER].

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the outset that I feel a sympathy for the sugar farmers in Louisiana and I have great sympathy for the cotton farmers all over this country. The sugar farmer in Louisiana as well as the cotton farmer, and as well as farmers in other sections of the country, have been suffering by reason of a depressed market and a depressed price, but I can not understand, if the chairman of this committee is correct in his statement, how this tax of 2 cents a pound on sugar will make it cheaper to the consumer. And if my friend from Louisiana [Mr. MARTIN] is correct in his statement that the Louisiana cane growers are producing sugar way below the cost of production—and I know they are and he is correct in his statement—I can not see how, if on the one hand, this tax will lower the price of sugar, and, on the other, it is now being sold below the price and the cost of its production, it is going to benefit the farmer that is raising the cane. And I would like to ask the chairman of the committee how a bill with a tax on wool proposed and intended to extend for only 10 months, can benefit the woolgrower, when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] says that before this bill will become a law there will be over two years' supply stored away; nearly a year and a half supply in storage after this bill expires. Now, I would like to have those inconsistencies explained.

But there is one thing that gives me great hope and great comfort, and that is the speeches made by the gentlemen from New England. And, my friends, when we get this great majority over here in a few days, and when we find that one section of the country is wanting to pile the taxes mountain high upon everything that another section uses, you are going to see a warm time over on the Republican side.

When they put a tax of 6 cents a pound on butter, when they place a tax of 2 cents a pound on sugar, when they put a tax of nearly $2 a barrel on flour you are going to find that the great consuming masses of this country are going to raise their protest. And in that same New England, where the light appears to be now breaking, I fear it will soon be obscured by dark clouds when those manufacturers come and ask for their protection, which we have not put in this bill but which they will get in a short time. When a man on the farm out on the prairies and on the plains and in other sections of the country wants to buy an agricultural implement, or anything else he may need in his business, he will find what this protection will cost him.

But, my friends, I look with pleasure to the time when those two great conflicting interests will meet on this floor. This bill is a repudiation—the first big repudiation—of the Republican platform, which the chairman of the committee stated in the hearings was out of date. This is the first repudiation of the promise to decrease the high cost of living, because everyone knows that this tax is intended for only one purpose, and that is——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman five minutes additional.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for five minutes additional.

Mr. COLLIER. It is intended to increase the tax on everything that a man puts on his breakfast table. But so far as we Democrats are concerned, politically, we should hail with some degree of pleasurable anticipation a tariff bill and have no apprehension concerning it other than on account of the harm it will do the great masses of the people, because the Republicans never have attempted to bring in a tariff bill or revise the general tariff schedules without bringing well-nigh ruin and disaster to their party. Protection, my Democratic friends, has never been indorsed by the American people for any appreciable length of time. That is a matter of history. Since 1890 our friends on the Republican side have brought in three general tariff bills. After the McKinley bill was enacted, so great a storm of disapproval swept over this country that the great McKinley himself went down in defeat, and in less than two years after the enactment of that bill the Republican majority which put that measure upon the statute books was decreased to only 88 Republican Members.

What did the Democrats do? They strayed off after other issues. The money question was the paramount issue, and the Republicans got back in control. Heedless of that bitter experience with the McKinley bill, they put the Dingley law on the statute books. What happened then? It was only the demoralized condition of the Democratic Party, divided as they were on the money question, together with the War with Spain, that saved the Dingley Act from meeting the same fate that was meted out to the McKinley law, and that great Republican majority which enacted the Dingley Act was in the next election reduced to a majority of 23. We know that in less than eight years after the Dingley law was put on the statute books there was a clamor all over this country for a revision downward or a repeal of that act.

This demand on the part of the American people for a revision downward of that law was so great that the Republican Party in its platform declared, and Republican orators all over this country stated, that they would revise those rates downward. The American people took them at their word. The Payne-Aldrich law was enacted, the tariff was revised upward, and in less than three years afterwards the Republican Party was almost destroyed.

Now you are bringing in simply a forerunner of what you are going to bring in in a few months. I can not, like the economic gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] and others on the committee, look with prophetic eye into the future and see the result of every economic move made by Congress; but I do know that the tariff was no issue in this recent campaign. We have repeatedly had people come before us in the committee who stated that they voted the Republican ticket, but not with the intention of having a general tariff act passed at this time, when we are selling more than $4,000,000,000 of our products to the countries abroad than we are buying from them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. COLLIER. May I have one minute more?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. COLLIER. I say I can not look into the future and say if you bring in another tariff bill that it is going to defeat you. I would not say that, because I have seen too many guilty men escape punishment to believe that every offense meets with its just desert. The teachings of the past and the lessons of history are the only criteria by which we can judge the future. In the last 30 years you have brought in three tariff bills, two of them well-nigh destroyed your party, and it was only the demoralized condition of your adversaries, together with the fact that we were at war with a foreign country, that the other one did not meet the same fate. But it did cut your majority down to 23. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] has just asserted that this bill is the inevitable forerunner of what we upon this side of the House intend to do later in the framing of a permanent tariff bill. I want my colleagues to understand, so far as I am concerned, at least, that that statement is inaccurate. The outstanding feature of this bill is that it is an emergency tariff law, pure and simple. It is to continue in operation at the outside but 10 months. It is to remedy a condition that exists now, and not one which can reasonably be presumed to exist in the future.

For myself, I am not committed in my vote on any of these tariff rates to a similar vote when we take up the question of a permanent tariff law, and no gentleman here ought to feel that in voting for this conference report he is in any way committed to vote for similar rates if they should happen to be brought in in a permanent tariff law.

Many of the rates in this conference report are, in my opinion, too high. They are not nearly as high, however, as they would have been had we accepted the Senate amendments. In fact, there was but one tariff rate in the bill presented by the House that was higher than the rate in the Payne law. Practically every amendment offered in the Senate provided rates substantially higher than the Payne law.

In that respect the report of the conferees is a decided improvement over the Senate bill. Many of the amendments adopted in the Senate bill were adopted at the suggestion of one Senator. I do not believe that that is a scientific way to revise the tariff of the United States. I can imagine in that august body something like this occurring in the consideration of a tariff law—and it is not stretching the probabilities immensely—I can conceive of some dignified Senator rising in his place and saying that he had a constituent who kept a bee, and he suggested therefore a duty on honey, and that amendment would be accepted very gladly and made a part of the law. [Laughter.]

That is not the way to revise the tariff scientifically. But it was this condition—and not a theory—that confronted us conferees when we met.

It is all very well for the gentleman from Illinois to be humorous on the subject of cherries. I do not think that cherry duty was either necessary or important. Similarly with regard to apples. There is this excuse for the duty on apples: The only apples that come into this country come into one State from Canada, and Canada imposes against us a duty of 30 cents. We simply do the same thing against Canada that Canada does against us. I was rather surprised that my learned and distinguished friend from Illinois in discussing the subject of fruits left out that great California fruit, the lemon. The Senate in its wisdom increased the duty on lemons from a cent and a quarter to 2 cents.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. We have been handed so many lemons in these tariff bills that we did not think that was necessary. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think the gentleman who handed us this lemon was a very great and distinguished Democratic leader. I recall that during the last campaign the Governor of Ohio, the Democratic candidate for the Presidency, went through southern California advocating a duty on lemons not only sufficient to equalize the difference in cost of production here and abroad, but also sufficient to pay the freight on California lemons to New York. That was the influence, gentlemen. It was the late Democratic candidate for President who influenced Congress and compelled us to put this outrageous duty on lemons. [Laughter.] If there was a lemon handed to us, it was by the former leader of my distinguished friend's party.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I call the attention of my friend to the fact that if the Democratic candidate did make that promise in California, the results do not indicate that the Californians wanted an increase in the price of their lemons. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. I dislike to think what California would have done to Gov. Cox if he had not advocated that duty on lemons. It is horrible to contemplate. [Laughter.]

Gentlemen, this bill, or at least the major portion of this bill, is absolutely defensible. There never has existed such a situation in this country as that recently with regard to the live-stock industry and with regard to wool and possibly with regard to wheat. The situation of the farmers of this country has been disastrous. Under free wool there have been importations of wool into this country, landed here at a price with which no woolgrower in the United States can possibly compete. The consequence has been that a situation has arisen which made it almost inevitable that unless some relief was given in the West and in the South, particularly in the State of Texas, the flocks would actually disappear from this country. The farmers and woolgrowers could not afford to feed their sheep. Their wool was pledged to the banks, and the banks were about to foreclose, and they would have had nothing to pay except from the sale of the ewes. Now, you may destroy an ordinary agricultural crop absolutely. You may not raise a bushel of wheat or a bushel of corn, and you can reproduce your wheat and your corn next year; but if you destroy your sheep crop or your cattle crop, you have destroyed them practically forever. If you destroy your ewes and your cows, it will take you 20 years and maybe more to restore your crop; and from that point of view this legislation is absolutely justified. I am informed by gentlemen who are thoroughly conversant with this subject that even though there is no reasonable hope that this bill will finally be enacted into law, the passage of the bill in this House has immensely relieved the situation in the West, in Texas, and in the other big cattle-growing States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not know what the ultimate fate of this bill may be. Some gentleman on that side may be more in the confidence of the present Executive than I am. I assume that the bill will be vetoed; but I repeat that leaving out some of the smaller matters, which are of comparatively little importance, we have been justified in so far as some of the most important agricultural products of this country are concerned, in taking the action that we have taken in passing this bill and in the action we are about to take in adopting this conference report. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible under the circumstances to debate this bill in four minutes, but I wish to present one proposition with as much precision as I am capable of.

The condition of the agricultural interests is serious. It is as serious now as when the House passed the emergency tariff bill in December. It will certainly remain serious for some time. The condition is an emergency condition due largely to the fact that agricultural products are being brought into the United States and sold at an abnormally low price. There can be no doubt that the price at which the foreigner sells here his wool and wheat and sugar, for example, is less in some cases and hardly more in others than the cost of production. That is a dumping process. Against that process, so far as manufactured articles are concerned, the House attempted to guard when it passed the antidumping bill in 1919, without a roll call. Against that process, as I understand, England is guarding by legislation recently or about to be enacted. Why we should not guard against it in respect to agricultural products is something that I can not understand.

The House bill has been amended, but not so as to destroy the principle involved or materially affect it. Having voted for the House bill, I would be in an indefensible position if I declined to vote for the bill as amended. Therefore, I have no hesitation in supporting the bill as it now stands. It is a temporary emergency measure limited to 10 months, and it is essentially an antidumping measure. It does not commit those who support it to any permanent tariff doctrine or policy. I know, of course, that some of those who support it do so with the hope and expectation that it will not become a law. There never was a time when the agricultural interests were not the playground of cold-blooded politicians. But I am casting my vote with the hope that the bill will go through both Houses and will receive the approval of the President. [Applause.]

If that happens, I do not predict that much immediate relief would be afforded. There will be little and perhaps in the course of a few weeks no advance of prices, but, because the inflow of foreign products would be checked, the American market would be saved from further demoralization and kept open for American producers. Thus it would afford some prospective relief to the agricultural interests. [Applause.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What particular product does the gentleman refer to as coming into this country?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Sugar has been coming into this country for some time, and according to the best information I have obtained—and I have endeavored to obtain reliable information—sugar has been sold for less than the cost of production in Cuba. I understand the same thing is true of wool, wheat, and other of the products covered by the bill.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD].

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I agree with my friend from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] that the agricultural industry is in a serious situation, but I do not agree with him that this bill is the remedy. I want to repeat here, my friends, that the remedy is not a prohibitory tariff on wheat and other farm products, but the remedy is an outlet and a market for our surplus products. There can be no question about that. If there is one thing in a tariff discussion that Democrats and Republicans agree upon it is that a tariff does no good to the producers of a product if that product is exported to foreign countries in great quantities. We all agree upon that. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, my friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], would not disagree to that statement. He could not afford to do it. That very question was investigated in 1911 by a distinguished committee of the United States Senate. And here is what they say about farm products and the tariff on farm products. They mention barley, corn, rye, oats, wheat, cattle, and hogs:

> The groups of articles which have shown the greatest advance—the products of the forests and the products of the farm—are those for which there has been practically no change in tariff during the past 10 years.
> That the tariff is not the cause of the present advance is conclusively shown by the fact that the greatest advance has been made in commodities which are usually produced in sufficient quantities to furnish a large surplus to other countries.

In other words, according to this report made by a Republican committee of the Senate in 1911, the tariff on farm products does not benefit the farmers because the products—wheat, corn, and cotton—are exported in great quantities, hence the price is fixed by the world price.

Now, who made that report, my friends? Senator LODGE, Senator Gallinger, Senator McCUMBER, Senator SMOOT, Senator Crawford, Republicans; Senator Clarke, one of the ablest men that ever served in the United States Senate, a Democrat from Arkansas; Senator Johnston of Alabama; and Senator SMITH of South Carolina. That being true, my friends, what is the situation? They talk about a prohibitive tariff on wheat. Why, are we helping the wheat farmers of this country? It is impossible to do it, and I will tell you why. We imported last year 35,000,000 bushels of wheat, and we exported 218,000,000 bushels. Mr. McCoy, an expert in the Treasury Department and one of the greatest in America, says that it is a prohibitive tariff and will drive Canadian wheat into the Liverpool market, which will bear down the price of the American wheat in the world's market.

We have a prohibitive duty on flour. The farmers of this country do not produce flour. The millers produce flour. Ah, my friends, when you put 20 per cent ad valorem on flour you will raise the price of bread to the consumers of the country in the interest of the millers on the Canadian border, and you know it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I will, but I have but little time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would like to know where the gentleman finds the quotation from Mr. McCoy that this is prohibitive.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I had a telephone from him a little while ago.

Mr. LONGWORTH. He sent in an estimate that it will raise $150,000,000 revenue.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I am talking about wheat and flour; it is prohibitive on those.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the gentleman's remarks apply to the entire bill.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I do not think so. If so, I did not intend them to. Now, gentlemen, what does this mean? It means that you will raise the price of bread to the consumers of this country without benefiting the wheat farmer in the least. Why, you are a set of highwaymen to do any such thing as that. It is outrageous, if you please. This is a stick-up bill and nothing else. The ordinary highwayman in this country would not do it. I saw where a man was robbed in New York the other day, and the robber gave the man robbed enough money to get to the hotel and to buy his breakfast. But you people say to the consumers of this country you will pay this tariff graft to the millers of the country or you will starve. It is all the way through the bill.

You talk about a prohibitive tariff on another food product—beans—2,000,000 bushels imported and 1,750,000 bushels exported. And yet you say the Chinese are dumping the product in this country.

I was surprised at my friend from Virginia when he said that he feared the dumping of farm products. Who would buy them? The farmers are broke and the manufacturers have shut down. If you expect the laborers of the country to pay higher prices, where do you expect they will get the money? Four millions of them walking the streets to-day, and yet you expect to raise the price of bread to them.

Now, take the sugar proposition. Every person in this country consumes annually 90 pounds of sugar. Under this tariff they will pay 2 cents a pound, for all admit that it will raise the price to the extent of the tariff. That is $1.80 per head in every State in this Union. In my State we have 2,000,000 people, and that means $3,600,000 that my people must pay, and only half of it goes into the Treasury of the United States. One million eight hundred thousand dollars goes into the pockets of the beet-sugar growers, the cane-sugar growers, and the sugar refineries. I say it is unfair to the consumers of the United States to compel every State in this Union to take this money out of the pocket of one man and put it into the pocket of another, to take money from one man who has earned it and give it to men who have not earned it—as this measure does.

The wool proposition is the same, absolutely. You say to the people who have to wear woolen clothes in this country we will fix a tariff on wool higher than the Payne-Aldrich law, and then at the next session of Congress the wool manufacturers will write a tariff rate on woolen goods, and we will contribute several hundred million dollars to the woolgrowers, the wool manufacturers, and make the 105,000,000 consumers, who must have woolen clothing, contribute to that extent. It is not fair; it is not just. I can not for the life of me see how any Democrat can vote for this bill. I do not believe real Democrats want to support the bill.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that woolen goods are taxed.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I understand. Gentlemen, the farmers of this country do not produce frozen meat. They produce hogs and cattle and sheep, but the packers produce frozen meat. They have packing establishments in Argentina and Brazil. They will ship frozen beef and frozen mutton, and this tariff will raise the price to the extent of the tariff, 2 cents a pound, on the product, and when shipped into this country the consumers of meat in this country will have to pay that price.

The farmers will not be benefited, because the packers buy their products. The farmers have but one purchaser—the packers of the country. The packers fix the price of the farmers' cattle, hogs, and sheep, and they will also fix the price of meat products by adding the tariff. They will add the tariff to it, and the consuming centers of the country, which must have meat, will put up the money, which goes into the pockets not only of the Treasury but into the pockets of the packers' trust of the country. You say in this bill that the consumers of meat must pay this tariff graft or starve.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, a word in conclusion to my Democratic friends. You should not vote for this bill. The Democratic Party will cease to exist, and it ought to die, when it embarks on a legislative policy of taxing all the people for the benefit of a few of the people, a taxation policy which enriches the few at the expense of the many, which every protective tariff measure does. You can not hope to compete with our Republican friends for the support of the great combinations of wealth in this country. We must appeal, as we have always appealed, to the manhood and womanhood of America to support our party because it is pledged to secure equal rights and privileges to all men and to resist all legislative schemes which seek to give undue advantage to any man or class of men over the rest of the people of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, our Democratic colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee do not seem to be able to agree very well. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], in his speech made recently, claimed that wheat in Winnipeg was higher in price than at Minneapolis, and that it was folly to put any tariff on at all, because the price in Canada for wheat was higher than in the United States. Then his colleague on the committee, my good friend [Mr. OLDFIELD], has just told us that the tariff proposed for wheat is going to be prohibitive, and he thinks it is a scandalous thing to put a prohibitive tariff on wheat against Canada. I think these gentlemen, who belong to our Ways and Means Committee, ought to get together and talk things over before they attempt to enlighten this House. Again, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], also says that a tariff on Canadian wheat will raise the price, and we have just listened to a long argument from the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD], in which he says that it will not raise the price, that it is an absolutely silly proposition to think it will raise the price, since he claims we export wheat.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY rose.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I can not yield.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. But I did not say the tariff on wheat would raise the price of wheat.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The gentleman took a lot of time to tell how short the supply of wheat was in the United States, and if I understood him correctly he claimed that we had even used up 80,000,000 bushels of what he calls our reserves of wheat. Of course if that were true, it could not mean anything else than that the price of wheat would be raised in the United States.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Undoubtedly that is true.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I am perfectly willing to admit that it will raise the price of wheat. That is why we ask for a duty in this bill. We would not come in here to ask to have duties placed on wheat if it were not going to do us any good, and I am very glad to say, and I am very glad to know, that most of the Members of this House are willing that the farmer should have a fair price for wheat—a price sufficient to cover his cost of production plus a reasonable profit. I am aware that there are some short-sighted and selfish people who believe they should have protective duties on the manufactured stuff which they sell and oppose a protective duty on the agricultural products which they buy. These people are fond of criticizing the farmers and telling them how to run their business. To these critics I would say: Quit kicking the cow or let go of the teats.

What we need to-day in the United States more than anything else is to restore the purchasing power of the farmers of the country. The ordinary farmer purchases more stuff than the ordinary consumer in the city.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, when you consider that one-third of the population is engaged in farming, and that their purchases have been estimated to be greater than those of the ordinary city consumer on account of the fact that they buy so much machinery and so many things that are needed in connection with their business, you can readily see what it means to destroy, as has been done practically, the purchasing power of the farmers of the country. When you restore the price of wheat, when you restore the price of live stock, when you restore the price of other things produced on the farms of the United States you will see this country prosperous again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has again expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14461) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes.

OSAGE INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 4039) to amend section 3 of the act of Congress of June 28, 1906, entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes," together with the report thereon, be withdrawn and referred back to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that the time is in the control of the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Illinois. If there is no objection, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York to make this request.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have no objection. It will not be taken out of the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not be taken out of the time. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 4039 and the report be withdrawn and referred back to the committee on Indian Affairs. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EMERGENCY TARIFF LEGISLATION.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois kindly use the remainder of his time now?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 17 minutes.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have been somewhat at a loss to ascertain the exact place which this bill occupies in the legislative program of the majority party for this session of Congress. This was first heralded as a farmers' emergency tariff bill. I judge it was drafted within probably 30 minutes, a period of time corresponding to the spirit of the emergency alleged. I say this in view of the many errors, mistakes, erudities, and other deformities of various kinds which occur in almost every paragraph and section of the bill. That fact was well attested by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], who floundered here for some five minutes in trying to explain to the House technical phases as the cause of the exclusion of hides, which was finally left in a still more involved situation than it was when he commenced. The same fact was later attested by the plain utterance of my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman was one of the conferees. I think the gentleman understands very well that the reason hides and leather went out is because the bill in the Senate was in such a state with reference to those items that necessarily everyone agreed they should go out.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. They went out, in my opinion, for the same reason that the stand-pat majority threw them out of the Payne tariff bill and for the same reason that they will be thrown out of the new Republican bill to be written next summer.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, the gentleman does not mean to state that.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The gentleman from Michigan has stated the other side. Mr. Speaker, this was heralded as an emergency proposition, and while seeming haste was exhibited in its drafting and passage through the House it has been lingering and slumbering and sojourning at different stages for more than a month at this time. It went to conference a week ago, and yet the conferees have consumed a week practically before it gets back to the House, although it took probably only 30 minutes to draft the entire bill in the beginning. If this were an emergency bill, why the occasion for any delay on the part of those having it in charge? The truth seems to be that a major portion of the press of the country, irrespective of party, has condemned this bill as being unscientific, uneconomic, and not calculated to render any real relief to the farmers or to any other class of business in this country, but rather injury to each.

What happened next? The press, I notice, on many occasions have stated that the majority party had declined to pass a budget bill at this session because the President would veto it if passed. Notwithstanding the fact that the President has indirectly said that he would veto the pending tariff bill if sent to him and has stated in his veto message that he would approve a budget bill if sent to him the majority now propose to withhold the budget legislation from him and to pass up to him this tariff monstrosity, which is still heralded as an emergency proposition, and we now find time to consume two hours here in the consideration, in the belated consideration, of this measure after they know that the bill may die as a pocket veto, and after they know it is probably too late for Congress to have an opportunity to pass the bill over the veto of the President. The majority now consume the time of the House and the time of the Senate, I say, notwithstanding we have this budget legislation, notwithstanding the great uproar a short time ago to repeal all war legislation——

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I have not the time just now.

Mr. FOCHT. Just a second, because I would like to know——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Notwithstanding the pledges and promises to repeal war legislation and to pass appropriations for public highways, to consider packers' legislation, and other meritorious measures pressing for consideration, this bill, which they have allowed to slumber for more than a month, although of a pretended emergency nature, is brought in to displace in the House and Senate all these important measures. I, of course, do not accuse the majority of bad faith, but I do believe that all the facts and circumstances indicating bad faith in the introduction and the handling of this bill would, if it were a crime, convict a man of a criminal offense before almost any jury in the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, the truth is, in my candid opinion, that this bill has done more to discredit the mental integrity of Congress in the eyes of intelligent and sound conservative business people all over this country than any other measure that has come in here within many a year. My friend from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] discredits the bill practically in his speech because he takes pains at the outset to announce that he will not be bound by any of these rate precedents which the bill establishes, although he must know that this bill is brought in here simply to whet the appetites of those who are expected to organize the tariff forces preparatory to general high-tariff legislation a few months later, and this will be pointed to as a precedent as to its rates and classifications, and Members will be held to their position now taken. This is the entering wedge. The next bill will contain these or the Payne rates as a minimum and they will build to them if certain influences prevail. Now, Mr. Speaker, I conceive the situation even from the standpoint of a protectionist is that the country will be facing an entirely new set of conditions in certain important respects under the operation of the next system of high protective tariff in this country.

In the first place we have $15,000,000,000 due us from Europe. In the second place we are producing more than we ever produced before of foodstuffs, agricultural products, raw materials, and manufactured goods. We are shipping and selling more than $8,000,000,000 of these surpluses to all the countries of the world; it is recognized by the ablest tax authorities that 17 per cent of our manufactures are exported and sold abroad, and it is said, in that connection, that the last 20 per cent of a business dominates the success of that business and fixes its prosperity. By the same rule the export of 17 per cent of these products to which I have referred are the key to our domestic prosperity. And yet this bill is urged here. Why, a doctor might just as well use the laying on of hands to a fresh wound as a suitable medical treatment as for Congress to bring in this tariff measure as a remedy for the existing conditions. The price of farm products has slumped; yes, they have slumped in almost half the world while the other half is starving for them. The prices of raw materials, foodstuffs, and manufactured articles have slumped; yes, they have slumped elsewhere as they have here, all as a result of the war's effects, and that presents the exact problem that confronts us to-day, and that is how to find a market at reasonable prices for this $8,000,000,000 of surplus, and you can not find that market simply by obstructing the small scattering amounts of imports that are coming in here in the form of the different commodities referred to in this bill. The problem is to get our surplus commodities of this class out of the country into a good market where they are so greatly needed, and I shall read presently a statement of the imports for each of these articles which shows that there is nothing resembling an emergency so far as damaging imports are concerned.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question before he begins?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. If the gentleman will be very brief.

Mr. FOCHT. Just a question. According to the gentleman's process of reasoning it is apparent that he is going to disregard the 85 or 90 per cent of products at home in order to find a cheap market for that 10 per cent, scouring the earth for selling 10 per cent to cheap nations while leaving the larger——

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I can not yield further; the gentleman wholly misunderstands the economic situation.

Mr. FOCHT. Oh, no.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Unless you are able to export your existing surpluses you will not have any real domestic prosperity. This condition is the real trouble at this time. Now, the principal trouble with the markets for our products abroad is the exchange situation, and that does not raise a practical tariff question. Some gentlemen have said that other nations have been enacting tariffs to deal with that. I notice some of them have enacted a more arbitrary piece of legislation in the nature of a licensing law, because a 50 per cent tariff would be required to meet the exchange situation this week, and it might have to be 200 per cent next week. Under such a condition a tariff is wholly inadequate and a licensing method would be the only remedy to deal with that.

Now, just as soon as the people of this Nation can help those of other countries to establish credits and restore the exchange situation, which will enable them to take and to pay for our surplus products, then you will see real prosperity come back to this country, and you will not see it come back in suitable measure before that time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention just briefly to the fact that this is a pretended emergency measure, and yet this Nation is practically on an importing basis for wheat at this time. My friends in the wheat belt will find that if they would leave off the tariff against Canada and let the Canadian and the American wheat meet in the English market, as it does, we would have constant stability of prices, and that is the only means by which we will have stability of market prices in wheat in this country. You put a little tariff on it and you will have fluctuations constantly, you will have artificial conditions, and the farmer will lose more than he can gain from any kind of tariff.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I am sorry that I have not the time. I wish I could. Please do not think me discourteous.

Figures as to wheat were given you by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD]. Now, take beans. Beans are a product raised principally in California and Michigan. They are put in here as an emergency item. And yet for December we only imported 38,610 bushels, valued at $112,000, while we exported 52,684 bushels, at a value of $260,000. We raised about 9,000,000 bushels of beans last year and imported 2,000,000 bushels, and our domestic consumption prior to the war was 11,000,000 bushels. So the bean situation has adjusted itself. Yet that is put in here, I repeat, as one of the policies of this emergency measure.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman state from what figures he is reading?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. From the official reports of the Department of Commerce.

Now, take potatoes. There were 321,000 bushels imported in December, for $308,000, while we exported 541,000 bushels, for $815,000, and a corresponding amount of imports and exports for the entire year of 1920. This is another so-called emergency item that has prompted the introduction of this bill.

Take onions; 46,000 bushels were imported in December, for $50,000, and 54,000 bushels exported, for $77,000. Imports and exports for the entire year were in similar proportion. That is another pressing emergency item that is brought in here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], my friend who has just spoken, is ordinarily not inclined to make unfounded statements. But, Mr. Speaker, these are prohibition days, and when the gentleman from Tennessee, after the members of his party over on the other side of the Capitol have made a six weeks' filibuster against this bill, comes in here and charges us with bad faith and endeavoring to delay the passage of this bill, there are a large number of people who would like to know where he gets his stock of nervine.

Mr. Speaker, if there is anything that I do regret, it is that this bill can be treated with a pocket veto. If the President should veto it, and this bill comes back to the House, the gentleman from Tennessee knows what would happen. The merits of this bill are such that sufficient from his own side would give us the numbers to pass it over the presidential veto.

Mr. Speaker, on the occasion when this bill was before the House, and when it was passed originally, I stated that the agricultural interests of this country had lost in the depreciation of the value of their crops for 1920 below that of 1919 the staggering total of $5,000,000,000. Only a few weeks have elapsed since that bill was passed, and yet the most expert statisticians in the country add another billion to that amount and estimate the total loss at $6,000,000,000.

Gentlemen on the other side say that this is no emergency. They may treat this matter as a mere jest and a joke. If this is not an emergency, I do not know what could make one. The situation is something that is simply unparalleled and utterly unprecedented in the history of this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, some gentlemen have said that this bill would not raise prices to the consumer—even gentlemen on the other side. I agree with them. That is a part of their argument that I will accept. If all of this tariff of 35 cents a bushel were added to the price of wheat—and even the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] says it will not be—it would not cost the consumer more than an infinitesimal fraction of a cent upon a loaf of bread. This bill is not intended to raise prices to the consumer. The purpose is to stop this ruinous process of going down, down, down of agricultural products until the farmer of the country is utterly ruined.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield? You say the intention is not to raise prices to the consumer. I can not get it through my mind how you are going to raise the price of what the farmer receives for his product unless you raise the price to the consumer also.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can not furnish the gentleman ears. I said it was to stop this unprecedented decline that is going on in the price of food products.

Mr. FOCHT. And is it not also to protect our own market against the products of Canada and Argentina?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly. Our own farmers are entitled to our own market. This bill in its nature is an antidumping bill; that is what it is. And as an antidumping bill, to protect the farmers of this country, I call upon the gentlemen on the Republican side and the gentlemen on the Democratic side to support it with equal consistency. The Underwood bill, put through by the gentlemen on the other side, under which we are now working, had an antidumping clause in it.

We propose to put an antidumping clause in any bill that we put through. This bill is merely in effect an antidumping bill. During the progress of the recent war, by reason of the interruption of transportation facilities, supplies accumulated to an extraordinary extent in some countries. Frozen mutton piled up not merely by the millions of pounds, but by the hundreds of millions of pounds in Australia and New Zealand. Wool accumulated not merely by millions of pounds, but by hundreds of millions of pounds in Australia and Argentina. Beef accumulated in the same manner. Wheat piled up in Australia, and at the close of the conflict here was the only place where they could find the cold cash on a gold basis, and with the exchange in their favor the foreigner proceeded to dump all this great product upon us and deprive the American farmer of the American market. The result, as I stated, is this utterly unparalleled and unprecedented decline in the value of farm products, thus crushing the farmer under the weight of foreign competition.

Oh, gentlemen say there is not any emergency and that this is class legislation. I would like to take some of them out to the farming regions where they can visualize the situation for themselves. I would like to take them out to the great sheep-raising ranges where sheep were mortgaged for not more than one-third of their value, and where the owners, indebted to banks, are asking the bankers to cancel debts due them by taking over the mortgaged property. I would like to show them the accumulations of the wool producers, with 60,000,000 pounds of wool stored up which they can not sell. I would like to take them out among the wheat growers of the Northwest, aid for whom is contained in the bill brought over from the Senate at this time. I would like to show them the conditions in Nebraska, where farmers have burned corn for fuel and where more corn would be burned if it were not for the sentiment against it. Yet gentlemen say there is no emergency here and that it will not benefit the farmer!

Who knows best and who is likely to know best about this? The farmer himself wants this bill passed and insists upon it, and gentlemen who do not vote for it and who live in farming regions will hear from them when this bill is passed through this House.

Now, some gentlemen on this side say that the farmer is no worse off than some others. What situation in any other branch of business approaches that of the farmer? You can go down South among the cotton fields and find field after field standing there, with the bolls of cotton yet upon them, not picked because there would not be enough resulting from the work of picking to pay for the labor of bringing it to the gin. You can go out even in my country, in rich, fertile Iowa, the garden of the universe, and find fields of corn standing there. Why? Because the tenant can not realize enough from them to pay his rent and has gone away and left everything for the landlord.

Do gentlemen on this side think that farmers in that condition are able to buy manufactured goods? Do they think that is the best way to build up a market for manufactured products, by leaving the farmer in this situation? This must all begin with the farmer. It is true that men walk the streets, idle, in the manufacturing districts. Why? Because the farmer can not buy. That is the reason. Put him in a condition to buy, give the consumer employment, and he will no longer occupy that position. Why, my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] said the other day that he spoke for the consumer. But if the consumer has the power to buy, instead of walking the streets without any wages, will he not be put in a far better position than he is in now, and will not the factories once more begin to turn their wheels when the farmer is able to resume his old position as the best customer the manufacturer ever had? No, this is not class legislation. It is for the benefit of the whole country.

One statement has been made with reference to this bill that, perhaps, deserves attention. While it is hardly necessary that I should contradict it, because anyone who reads it must know that it is not correct, yet I think I should not pass it by at this time. I saw in some of the papers that appeared in the East the statement that there was no compensation for the manufacturer for the wool duty that is contained in this bill. That statement is not correct. The compensating duty is there, and while it is not equalized in all respects as I would like to see it done if we were making a complete bill, yet it is more in some articles than the manufacturers are likely to get when a complete bill is introduced and passed in this House.

My friend from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] said that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] admitted that these rates are wrong. The gentleman from Ohio did nothing of the kind. He admitted that he would not favor some of the rates in this emergency bill for a complete and permanent tariff bill. If my friend from Tennessee, who is usually so well informed on most subjects, is unable to see the difference between making the rates for a temporary and emergency tariff bill and a complete and permanent tariff bill, then I recommend that he give a little further study to the tariff. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. All time has expired. The previous question has been ordered. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of agreeing to the conference report will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 205, nays 128, answered "present" 2, not voting 93, as follows:

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I voted nay, but I am paired with the gentleman from California, Mr. KAHN, and wish to withdraw that vote and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. FORDNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15935. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the sundry civil appropriation bill, H. R. 15422.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up the sundry civil appropriation bill and moves that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. GOOD, Mr. MAGEE, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 15543, the legislative bill.

The Clerk read the conference report as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15543) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 25, 26, 31, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 47, 56, 57, 70, 78, 79, 93, 94, 96, 103, 105, 109, and 110.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 27, 28, 32, 33, 35, 36, 45, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 55, 60, 61, 62, 64, 65, 67, 68, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 77, 89, 90, 91, 92, 97, 100, 101, 102, 104, 106, 107, 108, and 111, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$87,800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$275,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Section of surety bonds: Clerks—1 of class 3, 1 of class 2, 2 of class 1, 1, $1,000; assistant messenger; in all, $7,120."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Pierce accounting machine, $255,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended for the installation of machines until the Director of the War Risk Bureau certifies to the Secretary of the Treasury that said machines are working satisfactorily."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Carson City (Nev.) Mint: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, chief clerk, and cashier, $1,800.

"For services of workman and other employees, $1,500.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, $600."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agreed to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 81: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 81, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the matter inserted by said amendment after the word "northwest," in line 5; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 83: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "36"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 84: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendement as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "64"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 85: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendement as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "31"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 86: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 86, and agree to the same with an amendement as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "one $720"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "three"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 88: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 88, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$310,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments of the Senate numbered 29, 30, 34, 37, 38, 46, 58, 59, 63, 76, 80, 82, 95, 98, 99, 112, 113, and 114.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15543) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On Nos. 1 to 21, inclusive, relating to the Senate: Provides for a messenger at $1,000, in lieu of a telegrapher at $1,500 and a page at $600, in the office of the Vice President; restores the salary of a file clerk and an assistant journal clerk at $2,500 each, stricken out by the Senate, and strikes out the language, inserted by the Senate, requiring other clerks to perform the duties of the file clerk and assistant journal clerk; strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, two clerks at $2,220 each, one clerk at $2,100, one clerk at $1,800, and two clerks at $1,600 each, and provides for a clerk at $1,740 in lieu thereof; strikes out the name of an employee in the document room and provides for a clerk at $1,440, instead of an assistant at that salary; provides for an additional messenger at $1,800 and one at $1,440 in the office of the Sergeant at Arms, and increases the pay of a laborer from $840 to $900. Increases the following appropriations for contingent expenses, as proposed by the Senate: Maintenance of motor vehicles from $7,000 to $10,000, expenses of inquiries and investigations from $25,000 to $100,000, reporting proceedings of the Senate from $30,000 to $40,000. Reduces the appropriation for folding speeches from $10,000 to $5,000, and appropriates $2 000, instead of $1,500, as proposed by the House and $2,500 as proposed by the Senate, for fuel.

On Nos. 22, 23, and 24, relating to the Capitol police: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, 14 privates at $1,050 each and 10 privates at $840 each.

On No. 25: Strikes out the increase of $3,000 proposed by the Senate in the Speaker's salary.

On No. 26: Strikes out the increase of $10,000 proposed by the Senate in the appropriation for the Legislative Reference Service in the Library of Congress.

On Nos. 27 and 28: Provides for a book cleaner at $720 in the office of the Superintendent of the Library Building.

On No. 31: Strikes out the increase of $3,000 proposed by the Senate in the compensation of the Vice President.

On Nos. 32 and 33, relating to the office of the President of the United States: Makes the appropriation for miscellaneous expenses available for special services and increases the amount from $30,000 to $36,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 35 and 36, relating to the Civil Service Commission: Inserts authority for the employment of one person at $3,000 under the appropriation for temporary employees, and provides, as proposed by the Senate, that the appropriation for rent shall not be expended if space can be assigned in other Government buildings.

On Nos. 39 to 44, inclusive, relating to the State Department: Appropriates $275,000, instead of $250,000, as proposed by the House, and $300,000, as proposed by the Senate, for temporary employees; strikes out the appropriations, inserted by the Senate, for passport bureaus at New York, San Francisco, Seattle, and Key West; and strikes out the appropriation of $15,000, inserted by the Senate, to provide a fireproof receptacle for the Declaration of Independence and other valuable papers.

On No. 45: Makes a correction in the text of the title of the appropriation for the Arlington Building.

On Nos. 47 to 53, inclusive, relating to the Division of Appointments in the Treasury Department: Places the Section of Surety Bonds under the Division of Appointments, as proposed by the House; reduces the clerical force for the division proper, as proposed by the Senate; and inserts under the Division of Appointments the force proposed by the Senate for the Section of Surety Bonds, modified so as to eliminate the appropriation of $2,250 for a chief of the section.

On Nos. 54 to 57, inclusive, relating to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance: Inserts the appropriation of $255,000 proposed by the Senate for the Pierce accounting machine, modified so as to provide that no part of the appropriation shall be expended for installation of the machine until it has been demonstrated to work satisfactorily; and strikes out the language, inserted by the Senate, relative to soliciting the reinstatement of lapsed insurance.

On No. 114: Authorizing the sale to the city of Chicago for street purposes the interest of the United States to certain land in that city.

WILL R. WOOD,
EDWARD H. WASON,
T. U. SISSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word of explanation of the conference report. The Senate added 114 amendments to this bill. The House has receded from 59; it has receded and agreed to 14 with amendments; the Senate receded from 83 amendments; and 18 are brought back to the House.

The bill as it passed the House carried $109,781,488.75. The Senate added for farm loan bonds $200,000,000. The Senate added for other items, $702,380.

The items to which the House has agreed added $760,480 to the bill as it passed the House, and other amendments to which the House has agreed reduced the total of bill as passed by the House $674,940, making a net addition to the bill as passed the House of $85,530 as the agreement has been effected thus far. The Senate has receded from items amounting to $139,050.

The Senate receded from increases from $12,000 to $15,000 in salaries of Vice President and the Speaker. For temporary employees in the State Department the House carried $250,000 and the Senate carried $300,000, and the conferees agreed on $275,000.

The following passport bureaus went out: New York, $15,620; San Francisco, $7,500; Seattle, $7,500; Key West, $3,500.

The Bureau of War Risk item of $255,000 for Pierce accounting machines is included in the bill.

The appropriation for collecting income and profits taxes is reduced from $30,000,000 to $29,600,000, and the House conferees have agreed to the reduction.

The Deadwood Assay Office and the Carson Mint are restored to the bill.

The salary of the Assistant Secretary of War is reduced from $10,000 to $5,000.

The Quartermaster General's fund for temporary employees is increased from $250,000 to $543,140. The Army bill carries a provision to prevent him from duplicating the field force which this appropriation provides for.

I desire to state in passing that this increase was made for the purpose of bringing to Washington the clerical force now engaged by the Quartermaster General in different parts of the country, so it would reduce the overhead, and, in consequence, reduce the number of employees. It is estimated that it will result in a saving of more than $200,000 in the clerical force alone.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. What reduction in the number of employees is there between this bill as it now is and as it passed the House?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is very slight.

Mr. BRIGGS. I understood the gentleman to say when the bill was before the House that the reduction was something like 11,000 or 12,000 employees?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Approximately 11,000.

Mr. BRIGGS. Under the Senate amendment, has that been increased or decreased?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It has been increased slightly, but I do not think more than 100.

Mr. MACGREGOR. There were 36,000 employees in the Quartermaster's Department; does the order recently issued reduce the number by 11,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I was talking about the total net reduction in the city of Washington. There are not 26,000 in the Quartermaster's Department; there is not that number in the War Department altogether taken care of in this bill.

Mr. MACGREGOR. There were 36,000 employees in the Quartermaster's Department, as I understand.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know how many there are throughout the United States, but a large proportion of the salaries of clerks not employed in the city of Washington is carried in the Army bill and not carried in this bill at all.

Mr. ROUSE. How many employees connected with the Quartermaster General's office are outside of Washington and are to be brought back?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think in the neighborhood of 200.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana if amendment 67, which cuts the salary of the Assistant Secretary of War from $10,000 as provided in the House bill to $5,000, has been agreed upon by the conferees of the House and the Senate?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It has, and the House has agreed to the Senate amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE. Were the conferees advised of the law providing for a salary of $10,000 for the Assistant Secretary of War?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The House conferees were advised of it and the Senate conferees were likewise advised of it, and it was discussed. All the conferees were cognizant of the fact that in the Army bill it provided that the Assistant Secretary of War would be paid $10,000. There was a difference of opinion among the conferees as to whether it was contemplated when the salary was fixed that the law with reference to building up the Army would be what it is now or whether it would be an Army of 500,000 or 300,000. They took into consideration the fact that the salary was increased about the close of the war and that there was a great deal more necessity then for a $10,000 man than there is now.

There is this thing, too, that confronted the conferees: The Assistant Secretary of the Navy, whose duties correspond with those of the Assistant Secretary of War, is receiving but $5,000 a year, and we felt that the disparity in these two salaries would cause some discussion and perhaps a great amount of dissention. The conferees on the part of the House finally receded and concurred in the amendment adopted by the Senate.

Mr. McKENZIE. That being true, we are foreclosed from getting any action on this particular amendment unless the whole conference report so far as it has been agreed upon is voted down.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is correct.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield to me just a moment? I want to call his attention to the fact that when the Military Affairs Committee enacted the reorganization bill, one of the great questions that was discussed and considered at that time was the question of the Assistant Secretary of War, or properly, a minister of munitions, and his duties, because one of the things that has been a constant matter of friction, so far as the Army has been concerned, is the interference of staff officers in the procurement of supplies for our Military Establishment.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That same interference is going on now, is it not?

Mr. McKENZIE. I understand that it is. The law has not been observed, but I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana—and I hope gentlemen at the other end of this Capitol will take notice of the fact—that we provided in that law that the Assistant Secretary of War should have charge of the procurement of all supplies and matériel, and the officers in the Military Establishment who have charge of the buying for their various departments should function up through the Assistant Secretary of War, and thence to the Secretary, rather than through the General Staff. That has not been observed, but we hope in the future that it will be.

Placing all of those duties upon this officer, we realized, as the gentleman must realize and as every other man in the House must realize, that in order to get a man of caliber to fill a position of that kind we must pay him a decent salary. For that reason we abolished the Second and Third Assistant Secretaries of War and provided that the First Assistant should receive a salary of $10,000 a year, because, if he is the right kind of man, he will save this Government hundreds of thousands of dollars; and I must say, with all due respect to my good friend from Indiana, that I am surprised—I am really surprised—that a thing of this kind could occur and go right on through the conference without any objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand the gentleman to say that some assistant to a Cabinet officer would save the Government hundreds of millions of dollars?

Mr. McKENZIE. I said hundreds of thousands of dollars. I said it, and I mean it. I am sure he can do it.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I understand the statutory salary is $10,000 for the Assistant Secretary of War?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. And we make an appropriation of $5,000?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Then, he has a ground for legal claim against the Government for $5,000 more?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is no doubt about that. Congress, however, can exercise the right to pay the claim or not, as it sees fit.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. That is, it will repudiate one-half the salary. Is that the policy we are working upon under this conference report?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is not the policy; and I say to the gentleman from Nebraska and the gentleman from Illinois they should understand that it is not the purpose of these conferees to repudiate anybody's law, but we do expect to be a little mindful of the money in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. But you do not save anything. You have a legal liability of $5,000 while you pay only one-half of the statutory salary.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman from Nebraska may have an opportunity of voting upon that, and if that condition arises, then he can take his share of the responsibility.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I am willing to do that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not if the Assistant Secretary of War takes the money, because this law provides that appropriations are in full compensation. If he takes the $5,000, then he has no claim.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. What has been the policy of the Committee on Appropriations with reference to this appropriation since the Army bill went into effect? It has only been to appropriate $5,000, has it not?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. I will state to the gentleman that I think the Members of this House should know that while it is true that in the Army bill, which the gentleman from Illinois has called attention to, it was provided that the Assistant Secretary of War should become a real, live, acting officer, yet that condition has not been brought about. The fact of the business is that he is a mere clerk, even under the law enacted by this Congress, and it will be sufficient time to pay a salary commensurate with the office when the performance of duty is commensurate with the duties prescribed in the statute.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand it, the Senate has receded from amendment No. 40, which provided for a passport bureau in New York City.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is correct.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to know what argument prevailed upon the committee to cut that out and at the same time reestablish a mint office at Carson City?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman asks a double question. Which one does he want answered first?

Mr. SNELL. Either one.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. With reference to the passport proposition, there is no warrant of law authorizing a branch passport office at San Francisco and none authorizing a branch passport office at New York City.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate that.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They were created during the war as a matter of convenience, and they resulted in a very great convenience at that time. There is a misapprehension with reference to what these branch offices do. They do not issue any original passports, except in very exceptional cases.

Mr. SNELL. Is the gentleman correct in that statement?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Except in most extraordinarily exceptional cases—emergency cases.

Mr. SNELL. I understood the office issued 41,000 in New York City last year.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know how many they issued, but they must have authority, either by telephone or telegram, from the home office before that can be done. During the war when there was a very great amount of congestion in these centers, and when there was a great amount of ignorance among our people as to the necessity of having a passport, and great numbers of people were going to New York and San Francisco, believing that no passports were necessary, in such cases these exceptional passports were issued.

Before we got into this war there were very few passports used. You did not have to have a passport to go to Europe or to go to South America, and I understand there were very few places where you were required to have a passport, but in order to protect ourselves during the war period nobody could get out of this country or get into it without a passport. Now that the war is over, except technically, and we are getting back to normalcy again, this passport business is also easing up.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand we have already extended that act two years.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Now, the people of this country know the countries where passports are required, and there they have to have a passport to get out. Here is another thing. I will admit it is convenient to New York City——

Mr. SNELL. Is it not a convenience to the people throughout the country?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; it is convenient in San Francisco, and it would be a convenience in Savannah, and it would be a convenience in Galveston.

Mr. SNELL. But those places will not compare with New York City where 90 per cent of all sailings start from. You can not compare Savannah with New York City as a port.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the gentleman will let me proceed, here is what happened. This thing was inaugurated without any warrant of law.

Mr. SNELL. I agree to that.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Now, they add three more of these assistant passport offices, and there are applications for more than 20 more. Where is it going to end?

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me——

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is the gentleman aware that under this arrangement you have perfected that the people living on the Pacific coast who go abroad must put in their application for a passport at least two weeks in advance, where under the existing regulations they can go to San Francisco and make their application and sail on the next boat, if there is a boat sailing the next day?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is absolutely a mistake. The only chance that a person can have to sail the next day would be by convincing the Department of State in Washington of a most extraordinary necessity. This is what happened, and I know all about it. We had the Secretary of State before us, and he ought to know, that except in these extraordinary emergencies that the purpose served by these branch offices is of assisting a gentleman or lady who wished a passport in preparing their application, and it is sent through that office to Washington, just the same as you would have to send it, and your people would be no better off than before, except you might have the assistance of some one in San Francisco or New York to help you prepare the application.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Except you get your passport in case of an emergency within 24 hours.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The same authority in the Department of State can take care of these emergency cases just as well without a passport division as with a passport division by just simply designating somebody for these cases.

Mr. SNELL. Who will they designate?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I apprehend they will designate somebody locally to attend to this.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. They have a provision appropriating to pay the salary.

Mr. SNELL. I am interested in taking care of these emergency cases and in economy, too.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. This is one of these many war necessities that came into being that is now trying to survive as a peace-time convenience.

Mr. SABATH. Was not that made permanent by the act passed yesterday?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield for another question? I am interested in economy, as the gentleman is, but is it not true that instead of this saving money that it actually loses money to the Government for the reason that when you get a passport in New York or San Francisco you pay the dollar and it goes into the Federal Treasury, and in every other place where they do not have a passport office the dollar paid goes into the hands of the county clerk or commissioner or whoever has charge of these applications for passports? It is as a matter of fact not a saving of money to the Government, but you are losing money.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is where you are taking it out of one pocket and putting it in the other and thinking you are effecting an economy. I admit it is true this fee is paid to the Government instead of paying it to a county clerk or somebody in the court. I do not know exactly, but I have been informed that during the last year the amount of the receipts from the New York office was somewhere in the neighborhood of $20,000.

Mr. PARKER. Four hundred thousand dollars, $10 fee for 41,000.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Oh, the $10 apiece, that is what you had to pay in order to get the passport?

Mr. PARKER. That makes $400,000 by my calculations.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. But the $1 fee was for preparing the passport, and it only amounts to about $40,000. The business is declining and it is apt to decline as the intelligence of the people——

Mr. SNELL. As I understand it, it is in the interest of economy and regardless of the convenience of the people that that was done?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is it.

Mr. SNELL. Answering the second part of my question, why could not the Carson City mint be cut out for the same reason?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am of the opinion that it could be. I am of the opinion that all those institutions could be cut out without any great or material damage, and the assay offices as well. Now, these gentlemen who live in the West—and we had two of them on the conference committee on the other side—say it is not the amount of the ore that actually goes through these offices that should measure their importance, but that it is a very great encouragement to the men who are prospecting in these several localities to find out whether or not they have actually got pay dirt, and rather than to send it away to some other place where they can get an assay, by getting the Government assay it gives their ore a value it otherwise would not have and saves it from being depreciated by people who are trying to depreciate ores as they are trying to depreciate everything else. And they pointed out the fact that now, above all other times, they were trying to encourage the development of mines in the West, and for a year or two at least this ought to be continued. I was willing to give the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. PARKER. Is it not true that before the war there was no law allowing the establishment of a passport bureau in New York?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is not any now.

Mr. PARKER. I grant you that. Why was it?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I tried to explain it to you as well as I could. We established that and a whole lot of other things not authorized by law for the purpose of convenience.

Mr. PARKER. Before the war anybody who went abroad went without a passport. Everybody now has to have a passport. You would make it appear that the majority of people going abroad from New York live in New York. In fact, not 10 per cent of those who live in New York want these passports.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Every Member of Congress every week in his life has some correspondence with somebody back home with reference to getting a passport.

Mr. PARKER. Does not the same emergency exist now as existed when it was first put into effect, for the convenience of the whole public?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It does not, for the reason that a whole lot of people who were going on the assumption that they did not need a passport landed in New York. Now they know they have got to have a passport, and they get it before they leave home.

Mr. PARKER. A lot of them do not do it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Because they know that this bureau is now here.

Mr. PARKER. I know that there were a thousand they made out in New York from requests over the telephone.

Mr. CLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I want to read a telegram I have just received from the Merchants' Association of New York.

It says:

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 25, 1921.

Hon. WILLIAM E. CLEARY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Learn House conference legislative, executive, and judiciary appropriation bill do not concur with Senate provision for retaining New York passport office. Matter vital importance all travelers from New York State and entire country. Appreciate it if you will see conference, urging inclusion Senate appropriation $20,000 for this object.

THE MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have had some of those, too.

Now, in addition to what I have already stated, I desire to state that the surveyor office at Deadwood was restored.

The Capitol police force was reduced by 14 privates at $1,050 and 10 privates at $840 each. The appropriation for promoting commerce in the Far East was increased from $100,000 to $150,000. The Division of Information, amounting to $19,340, was eliminated from the bill. We are bringing back these following items to the House for action:

Appropriating $200,000,000 for the purchase of bonds of the Federal Land Bank which, under the agreement entered into last night, goes over for determination until Tuesday. We increased the appropriation for prohibition enforcement from $7,100,000 to $7,500,000. We are appropriating $75,000 to fit up the new Navy Building to accommodate the Shipping Board. This item, it is estimated, will save $86,000 in rent and $45,000 in watch force. One hundred and seventy-five thousand square feet of space will be made available. There are also a number of items whereby we transfer trucks from the War Department to various specified other departments of the Government. The gentleman will remember that these were all, except one, in the bill in the House, and went out upon points of order raised at the time. They have been reinserted, and will be up for your consideration. Also, fixing the price of typewriters and providing for the transfer of machines from the War Department to the General Supply Committee. Also the bonus question. And also there is an item we brought here, because it was new legislation, put on by the other side, authorizing the sale of some land in the city of Chicago to the city of Chicago for street purposes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. BRIGGS. I discover in amendments Nos. 71 and 72 an appropriation for additional employees in the office of the Quartermaster General was raised from $250,000 to $543,000. Will the gentleman explain the necessity for that?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I explained that a while ago by stating that it was for the purpose of bringing the clerical force of the Quartermaster General from outside, so they could all be consolidated here, whereby it would reduce the necessity for as much supervision as is now required and where it would reduce the overhead expense of these several places where they are now and result in a net saving over what it is now costing the Government of over $200,000 a year.

Mr. BRIGGS. It does not increase the number of employees, but it centralizes them here in Washington?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It centralizes them and reduces them.

Mr. BRIGGS. It just stated "additional employees." I gathered from that that it was an increase in numbers.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. These outside clerks were carried before in the Army bill, and the estimated reduction by reason of this consolidation made by the Quartermaster General indicates that it will result in a saving to the Government of 239 employees in number and the net saving in money is estimated at $313,902.

Mr. BRIGGS. The bill now before us also carries the clerks' bonus again?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves the adoption of the conference report. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 29: Page 26, line 2, insert: "Provided, That within 30 days after the approval of this act the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to deliver to the Library of Congress, without payment therefor, one 1-ton truck."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that amendments No. 29, 30, 59, 80, and 95 may be voted on en bloc. All of these amendments are provisions requiring the War Department to furnish to various other departments trucks for the use of those respective departments, except that in one case it is an automobile for the use of one of the departments. I will further state that all of these amendments were in the bill when it was presented to the House and went out on points of order, except one, which is added, but which is exactly like the others.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the specified amendments be considered together. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendments No. 29, 30, 59, 80, and 95.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendments specified. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 34: Page 29, line 7, after the figures "$2,500" insert: "Provided, That the secretary of the Civil Service Commission shall be deemed an employee for the purposes of this act."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in amendment No. 34.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman just explain what that means; what is the purpose of that?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will state what that is. The secretary of the Civil Service Commission, Mr. Doyle, who has been connected with the Civil Service Commission ever since it was created, was designated as an officer and not an employee, and in consequence he could not receive the bonus, the salary being $2,500. The purpose of this amendment was to make it possible for him to receive it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the effect of this amendment be to provide that any future appointments to that position will be governed by civil-service rules?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it would not. He is only an employee for the purposes of this act. That is the only effect of it.

Mr. CONNALLY. You only intend the effect of this to be that for the purpose of receiving the $240 he would be considered an employee, so as to get the bonus?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is it, for the purposes of this act.

Mr. CONNALLY. How much does he get?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Two thousand five hundred dollars.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 37: Page 32, line 2, strike out "Counselor for the Department" and insert in lieu thereof "Undersecretary of State."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment 37.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, probably any objection to the motion to recede and concur will prove futile, but I desire to register here now, as I have done on prior occasions, my objection to legislation of this character upon an appropriation bill.

The majority side of this House has announced the doctrine that it does not propose to permit legislation on appropriation bills. This is purely a legislative proposition. Under the existing law this position is known as counselor for the Department of State. It has been known as such for a great many years. The Senate by this amendment proposes to change the designation to Undersecretary of State.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. The present title is not English enough, you know. We must have an Undersecretary of State.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the gentleman for contributing to this discussion. The only reason urged for changing the designation is that counselor does not comport with the nomenclature employed among foreign diplomatic services. If this country wants to maintain its own individuality, its own personality, we ought to disregard such flimsy and unsubstantive arguments. The prestige and the influence of this great Nation at foreign courts does not depend upon our catering to the customs of those courts; they do not depend upon so frail a thread as the mere social amenities observed by diplomats.

We shall attain a higher position by adhering to the traditions of this Nation and maintaining that democratic simplicity which distinguished Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson and John Jay and the other great diplomats of this country, who reflected honor upon it in its very inception. I insist that we can best preserve our national prestige abroad by pursuing the course which we have pursued heretofore. Why not let them bend their system to meet ours, rather than that we should, in obsequious deference to their practice, change the title which in the solemn statute law of this country is denominated "Counselor of State"? If we mean to adhere to the rule which forbids the Senate legislating on appropriation bills, we should refuse to concur in the Senate amendment, and let the Foreign Affairs Committee, if it so desires, bring in a bill changing the designation of this office. The law fixes the salary at $7,500 and the official can perform his functions under the title of counselor for the Department of State as acceptably as he can under that of Undersecretary of State.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman kindly explain what are the functions of this official? Are they legal?

Mr. CONNALLY. Not legal entirely. The position is really that of First Assistant Secretary of State.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. He is really not a counselor in the legal sense.

Mr. CONNALLY. He is a counselor, so far as diplomatic affairs are concerned.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I ask for a vote on the motion that the House recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The question is on receding and concurring in the Senate amendment.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Do not do that.

Mr. CONNALLY. I withdraw the point.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 38: Page 32, line 23, strike out the words "counselor of the department" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Undersecretary."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, this makes the title conform to that adopted in the preceding amendment.

I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 46: Page 40, line 5, insert:

"Provided further, That within 30 days after the approval of this act the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to transfer to the Secretary of the Treasury without payment therefor two light motor trucks for use of the General Supply Committee: Provided further, That typewriters and computing machines transferred to the General Supply Committee as surplus, where such machines have become unfit for further use, may, in the discretion of the Secretary or the Treasury, be issued to other Government departments and establishments at exchange prices quoted in the current general schedule of supplies, or sold commercially, provided the price obtained is in excess of the exchange prices.

"Repairs to typewriting machines (except bookkeeping and billing machines) in the Government service in the District of Columbia may be made at cost by the General Supply Committee, payment therefor to be effected by transfer and counter warrant, charging the proper appropriation and crediting the appropriation 'General Supply Committee, Transfer of Office Material, Supplies, and Equipment.'"

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the language just read is the exact language which was in the House bill, and all that which pertains to typewriters is now current law. The other, pertaining to bookkeeping machines, and so forth, is new law. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized from time to time during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1921 and 1922, respectively, to purchase at par and accrued interest, with any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, from any Federal land bank, farm loan bonds issued by such bank.

Such purchases shall not exceed the sum of $100,000,000 in either of such fiscal years, shall be made only upon the recommendation in writing of the Federal Farm Loan Board, and the bonds so purchased shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum.

Any Federal land bank may at any time purchase, at par and accrued interest, for the purpose of redemption or resale, any bonds so purchased from it and held in the Treasury.

The bonds of any Federal land bank purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury and held in the Treasury under the provisions of this act, three years from the date of purchase, shall upon 30 days' notice from the Secretary of the Treasury be redeemed or repurchased by such bank at par and accrued interest.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its disagreement, and under the agreement that was made last night I ask that the determination of this question be postponed until Tuesday.

Mr. SISSON. This is the amendment where we unanimously agreed to postpone it. I do not know that it is absolutely necessary, because the conferees would insist on bringing it back anyway. I think the record will have to show a disagreement to get it back. Of course, I would like to have the conferees agree.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have already entered the motion to insist upon the disagreement, and that the question be postponed until Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the House insist upon its disagreement and asks that the determination of the question be postponed until next Tuesday. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana that the determination of the question be postponed until next Tuesday?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Reserving the right to object, why is the request made?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There has been some talk about there being a decision handed down by the Supreme Court in regard to the constitutionality of the farm loan bank act by Monday, and that might have a good deal to do with this matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 66, line 21, strike out the figures "$7,100,000" and insert "$7,500,000."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to this amendment. This is the amendment which I told the gentlemen would be brought back for consideration, and I desire to state briefly what it is. The original item in the House bill carried $6,500,000 for the enforcement of the prohibition act. By an amendment offered on the floor during the consideration of the bill an addition of $600,000 was made, and at that time it was stated that that would be all that they needed. The Senate for some reason has added $400,000 more, making it $7,500,000. Your committee feels that the amount that we proposed originally was ample, and certainly the amount increased by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] making it $7,100,000 would be more than ample. This year they have $5,500,000 with a deficiency of $1,400,000, making a total of $6,900,000. That represents the cost for the current year and it does seem to me that $7,100,000 ought to be sufficient for this year if $6,900,000 was sufficient for the current year. While this Congress desires, and has repeatedly evinced the sentiment that the prohibition act should be enforced, there should be no more extravagance connected with the enforcement of this law than the enforcement of any other law, and because of the fact that this is a lot of new machinery, while of necessity there is friction, where of necessity there must be waste, until the thing can be reduced to a scientific and systematic operation, we ought not to load money on those charged with the responsibility of this thing simply because they can put a few men here and a few men there. We better go slow in this matter.

It appears to me that the people who have charge of the enforcement can best serve the cause they are attempting to serve by retrenching as much as possible and working within the means they have and see that they weed out here and there the inefficiency which they admit exists in every section of the country so that they can get a workable machine made up of trusty men upon whom they can rely and with that army of workers they can come to the Congress of the United States and get whatever means and money are necessary. It strikes me that during the period of formation of the organization we ought not to be so lavish with expenditures.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion. I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas offers a preferential motion that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TINCHER) there were 40 ayes and 42 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 210, nays 92, not voting 126, as follows:
